Optimists on America

The members of Associated Producers predict for the new year tremendous prosperity in all lines of business, including the motion picture theatres, despite necessary readjustment of industry and standards of living.

Those who would seek at this time to "talk a depression into being" are fools and the enemies of this, the greatest and most prosperous country the world has ever known.

"OUTSIDE THE LAW"

Directed by TOD BROWNING
Universal will bet its bottom dollar that here is a Chapter-play which will fascinate and thrill any kind of an audience anywhere in the land—big house or little-neighborhood or bright lights. The reason lies in its beautiful heroine, the most daring of all the Screen’s beautiful women—and in the freshness of its tremendously varied scenes and thrills. Knowing, however, that no words can tell you as much as your eyes Universal asks you to get a date from your Universal Exchange within the week for a showing of some of the episodes of “THE DIAMOND QUEEN”. You’ll see a serial that is better than fifty percent of the so-called “features” that you pay big money for.

She saw him first in the heat and glare of a veritable Inferno.

There was the boom and clatter of a Modern Vulcan's forging and shaping the steel that enables the race to live and move in comfort.

To her he seemed only one of the gnomes of darkness that flitted strangely here and there.

Then came a snapping of two rough men's nerves. She saw him a demon unleashed. He fought like a being possessed and battered his opponent into helplessness.

His cause was just—but she didn't know.

This was the creature who asked her to marry him.

The mill scene had filled her with a lasting horror. She could remember the millman with nothing but repugnance.

And yet she married him—

Bill Matthews was every inch a man. His early environment had only affected the surface of his being.

More wonderful than the transformation of baser metals, which he invented to win his fortune, was the inventor's own transformation in the magic crucible of love.

THE DICE OF DESTINY were cast and David Marsh took one of the fork roads. Would his fate have been different had he taken another road? This great question of life itself is the theme of "Roads of Destiny," O. Henry's big story which made Channing Pollock's big play and now Gold-

JUST AS IN "MADAME X" Pauline

Mack Sennett's
"A Small Town Idol"
[A Plot Glorified With Girls]

It takes a youth, removes him, innocent, but in disgrace, from his small town home; it sets him adrift in a great city, gives him a job in a motion picture studio and a leading woman to adore; it releases the tongue of slander at home and breaks the heart of his trusting country girl; it restores him as a mighty screen hero of a Western melodrama and composes all his difficulties in a romance of tender beauty. All this is garlanded with a thousand girls of typical Sennett beauty perfections. Such, in faint, inadequate synopsis, is this latest six-reel achievement from the hands of the maker of "Mickey."

The Comedy King has come by his title by virtue of the default of competitors. There is only one Mack Sennett. Beginning with the first rays of light projected through Biograph film and continuing in the van of picture making, Mack Sennett is a figure unique. It isn't accurate to say that "he grew up with the business;" the business grew up with him, and now in the full stature of a matured perfection, he appears for the first time as a producer distributing through his own releasing agency—Associated Producers. Signalizing this epochal event is a production, "A SMALL TOWN IDOL," that is the last word—the ultimate expression—of a genius for devising drama in pictures, riotous comedy in motion and realized visions of extravagant beauty.

"THE LOVE LIGHT"

Written and Directed by Frances Marion
Photographed by Charles Rosher and Henry Cronjager

The untold millions who love Mary Pickford for all the sweetness and happiness that she has brought into their lives will hail "The Love Light" as a great picture—perhaps the greatest of all the wonderful Mary Pickford productions.

Miss Pickford has never screened so beautifully, nor has her exquisite talent ever been offered greater scope.

The story, now rich in humor and now tense in its hold on the heart, could stand alone as a splendid offering, but with the beauty and art of Mary Pickford it should prove an overwhelming box-office triumph.

NOTE
This is not the usual "blind" advertisement written without the opportunity of an actual view of the picture. The man who wrote this advertisement went to California for the specific purpose of pre-viewing "The Love Light" and this is a sincere expression of his opinion.

We thought we realized the incomparable popularity and box-office value of Douglas Fairbanks; we felt that his new production “The Mark of Zorro” was indeed a great picture but we were unprepared for the amazing demonstrations that are taking place wherever the picture is being shown.

For example, in one week’s showing, the Capitol Theatre, New York, established a world’s record with “The Mark of Zorro” by playing to 94,501 admissions and a box-office total of $48,103.43.

"THE LURE OF CROONING WATER"

From the Novel by Marion Hill
Featuring Ivy Duke and Guy Newall

It's a story of the stage, of midnight suppers and nerve-racking life, and of green fields and the charm of the country; of an actress who under the spell of rural surroundings falls in love with a married man, only to repel him when her persistence breaks down his reserve.
Unconsciously the Woman has fallen in love with an Ideal—with a Man who not only utterly disregards her but who seemingly is insensible of proved feminine charms, one whose indifference she interprets as devotion to honor, home and fidelity.

The infatuation lasts only so long as he is cold to her, so long as he is not like other men she has known. When he yields he becomes in her eyes common clay, the halo that surrounds him "fades into thin air," and her faulty outlook is instantly righted.

So she sends him back to the Greater Woman, his fellow toiler, the Mother: "He is your man; I haven't harmed him."

MR. EXHIBITOR:

What's your idea of the picture you are just leaning forward to grab?

It's the picture with the ready-made audience, isn't it? The picture that will bring a line before the box office without forcing a publicity campaign. It's the picture with a NAME backed by a favorite director and popular stars.

First time you think of it, ask your wife or your mother if she has read "Lavender and Old Lace." Ask her too, if she's going to see the photoplay of that famous story when it appears locally. Millions of women—and men too—have laughed and wept with the white haired sweetheart of Myrtle Reed’s wonderful love epic. The book went into forty editions. You'll find it is known and loved in nearly every home in America.—There's your audience!

Renco gave "Lavender and Old Lace" to a director of national reputation, Lloyd Ingraham. His name is enough. Renco also gave this picture a real "all star" cast—Marguerite Snow, Seena Owen, Victor Potel, Louis Bennison, James Corrigan and Lillian Elliott. You know them and the photoplay throngs know them.

"Lavender and Old Lace" means packed houses. It's one of the big pictures of the year.

in the Comedy Special “Number, Please?”

The first of the Lloyd Comedy Specials was issued only twelve months ago.

Within the year it has become evident both to exhibitors and the public that Lloyd has become the leading screen comedian of the world, and Hal Roach the greatest of all comedy directors and producers.

Furthermore, and this is very important, these two have shown that pure comedy is possible without vulgarity; and that true art in acting, direction and story is better than crude slapstick.

It would be fine if it were possible to show you the hundreds of enthusiastic exhibitor letters,—the multitude of highly laudatory newspaper and magazine clippings on the subject of these comedies.

It is impossible, but they exist. They agree that the Lloyd Special Comedies are the best on the market today.

Her Best Picture

"Trying to gain an entrance into the Strand Theater Sunday night was dangerous business simply because everyone else was trying to do the same thing. "Dangerous Business," is Constance Talmadge's latest and best picture. There are many moments of suspense when you wonder what the young man intends to go to before he marries the girl. John Emerson and Anita Loos have made the story and it is extremely well done, with all of their well-known humor and nice, human titles.

"Miss Talmadge appears to be more fascinating than ever before, but maybe this is only because one forgets between pictures just how fascinating she can be. We wish to state right here that if any other ingenue did what Miss Talmadge does we should hate her, because she would probably be acting, and Constance never is. What we mean to say is, you don't think she is." — New York Tribune.

It's Lots of Fun

"Lots of fun in another Talmadge-Emerson-Loos combination. A spicy and well produced bit of amusement. Good laughs, it is really funny, and you laugh in spite of yourself. The titles provide humor in themselves. Constance Talmadge seems to enjoy every minute of the picture and she flirts her way through the five reels as though she were really having a good time. Kenneth Harlan is the handsome hero and a mighty likable one. Perhaps the cutest baby yet seen in pictures. You will do the right thing to get hold of this at your first opportunity. It's a good, live comedy offering. The star, the titles and nearly all the situations are fun makers." — W. J. Wid's.

Snap, Pep and Ginger

"Constance Talmadge is at the Strand this week which is equivalent to saying that snap, pep and ginger are prevailing characteristics of this week's program. Constance Talmadge has a delicate and graceful fashion of doing the very things which, in less skilled hands, could be very offensive. As it is, she has her audience all ready to hold up their hands in holy horror and then she glides away skillfully and amusingly until she has sufficient time to get them all on edge again and then she starts all over again. John Emerson and Anita Loos, those past masters in agile comedy, have a lot to do with it. They have provided for her such light, breezy material."

"Speaking of new clothes, Miss Talmadge sports the usual array and she shakes a wicked bob cut as the worldly heroine. William Neill has directed the picture deftly. Joseph M. Schenck presents it, which is the same thing as saying that nothing has been spared in the production of the picture for the good taste and skill that can make it." — New York Morning Telegraph.

Her Maddest Play

"Madcap Constance is at her maddest in 'Dangerous Business.' Miss Talmadge evidently enjoyed every minute of the making of this picture, for she has never flirted so devastatingly or raged so tempestuously. The story is amusing." — New York Daily News.

Her Best Performance

"An engrossing picture. It breezes along nicely, never delves into the psychology of the situation, abounds in good acting and pleasing sets. The titles are amusing. Miss Talmadge has never looked prettier nor given a prettier performance. Her costumes are especially tasteful. She is a genius at grasping and exploiting those little nothings that make up a young girl's brain, and is easily the best overgrown flapper on the screen." — New York Mail.

Prettier Than Ever

"This feature playoff at the Strand theatre furnishes an unusual opportunity for Miss Talmadge to display her talent, and she makes the best of it. Miss Talmadge looks prettier and more robust than ever, and Kenneth Harlan plays the conquering hero masterfully." — New York Telegram.

Makes Folks Happy

"Constance Talmadge at the Strand this week has another of those madcap roles with which she makes other folks and her bank roll happy. It is 'Dangerous Business,' a production by John Emerson and Anita Loos, with all the shrewd turns and pleasing captions with which these producers make the movie world go round. Miss Talmadge handles her moments delicately and feelingly, running up a high score with her eyes. With the concerted efforts of George Fawcett, Matilda Brundage, Jack Raymond and Kenneth Harlan, it is a diverting comedy." — New York Sun.

"Dangerous Business is a John Emerson-Anita Loos production, and that means it is written for the screen by those who know how. Besides its unqualified merits of construction, it has the vigor and originality so often lacking in adaptations, and it presents one thing the public will be grateful for—Real Man.

"Constance Talmadge is most fortunate in appearing where she has bright opportunity, that is in comedy able to stand on its own legs. She enters into the mood of the play with such spirit and swift intelligence that she does the best acting of her career. In the high situations her face is a veritable revelation of conflicting emotions and ideas. It is her great interpretation which tops off and completely finishes a comedy which held a vast audience at the Strand theatre under a spell of fascination. She is ably seconded by Kenneth Harlan as the Real Man, with a support in general above reproach. 'Dangerous Business' is a top-notch performance of its class." — Moving Picture World.

Ideal Comedy-Drama

"This may be called an ideal comedy-drama for Constance Talmadge, since it exploits her to the limit with her unique methods of impersonation. By developing it in this manner, John Emerson and Anita Loos have not erred, for in nearly every scene Miss Talmadge holds the stage. Some of the incident is rich in humor and considerable spice. There is quite a tingle under the skin. The final shot will appeal to feminine audiences, since it shows the young married couple giving the baby a bath. Its last two reels carry a healthy punch. Kenneth Harlan is good as the youth who found his manhood in the war. The titles are Miss Loos' best style. The Strand, New York, seemed to enjoy it immensely and the audience chuckled approvingly." — Motion Picture News.

Romp Through Part

"Constance Talmadge plays 'Dangerous Business' at the Strand this week with unusual ease and nonchalance. She romps through her part." — New York Globe.

Thrills, Gasps, Giggles

"There are several gasps, many giggles and a few thrills." — New York American.

Let's Make It a Real Fight
By MARTIN J. QUIGLEY

MR. WILLIAM A. BRADY was at a rather serious disadvantage in replying to the recent vicious verbal assault upon the industry and its people which occurred in Washington. Mr. Brady, intending his reply for dissemination through the public prints, had to forego a type of language which would more properly fit the circumstances than that customarily used in polite controversy.

Similarly, we are at a disadvantage in attempting to make consistent comment on the situation, being estopped by the knowledge that many of our subscribers have cultivated the practice of removing this journal from their place of business to their homes for more leisurely perusal, thereby admitting it to the gaze of the feminine and adolescent members of the family.

This attack of that group of vicious meddlers, flanked by the activities of their bigoted co-workers in the cause of Blue Sunday, subjects the patience and the forbearance of this industry to an unreasonable test. A determined and unswerving counter-attack now becomes the proper business of this industry.

Regardless of any extraneous issues that may be dragged in, this fact must be kept in mind: The real basis of this entire Blue Sunday agitation is to either club the motion picture industry into the relinquishment of some of its power into the hands of the assaulters or, failing to do this, to so harass and annoy the industry that its sphere and influence shall be cut down.

The persons behind this Blue Sunday agitation are professional manipulators of public opinion. Their business is to so tamper with public opinion that they will be enabled to fasten their own opinions of custom and conduct upon the people. No agency that might help them in their work of meddling has long remained untouched. And it is no wonder that the motion picture which they feel could be made the greatest agency of intolerance should escape their notice.

The position the motion picture occupies in the lives and the hearts of the American public is no longer a matter of argument or controversy. And this industry would be false to the public that has made it if it did not rise up and smite these political tricksters who masquerade as Christian reformers but whose methods are as base and as pagan as those of a marauding head hunter.

NOTHING but the redbloodedness of this industry stands in the way of these sinister forces getting a grip upon the motion picture in order that they may poison the minds of the public with their propaganda of bigotry and intolerance or, failing in this, getting in a position where they can dictate to the public as to just when and where it may view motion pictures. If only this latter position is attained at this time it doubtless would promptly be used as a stepping stone to another of greater authority over the destiny of motion pictures and the industry.

Upon the exhibitor who is in immediate, daily touch with the public falls the burden of the necessary defense. Upon other occasions it has been said that the exhibitor has been slow to awake to action. Let there be no opportunity of repeating this charge on this matter. It is a fight of the entire industry but it can be won only through the messages told to the public upon the screens of the country.

The industry has been viciously attacked. A dastardly effort has been made to blacken its reputation and saddle it with smothering legislation.

Let's make it a real fight.

Oklahoma Operators Return to Theatres After Year's Strike
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

OKMULGEE, OKLA., Dec. 21.—The strike of motion picture operators and stage hands which has been effective since January 1, 1920, has been settled. All Okmulgee houses now are employing union hands.

The local union of operators and stage hands has been reorganized. A new charter has been granted under the name of Local No. 41, International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Motion Picture Operators. The refusal of theatre owners to deal with the union, headed by Mr. Fred Stoppelman, business agent of the old union, was partial cause for the strike.

The new wage scale provides for $10 a week for operators and stage hands; $35 for electricians; $35 for grips; $35 for flyers; $25 for property men, with overtime paid at the rate of $35 cents on the basis of an eight hour day.

Ford Aiding Fight on the Blue Laws

Henry Ford has already completed plans for an aggressive fight against any blue Sunday legislation and the "paid job holding censorship of motion pictures in general."

This announcement was made simultaneously with a declaration that the Ford motion picture laboratory will always prepare and equip in every manner known to the motion picture industry, with the idea of enlarging his activities in motion pictures.

The two announcements were made in answer to a rumor which an eastern theatrical paper printed.

Declarations of Reformers Arise in Industry and Public

President Brady Bitterly Denounces Agitators—Legion Posts to Fight Blue Laws—Clergy Opposes Radical Movement

No reform movement directed at the motion picture industry which the national censorship fight two years ago has been so spontaneous or has aroused such vigorous opposition both in and out of the industry as the present blue law campaign.

Only a few weeks ago leaders of various reform organizations made public their intentions of seeking a return of the Puritanical Sunday, an official of one such society declaring that the final goal was the abolition of the motion picture theatre.

Many Developments Are Noted in Blue Campaign

Since that time developments have been many. They follow:

Lobby of the International Reform Bureau votes to rescue the motion picture industry from "the hands of the devil" and 500 un-Christian Jews and "to convert it into an instrument for propagation of the Bible."

Joint movement of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry against passage of blue law legislation.

Determination of the Jewish Sabbath Alliance of America to combat the blue law campaign.

Statement of President William A. Brady of the national association that "if these slanderers and Jew batters and Catholic haters are not silenced we propose a fight to a finish and with no quarter."

Statements Issued Are Contradictory

Issuance of contradictory statements by the reform people, some declaring that the campaign will be conducted and others stating that the blue laws are not a part of this year's program, "except educationally."

A declaration from the reformers that their congressional campaign would be halted for the return because of the opposition which it had developed.

Announcement that the reformers had $1,000,000 to spend within the next three years in seeking passage of puritanical laws.

Declaration of the Anti-Saloon League that it is not interested in the blue Sunday movement.

Creation of opposition to the reformers among clergymen, American Legion posts and newspapers public.

Launching of a campaign by the Knights of Columbus against bolshevism and "blueism."

Crafts Activities Are Denounced by Many

The action in Washington, D. C., of the lobby of the International Reform Bureau in voting to rescue the industry from "the hands of the devil and 500 un-Christian Jews" created, perhaps, the most vigorous opposition and brought forth many acrimonious statements from clergy, leaders in the industry, prominent Jews and many others. It was this action of the bureau, of which Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts is the superintendent, that prompted the heated retort of President Brady.

"The decision of the lobby maintained by the International Reform Bureau in Washington to remove what they are pleased to describe as 'the menace of the movies,' and the vote taken by that organization on Friday night to rescue the moving picture industry from the 'hands of the devil and 500 un-Christian Jews,' is a fit subject for laughter," declared the N. A. M. P. T. president, "and little more, did it not represent the latest and most blatant outpouring of Billingsgate from the small self-appointed guardian angels who have taken it upon themselves to endeavor to regulate and set to their own satisfaction the minds, morals and mode of life of this commonly considered free country."

"The statements of Dr. Crafts and the Rev. Edward E. Clark stand in a class by themselves as admirable examples of bigoted fanaticism run riot. And these self-styled reformers, whose Christian-like missions are nothing but pivotal profeering in morality, demonstrate conclusively the lengths to which they will go and the means to which they will stoop to accomplish their ends when they attempt, as they are now doing, to arouse race prejudice against the Jews."

Hot Retort Issued By President Brady

The Luna Company controls 20,000 in alterations and new equipment for the house. F. M. Kendall, director of preservation and music for the company, will be in charge of the house until it is ready for opening after which time a resident manager will be appointed.

The Nelson makes the sixth theatre under the management of the Luna Amusement Company which is capitalized at $400,000. The company now has under construction the 840-seat and spadeground ville and legitimate house to seat 2,000 persons, and cost approximately $250,000.

Geraghty Director Of Lasky's Studios
In Eastern State

Thomas C. Geraghty, has been appointed superintending director of eastern production activities of the Famous Players Company.

Geraghty will have general supervision over the scripts and direction of all Paramount pictures made in the east, holding the same position in the new studio that he now holds in Hollywood except specials, in the Lasky studio in Hollywood.

He is one of the best known scene setters in the profession. He became production editor of Paramount's eastern studio late in the summer and immediately put into effect several ideas looking to the establishment of a big permanent staff of trained continuity writers.

He recently adapted "Too Much Johnson" and "Burglar Proof" for Paramount and "Always Audacious," the successful picture starring Wallace Reid.

Crafts Now Seeking Cooperation of Jews

An example of the contradictory attitude of the reformers is the letter written to the Jewish Alliance by Dr. Crafts following the Washington meeting of the International. He declared to the officials of the organization that he desires their cooperation. He also said that so far as he was concerned he had no prejudice against the Jews.

That the clergy of the country are not all in favor of a closed Sunday is indicated in the statement by the Rev. Dr. William L. Sullivan of All Souls Unitarian church of New York that the reformers are the "Black Battalion; the clergies oppressive to the masses," against which human liberty must be on the watch.

Concerning the reformers, Pastor Elmer E. Franke, in an address at the Broadhurst theatre in New York, declared: "Why coop up in prison a man who has done no violence and let such men as these (the reformers) go free? They ought to take the place of Debs, and I am not Socialist either."

Opposition to the movement for a blue Sunday has aroused the ire of the Rev. Harry L. Bovly of the Lord's Day Alliance, one of the most radical of the reformation agencies. He declared that in the future he will make his plans in secret and announce them "in my own good time."

Grand Jury to Pass On Blue Resolutions

A group of resolutions have been presented to the grand jury at Rochester, Minn., asking that all amusement houses be closed there on Sunday "so that the people may have the pleasure of attending their respective places of worship."

The resolutions also ask for censorship of motion pictures.

That the blue law campaign is not as threatening as might be suspected is inferred in a statement made by A. S. Kirkpatrick, general manager and vice-president of Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation. He says:

"We are inclined to think that the prominence which is being given to the blue Sunday discussion is out of proportion with the importance of the matter. As we see it, the country is nervous and distraught over the enactment of prohibition and has the feeling that almost anything might be 'slipped over' without much trouble.

Such is not the case. There is a basis for the campaign against the use of liquor and the prohibition of newspapers, soft drinks and motion picture performances. Humorists and a few who are rabid against prohibition of alcoholics confuse the purposes of those who wished to remove something which was held injurious, with those who are attacking innocent amusements in a blind, bigoted way.

It is always to be remembered that such proposals as are made by law-making bodies before they can be made legal. Let none fear that the majority of our legislators will ever mistake such Sunday activities as the publication and sale of newspapers, the sale of soft drinks and the exhibition of motion pictures as things which are to morale and harmful to our civilization."

Pastor Is Bitter in Denunciation of Films

The Rev. Howard E. Clark, pastor of the Congregationalist church of Plainfield, N. J., was bitter in his denunciation of motion pictures in a talk at the International meeting.

"The is one of the leading industries today is the by-product of prohibition," he stated. "The degenerates and white slave drivers were driven by us from the back rooms of the saloons and they have taken refuge in the darkened movie theatre."

"The men who own the movies have $100,000,000 with which to corrupt men and women."

Before the meeting adjourned Dr. Crafts told of witnessing the performance in a projection picture theatre of a vampire. He said:

"That vampire woman seduced a banker. Later in the play she seduced two Washington congressmen before the play ended she had seduced a billionnaire."

"I would rather have my son stand at a bar and drink two glasses of beer than have him see that vampire woman."

"I may get over the effects of the beer in a week, but he could not forget that vampire woman until he was eighty years old."

An indication that the industry is awake to the menace of the reformers is the action taken by a joint committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and the national association. When agreements had been formulated, the committee of the national association. When agreements had been formulated, it was not until the joint meeting in New York during the week of December 13 that concerted action was decided upon. It was decided that the plans of the industry are has not been divulged.

Constructive Steps Taken By Industry to Fight Foes

Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and National Association Work Harmoniously on Internal Problems Affecting Relations

NEW YORK, Dec. 21.—The committees appointed by William A. Brady to represent the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and by Sydney S. Cohen to represent the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America met here last week and in a spirit of purposeful cooperation took constructive steps to present an united front against foes of the industry and to arrive at solutions of those internal problems affecting the relations between exhibitors, producers and distributors.

The first session was held at the Hotel Claridge on Tuesday, with Mr. Brady presiding. Before the committees got under way Herbert Hoover appeared and made a plea for the support of the motion picture industry in his efforts to raise a fund of $500,000 to save 500,000 starving children in Central Europe. A resolution was passed to give Mr. Hoover the aid he requested and committees were named to cooperate with him.

Harmony Exists Between Two Organizations

A resolution declaring the two organizations to be of harmonious purpose was adopted and following it committees of eleven were appointed by Sydney Cohen for the theatre owners, and William A. Brady for the national association, to confer on matters pertaining to both organizations. The committees appointed were:

"But where is the big dog?"

Not perfectly familiar did Louise Fazenda appear as she walked down the length of a Hotel Salle parlor towards a representative of the EXHIBITOR'S HERALD, during her recent visit to Chicago that the question came spontaneously to the lips of the caller. The screen association of this lively feminine filmmaker and the Great Dane, Teddy, compels the coupling of them always when the attention centers upon either. It would have seemed the most natural thing in the world to have greeted them together.

Teddy, however, was not included in this tour, which is taking his pal over the country on the first trip that has ever taken her more than half a hundred miles or so away from Los Angeles since she went there at the indifferent age of three months. That there will be no difference on this journey is assured. Keen for the last detail of the succession of interests that it is offering alert to its every enjoyment opportunity, frankly fascinated and delighted with all that has been seen and done so far on this trip and all that of it promises little is escaping her this time.

It is this natural freshness and frankness of youth, co mingled with an honest sensibility that most attracts in Louise Fazenda. Picture importance has not spoiled her. She affects no airs or boredom nor superiority. She does not seek to make a studied impression. She is wholly and delightfully herself— a girlish, confiding and companionable young person more interested in Christmas shopping than the horridly difference in prices between the Los Angeles and Chicago shops, the novelty of hotel life and the mysterious mazes of hotel elevators and corridors than in the exploitation of little face veil duplicating a worn one purchased in Los Angeles cost nearly twice as much in the Windy City. Picture talk was interpolated with bits of philosophy that showed a mind open and tolerant of the world and its people—big-mess rivals included.

She has no hesitancy in confessing that she first aspired to work in feature pictures and was a failure. Then some director, watching her in a role that had a comedy suggestion, hit upon the idea of putting her directly into comedy, and the right note was struck then and there. She was amusingly highly fun and expects to have the opportunity to produce it when she begins picture making for the Special Corporation. Dorothy fish's brand of comedy is Miss Fazenda's ambition. And Teddy, by the way, will go with her to the company with which she signed late this year.

MISS FAZENDA's affection of that characteristic "spit curl," the weird calico costumes with big buttons and the ridiculous tall hats with streamers, appears to be confined to the screen. She is a daintily groomed and costumed young person in reality, curly haired and blue eyes.

She was accompanied to Chicago by her mother. They spent several days here visiting the amusement and shopping. They left December 15 for Detroit, expecting to go for the Christmas holidays to Lafayette, Ind. Louise's birthplace, to visit relatives. They will visit other cities before returning in mid-January to California.

Miss Fazenda has signed with the Special Pictures Corporation to head her own company in a series of two-reel comedies, expected to be available in October, 1921.

Phenomenal Record Is Made by "Passion" at Capitol of New York
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, Dec 21—"Passion," the Associated First National attraction starring Pola Negri, established a phenomenal record at the Capitol theatre last week, according to a statement issued by the theatre management.

The receipts for the first six days had equaled the amount drawn by the previous record holding picture, "The Mark of Zorro," in seven days. It is understood that the receipts for the week ran close to $60,000.

Receipts for Sunday, December 12, the first day of showing, was $11,067. It is estimated that between 106,000 and 110,000 persons saw the picture during the week.

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Dec. 21—Walter D. Schaffer, manager of the Liberty theatre, 3627 Delmar boulevard, was fined $100 by Judge Mix, on a charge of violating the law which prohibits persons from standing in the aisles when all seats are filled.
Advertising Wisdom

Swift and certain attainment of a preeminent position in a competitive field is invariably the result of vision, initiative and a very fair measure of commonsense administration.

In the motion picture industry there is not a more graphic example of the swift and certain attainment of a preeminent position in its chosen field than that instanced by the Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., in the division of short subjects.

In perfect accord with the vision, initiative and commonsense administration upon which the splendid Educational organization has been built is the Educational’s plan, just announced, of confining its advertising to EXHIBITORS HERALD and one New York medium.

After a thoroughly intelligent and conscientious analysis of advertising media and circulation facts the executives of the Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., have entered into this arrangement which enables them through EXHIBITORS HERALD, supplemented by one other national medium, to cover the entire motion picture trade in the United States and Canada completely and at a minimum cost through the elimination of additional media of lesser reader’s interest and smaller distribution.

Educational is to be complimented upon this thoroughly constructive move which obtains for it an advertising schedule arrangement which assures a complete and thorough distribution of its advertisements among the exhibitors of the United States and Canada on a basis which effects a substantial saving which is of a very pertinent interest to Educational’s customers as well as to the company.

Educational has proved its right of leadership in the field of short subjects and in the plan just embraced it assumes an intelligent leadership in the important work of clarifying the facts relative to motion picture trade papers and circulations.

Industry to Aid in Raising $33,000,000 for Charity

M. P. T. O. A. and National Association Committees Promise Hoover to Carry Plea for Support of Movement to the Public

(New Year, Dec. 21.—Following the plea of Herbert Hoover, at the joint meeting of committees representing the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America at the Claridge hotel, for the support of the motion picture industry in raising a fund of $33,000,000 to save 3,500,000 starving children in Central Europe, committees were appointed by William A. Brady and Sydney S. Cohen to cooperate with Mr. Hoover in rendering the aid requested.

As a result of the meetings of these committees, the two organizations will undertake to raise $2,500,000 through the showing of specially made pictures incorporating "The Invisible Guest" idea as suggested by Mr. Hoover. These pictures have been made and are being shipped for showing in New York and nearby cities before Christmas. They carry a plea to the public for support of Mr. Hoover's movement.

Special Appeal to Be Made on January 29

The committee also designated January 26 as the day when the public will be asked to attend motion picture shows and help each exhibitor raise funds to feed whatever number of starving children is assigned to him as his quota. Producers and distributors will also contribute their quota to the general fund.

Mr. Hoover's speech in part follows:

"Knowing as I do the service the motion picture industry did during the war and has done since, I feel that I should ask for their co-operation again because I believe that this goes further than any individual—that it involves the national honor of the United States."

Many Children Saved

"Upwards of 15,000,000 children have been saved by American hands. In the winter of 1919 there were as many as 8,000,000 children in American charges and in the process of building up an organization that would meet that situation—four institutions in particular have created from 15,000 to 17,000 local institutions in Europe, and now represents 3,500,000 children.

Three million, five hundred thousand children in Central Europe will face starvation unless we can secure renewed help from the American public and those institutions must close their doors within sixty days.

Will Diminish Number

"It is a problem to take care of 3,500,000 children over the winter and this number should be diminished by one-half to two-thirds by next summer. "We, the one and only nation in the world, set ourselves out to save the lives of these children should carry it through."

The chapter in American history,

"We are not called upon to pay any American money out and use it for overseas expenses or waste. We have gone to as far as possible effort to reduce expenditures to a minimum. We require $33,000,000 to carry these children over until next harvest. Ten dollars contributed through the European Relief Council will save the life of one child.

Influence Is Great

"There is no influence that comes in contact with the public better than the motion picture industry. We need the co-operation of all the men in the country to help us organize that support. In such organizations, one man, a half dozen or thirty men cannot carry these things out themselves, they must appeal to a medium that can carry it through.

"I appeal to you gentlemen to take a certain number of these children as your wards and devise ways and means how they will be supported. Allocate to the different corporations in the industry some definite portion of this problem. I would suggest that this industry undertake to care for from 150,000 to 200,000 of the unfortunate children."

Larkin Will Direct

Pickford Publicity

Former Mayflower Official Also to Handle P. A. for Fairbanks

Mark Larkin, who for the last year has been director of publicity and advertising for Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, will go to the West Coast shortly after the first of the year to take active charge of publicity for Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks.

Former Pickford Employee

Up until the time Larkin assumed charge of Mayflower's press and advertising department, he was in the employ of Miss Pickford as her personal publicity representative.

The post of publicity director for these two stars is admitted to be one of the most important positions of its kind. Never before has the task of handling personal publicity for two stars of their magnitude been undertaken by one man, but because of his previous experience in the Pickford organization and his wide acquaintanceship in the Fourth Estate, Larkin is believed to be fully qualified to fill the place.

Salary Not Mentioned

No mention is made of the compensation he will receive, but it is understood that the salary is one of the largest ever paid for publicity work. Negotiations for the deal were made by Bennie Zeidman, manager of the Mary Pickford company, and Dennis F. O'Brien, representing Mr. Fairbanks.

"We regret very much to lose Mr. Larkin," said John W. McKay, general manager of Mayflower, "because we consider him the best man in his line in the business. It was because of his excellent record with Miss Pickford, during which he designed the famous Pickford Liberty Loan poster and was responsible for making Our Mary 'America's Honorary Ace' and 'Little Sister of the Navy' that he was engaged by Mayflower. While with our concern he continued his splendid work by putting over the national salesgirl beauty contest."

New Hampshire Demanding Reduction of Film Rentals

President C. H. Bean at Meeting Held in Boston

Appoints Grievance and Legislative Committees for Organization

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

BOSTON, MASS., Dec. 21.—Condemning “efforts being made to increase film rentals in the face of serious business depression,” the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Hampshire in convention here last week demanded “that a reduction of prices to more truly meet the changed conditions be made in order that the business may be sooner established on a staple basis.”

Other matters of importance to the general welfare of the exhibitor were discussed. The advance deposit question and uniform contracts in particular received the attention of those present.

Grievance and Legislative Committees Named

Two important committees—grievance and legislation—were appointed by President Charles H. Bean, of Franklin. The grievance committee includes Michael White, David Adams, A. M. Graves and A. L. Courtere. On the legislative committee are George Barrett, J. E. Charcoutere, A. H. Davis, D. J. Adams, A. M. Graves, C. C. Baldwin and John Eames.

Final decision on the question of educational reels was not made at the meeting. Following the reading of a letter from Sam Bullock, executive secretary of the Motion Picture Theater Owners of America, a committee was named to take the matter up with the national committee at a meeting here today.

Met With Committee

President Bean and Vice-President Charbonneau are here today to discuss the subject of educational reels with the national body. It is not indicated what action the exhibitors of New Hampshire will take in the matter.

More than twenty-five exhibitors attended last week’s meeting.

Vitagraph Head Wed To Miss Jean Paige

Miss Jean Paige, screen star, and Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company of America, were married at the home of the bride’s parents at Paris, Illinois. The wedding was an unobtrusive one, and immediately after the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Smith left for a two week’s trip, their itinerary not announced. Miss Paige accepted an offer from Vitagraph about three years ago to play in the O. Henry series. She was advanced to stardom about a year ago and selected as the star of “Black Beauty,” which will be offered to the public early in the coming year. Mr. Smith was one of the founders of the Vitagraph Company. He divides his time between the eastern and western studios of the company, and a short time ago purchased a home at Pasadena, California. He also maintains a summer home at Oyster Bay, Long Island.

Producers Trim Schedules to Obtain Higher Quality of Films

Method of "Supervised By" Is a Thing of Past With Independent Directors Centering Their Attention on One Picture at a Time

By JAMES D. WILLIAMS (Manager Associated First National Pictures, Inc.)

FROM thirty-five reels a week to eighteen reels a year is a far drop, but they are taking it.

That, to exhibitors, is the result of producer desire for independence, and this evolution of ideas, methods, and ambitions for personal accomplishment by the independent stars and directors reaching to every producing industry has a very important meaning to the independent theatre owner.

Where two years ago the trade commonly accepted statements that such and such centralized producing units would provide a total of from twenty-eight to thirty-five reels of film a week, we now find the majority of producers, stars and directors making plans for 1921 with an average output of eighteen reels a year.

This is probably the most drastic and complete change in production policy that the industry has ever witnessed in a single season. It opens to debate and prediction a score of vital and pursing-tint questions of what the result will be to exhibitors and to the producers themselves.

Production standards have reached the point where the method best known as "supervised by" is no longer safe and successful. It has been a frequent practice for directors and producers who have achieved individual success to try and extend their inherent genius simultaneously to the activities of two or three separate production units. As a consequence, the pictures made under this method of general supervision instead of specific, personal direction did not come up to the quality of those releases which had given the "supervisors" their reputations.

The ability to make the big, successful productions is not given to everyone any more than are the natural instincts that make for a successful and famous surgeon, or a big, popular writer, or a painter of note, the common possession of all the people at large who are members of these groups. Production output for next season and all seasons to come of the competent directors and producers will be limited by their respective personal capacities for creation as individuals, and not as supervisors with two, three or more assistant directors trying with but half success to put into their work the touch of genius possessed alone by the masters. The thing that makes a great surgeon is the genius which enables him to perform certain major operation better than anyone else.

And so it is with the successful producer of today and tomorrow. His production must be the result of his personal efforts and not the genius-lacking product of assistants working under his supervision.

As recently as two years ago a number of popular stars and directors whose pictures today are in greater demand than ever before, made and released an average of eight attractions a year.

Now we find their schedules of activity for 1921 literally cut in half with plans for three and not more than four pictures to be made in the coming twelve months. It means that each release from the capable, recognized production leaders will receive more time, more thought, more attention to detail, and far more care in the actual course of production, with the result that the finished attractions are bound to reveal an unprecedented degree of entertainment quality as the result of an amazing curtailment in productions volume with an equally amazing increase in production quality.

Mr. Joseph M. Scheuck will produce but four pictures next year in which Norma Talmadge will be starred, and but four pictures in which Constance Talmadge will be starred, in contrast to six productions from each of the girls during 1920.

Charles Ray will make not more than four pictures during 1921. Marshall Neilan is perhaps one of the greatest pre-cut-day exponents of limited volume and quality results. He has made but four pictures in 1920, and it is neither exaggeration nor inappropriate publicity to say that there is no director who as a producer giving his personal attention to every detail of every release for which he is responsible has forged ahead more rapidly or has risen to greater heights in the estimation of exhibitors and public than the man who directed "The River's End," "Don't Ever Marry," "Go and Get It," and "Dinty."

Mr. Louis B. Mayer is another producer who has depleted the folds of the six and eight year adherents and who is going to limit his productions for 1921 to not more than four pictures.

Central Labor Union
Of Indianapolis, Ind., Opposes Closed Sunday

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Dec. 21.—The Central Labor Union here has voted opposition to the closing of motion picture theatres on Sunday on the ground that Sunday amusements have become a necessity to working people.

A resolution was adopted declaring that although there is a movement "by certain organizations to demand legislation prohibiting motion picture shows on Sunday, these exhibitions do not interfere with anyone's opportunity to attend church; that Sunday amusements have become a necessity to the working people; that the prohibition of Sunday performances would deprive these people of their means of recreation and also that the closing of Sunday exhibitions would deprive many members of the motion picture operators' organization of their means of livelihood."

The resolution also states that the Sunday shows do not deprive machine operators of their hours of recreation.

The legislative committees of the Indiana State Federation of Labor and the Central Labor Union are requested to oppose any blue law legislation.

English Theatres Attentive to Comfort of All Patrons

Pioneer Motion Picture Man Returns to Chicago
After Vacation in Europe, Where He Also Made a Study of the Film Situation

Neither London nor Paris has a first-class motion picture theatre, according to Aaron Jones, member of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, who has returned to Chicago following a vacation abroad. While in Europe the pioneer theatrical man had occasion to observe the development there of the motion picture industry.

"In London a restriction has been placed on the building of theatres until the present housing condition has been rectified. However, English theatres and music halls never were conspicuous for their exterior beauty. You could pass them without knowing they existed, because they use no electric light display, and no billboard or newspaper advertising.

"Admission Prices Are Higher in England"

"In England the admission charged for motion pictures ranges from two to six shillings which equals 40 cents to $1.20 in American money. The cost to two years old, a condition caused by the booking agencies who have an estate at least a year in advance. Several booking sheets completely filled until the boys and girls, will report anyway."

"They are much more thoughtful of the comfort of patrons and every picture house in London has tea rooms where patrons may roll and sip tea when they tire of the screen, as long as they wish.

"Change Twice Weekly"

"Sir Oswald Stoll secured Hammerstein's theatre and is playing a picture policy changing his pictures twice a week. The theatre is known here as our Cambodia. A full week policy is unknown. Col. Levy is the first American to invade the London field of motion picture exhibition and he secured the Savoy Theatre in SE. Palace. The Allen Brothers, Canadians, have bid for the Empire. The Famous Players have secured the site upon which the old Tivoli stood and will build when the restrictions are removed.

"I ran up to Glasgow just to see how the Scotch took the pictures. I arrived there in the morning. While riding through my hotel I noticed long lines of people standing in the streets between the curb and the street of tracks waiting for admittance to motion picture theatres. The law will not permit them to stand upon the sidewalk. Glasgow has fifteen picture houses charging an admission fee of from two to four shillings, 40 cents to 80 cents in our money.

"Charge for Programs"

"Throughout England every theatre, including picture houses, charges for programs, the charge being equal to 6 cents. No matter how small the theatre the usher always expects a few pennies when he escorts you to your seat.

"The condition in France is about the same. Picture houses charge a smaller fee, four francs, equalling about 25 cents. Some of the bigger houses in Paris ask eight francs, or 50 cents. It is a universal system in France also to charge for programs and to expect tips. In France the prices charged for low-priced vaudeville is double what we ask in America. The legitimate houses get about the same prices that we do.

"Revues Are Starting"

"The Paris revues are starting. The Folies Bergere is a chorus of twenty girls, absolutely nude. And after the show or between the acts you can go up to the top floor and see an old-fashioned kook show. In the lobby an Hawaiian band plays soothing melodies. The Casino De Paris is as naked with its revue. I was startled to say the least. The night life of Paris is curbed at midnight. The war tax on tickets in France is collected by special person.

"Both in England and France 95 per cent of the motion pictures shown are made in America. Their greatest favorites are Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, although Chaplin is much in demand. Fatty Arbuckle was in Paris making a lobby of France and England when I left, and no doubt his pictures will take a jump in popularity. We are 25 years ahead of Europe in the making and exhibiting of motion pictures, although the Famous Players are now working two or three companies in their new London studios.

"I met William Morris in London and casually suggested he would be probably knighted by the British for his exploitation of Sir Edward Elgar, but Bill said that he would be satisfied with a single Saturday night in Paris."

"Southern Film Co. Opens Offices in Charleston, W. Va.

The Southern Film Exchange has opened offices in Charleston, W. Va., and will distribute high class state right attractions in the West Virginia territory.

General Manager E. R. Custer, formerly Paramount sales representative and manager of News and Cincinnati exchange for two years, will have executive charge of the company's activities. Spacious quarters have been obtained in the Kanawha County Bank building and a model exchange outfitted. Several productions have already been contracted for and a New York film row a flying visit to line up few more independent publications.

Pat R. Jones, owner of the Plaza theatre, Charleston, and Phil C. Jacks, prominent local capitalist, are associated in the enterprise."

Injunction Bars Use of Scenes in Weekly News Reels Cannot Exhibit Pictures Shot As Part of MacDonald Film

Following the public warning to news weeklies by Katherine MacDonald Corporation to the effect that the special air-plane pictures shot in Los Angeles for the star's forthcoming Associated First National attraction, "Stranger Than Fiction," must not be used by the news weeklies, an injunction has been obtained in the coast city against Pathe News, enjoining it from using or showing in any way the exclusive scenes, the shooting of which was arranged privately and carried out in the line of private business. Following this, a further injunction was obtained against International News.

One of the principal airplane scenes in "Stranger Than Fiction" is regarded as exceptional, as it shows an airplane making a start from atop an office building. The fact that much trouble, time and expense were put into the arrangements whereby "Stranger Than Fiction" could be the first motion picture to present a new advance in aviation makes the Katherine MacDonald Corporation especially desirous of protecting its rights. When it learned that the First National production was to have an unusual airplane feature, great interest was aroused, and the news weeklies had their camera men on the trail. They were warned of the infringement in paid advertising and news stories, and advised to keep off. Injunctions were then obtained against Pathe, and proceedings filed against all other companies who shot the MacDonald stunt. These injunctions are expected to be granted immediately.

“We Hope 1921 Will Be Rich In Awards for Exhibitors”

Greetings Extended to Theatre Men of U. S. by Richard Rowland, President of Metro Pictures.

By RICHARD A. ROWLAND

It gives us profound pleasure to extend to the exhibitors of the country our heartiest Christmas greetings. We are desirous that the bonds of personal friendship and business entente be strengthened more and more between us and the men who display our work of the screen to the public. We hope that the coming year will be rich with rewards for you, and that our part will do everything humanly possible to bring about such a consummation.

Metro welcomes this Yuletide with an optimism that is unbounded. It is well known that Metro as an organization is a confirmed optimist. It has always clung to the brightness of the future and even in darkest times has refrained from joining any chorus of pessimism. This faith, we believe, has carried us through the period of the war and is carrying us now through the era of reconstruction, with vision unimpaired and heart high and with an unshakable confidence that 1921 will be a year of unprecedented prosperity for everybody in our industry.

This year has seen the beginning of the fruition of some of our most important plans. We have successfully launched our campaign for bigger and better pictures and the quality of our output has convinced exhibitors and public alike that when we announced this intention there was more to our promise than idle words. Our supervising directors, our directors, literary staffs, stars and featured players have given of their best, and the days of the highest standard every Metro picture placed before the public. Theirs has been a conscientious labor of love.

It is noteworthy that even as Christmas comes, with its universal message of peace and good will among men, that the clouds of the mighty conflict are fading in the distance. Each day they seem more distant and therefore less threatening. And while we are experiencing an economic readjustment that all thinking men had anticipated, the people are meeting it with the spirit of cheerfulness and hope in the future that demonstrates to the world those qualities which have made us, as a nation, great.

Motion pictures, which for long people have been declining in their state of infamy, have progressed wonderfully, until now they hold the fullest confidence, respect and admiration of all classes of Americans, and the new art has risen to meet the niche that it has been destined to occupy.

The growth of the industry is reflected in a million ways; in the astonishing number of new theatres that are springing up throughout the length and breadth of the country, in communities large and small; in the public support that is so eagerly extended to all that is finest and most artistic in the way of better pictures; in the accession of more players of recognized talent and experience and in the steady influx to the ranks of filmdom of the foremost creative writers of the world, who with a reserve that is characteristic of them, had not at first joined the colors of the industry until the art should have proved itself worthy of their considered contributions.

As it looks to Metro, this is the best Christmas that we have ever had. And we are confident that exhibitors will discover it is the precursor of the best year that they have ever known—the coming year of 1921. Metro again wishes the season’s best to every theatre man everywhere.

Many Celebrities at Opening of Branford

Gov. Edwards Heads List of Notables Attending the Fabian Affair

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEWARK, N. J., Dec. 21.—The formal opening of Fabian’s Branford theatre, which has been under construction for the last two years, was held on Thursday evening, December 16. It was one of Newark’s biggest social affairs, with many state and theatrical notables present.

Governor Edwards of New Jersey and Mayor Gillen of Newark were among the personalities which filled the 1,000-seat house.

Opens With “Passion”

The Branford opened on Friday to the general public, playing First National’s “Passion,” which had its world premiere at Fabian’s Garden theatre, Paterson, N. J., some time ago.

Theatrical New York was well represented at the formal opening, Joe Lee declaring, following the performance, that it looked like the Astor lobby that evening.” Norma and Constance Talman and George Beban were among the stars in the boxes.

A. M. Fabian Managing

At the formal affair A. M. Fabian, managing director of the new cinema palace, was master of ceremonies. Jacob Fabian is president of the theatre company.

Newspapers have referred to the Branford as New Jersey’s finest and most beautiful theatre in the country. Although one of the largest structures in the country, there is not a supporting pillar in the building.

Gray Directs Advertising

The Branford Symphony Orchestra furnishes one of the big features of the entertainment. Jacob L. Rittenband is conductor. Warren Yates is organ master. The instrument installed represents an expenditure of $50,000.

Paul Gray, well known in the industry, is director of advertising and publicity. A. Gordon Reed is production manager.

Film Beauty Spots Of South Bend, Ind.

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

SOUTH BEND, IND., Dec. 21—Ezra Rhodes, manager of the LaSalle theatre, has arranged with the Tisdale Industrial Film Corporation to come to South Bend with their entire equipment and spend two weeks filming the various points of interest. Cornell T. Malone of Pittsburgh is in the city planning the details of the feature film.

Thorburn Is Managing

MARSHALL, MINN. — Barrymore Theatre Company took possession of the local theatre recently. Neal Thorburn is now the manager.
A PROFESSIONAL romance that began at the copy desk of a St. Paul newspaper and migrated to the literary realms of motion picturedom, has culminated in the appointment of C. Gardner Sullivan—an ace of creative screen scribes and continuists—as an active member of the famous Associated Producers, Inc., the crowning achievement of which is the movie of the most significant service rendered by Thomas H. Ince, Mack Sennett, George Loane Tucker, Allan Dwan, Marshall Neilan, J. Parker Read, Jr., and Maurice Tourneur.

The trade in general and the exhibitors in particular, having seen the line "By C. Gardner Sullivan" emblazoned across the title sheet of Thomas H. Ince productions may have drawn their own mental conclusions. The name and character of this latest welcome entrant into the producing field, yet few have had the opportunity to study the "man behind the screen," and to know his qualifications and credentials for the responsibility bestowed upon him by the seven producers who unanimously elected him to their independent ranks.

Sullivan is, first of all, a keen student of psychology. He absorbed that the world's greatest university for intellect, quick wits and strong will—the modern newspaper office. He reads mankind and its offspring—the universe in general—not with the theoretical eyes of one who gropes in blind fantasies—but with the practical, human vision of one who has, himself, traded in the realities of life, and who knows from the heart one—those experiences, emotions, and passions which govern real people in any community of the globe.

Some ten years ago, when he was grabbing copy hot off the wires of the Associated Press, slapping scare heads on it, and rushing it upstairs to the composing room, he got a bunch that he could write scenarios. That same night—action following impulse—he retreated to his room, which cost him sixty-five per, burned the midnight oil, and several days later there emerged in Uncle Sam's mail box a very fat envelope addressed post haste to "Thomas H. Ince Studios, Santa Ynez Canyon, California."

Several weeks elapsed before a letter, with a check for $50 enclosed snugly therein, arrived to reward his efforts, and subsequently inspire additional contributions which several months later brought him $100. Then followed a letter from Thomas H. Ince in which the youthful author of these wild Western Indian dramas was instructed to board a train for the eagerly sought "California." When the train stopped at Culver City, Sullivan found himself "hiring out" for several dollars per week, and the following year he found himself a prisoner, as his pay, being five dollars per week, bound him to the studio ten hours per day, seven days per week.

Then followed a private course under the personal tutelage of Thomas H. Ince. Sullivan was taught the art of constructive perception and conception of ability, quickly comprehended a mentality that worked like a human dynamo. He invested his processes with his own spirit of "atmosphere" and "humanity" in all things. He worked with him day in and day out, practically demonstrating the salient requisites for the construction of the script, the evolution of the plot that grips and sustains interest, and the Ince-made, iron-clad rule for realism that fairly bites! * *

Sullivan's aptness was little short of marvelous. From that trail-blazing time until the present era, he has evidenced a graphic understanding of realities, and a masterful knowledge of technique and "mechanics" that are equaled only by his rare creative talents, and the surpassing genius to transfer his thoughts into rapid-fire script-language.

In private life, in the studios and out, Sullivan is the acme of refinement and the course of dramatic requirements on a broad scale. * * *

In the words of Thomas H. Ince in his capacity of President: "C. Gardner Sullivan's advent into the Associated Producers means, among other things, that the story and its full realization to the successful photographer will be foremost at all times. In my opinion, which is based, of course, upon his years of association with me, he is the most prolific, creative screen author of all time, with an understanding of plot fundamentals and values that permeate the very best, most comprehensive production. His stories are always vital; never exaggerated; strictly to be depended upon for the interest and delight they will carry to the motion picture audience.

"Mr. Sullivan is a fine showman as well as an artist. He knows the public because he has studied every phase of humanity as it exists everywhere. I confidently expect his productions to establish a standard that will contribute their full share to the advanced artistry for which all of us are striving."

And, in Mack Sennett's address of welcome: "It seems to me that the addition of C. Gardner Sullivan to the ranks of the Associated Producers marks the consummation of a rounded completion and a balanced harmony of contrasted types that will compass every kind of picture creation possible to the screen. To use an ancient phrase which resumes its original meaning to this connection—the entire gamut of human emotions is now comprised in the repertoire of the Associated Producers. We are now equipped in members to make all types of pictures that are worthily addressed to the great public."

Marshall Neilan welcomed Sullivan as follows: "This is a day of days, one associated with the motion picture industry cannot fail to realize the fact that with the formation of C. Gardner Sullivan's Production, the industry finds itself enriched with an important factor in its future development. The individual achievements of Mr. Sullivan in the past must impress the business with the thought that his own productions to come will compare favorably with the best and establish him among the foremost producers in the business."

The first C. Gardner Sullivan special for the Associated Producers will be a big story of modern America, embodying, according to the advance data, an integrity of conception and a vital theme and accompanying action which should establish it promptly and faithfully as typical of the Sullivan style and appeal.

MILWAUKEE, WIS., Dec. 21.—City officials at Eau Claire and Superior have placed a ban on the exhibition of serials.

Provision also is made in the resolution adopted by city council of Eau Claire for censorship, the law requesting exhibitors "to eliminate from all pictures exhibited, all scenes of crime and violence to the greatest possible extent." The law is effective on January 1.

Action Prompted by School Board Resolution
The action taken by the Eau Claire council follows presentation of a petition by the Parent Teachers Association and the adoption of a resolution by the board of education. Members of the board declared it their opinion that serials were partially responsible for the wave of banditry in the city.

The resolution adopted by the board of education follows:

"Whereas, the board of education of the city of Eau Claire deems the action of the mayor of the city of Superior in forbidding the presentation of moving picture serials in the city of Superior a move for the betterment of civic conditions in that city, and,

Want Strict Regulation
"Whereas, the board of education further believes that the moving picture serials prove a detriment, especially to boys and girls, because of their tendency to excite the lower, more brutal elements in human nature, and,

"Whereas, the board of education further believes that the character of the moving picture performances for Friday, Saturday and Sunday, at which times in particular children are present, should be strictly regulated so as to eliminate all objectionable features and so as to guarantee only the highest type of pictures suitable for children.

Recommendation Is Made
"Be it, therefore, resolved that the board of education of the city of Eau Claire that they take suitable action to forbid the showing of moving picture serials in the city of Eau Claire, and,

Getting Back to Normalcy

Whitman Bennett says WHITMAN BENNETT

Whitman Bennett is the producer who is making seven specials for First National. There are two featuring Lionel Barrymore. He has incorporated in the following article his views on business conditions as they affect the theatre.

The exhibitor who feels alarmed because he has noticed a perceptible drop in attendance at his theatre within the past few weeks is either one who has a very short memory or else one who has entered the business of exhibiting during the abnormal period which has persisted over the past thirty months. The experienced exhibitor knows that in normal times there is always a lull in attendance before the Christmas holidays and these exhibitors were surprised when it did not come last year or the year before.

This mid-season lull has been explained in various ways, but the most plausible one lies in the fact that the business of preparing for the celebration of Christmas is an occupation that all but absorbs the time for theatre attendance. Retail trade is on the boom especially in the evening. Clerks, accountants and other store employees are tied up at their places of business. They themselves are not only prevented from attending the theatre, but the members of their families stay home to be present when they return from work. A great many of those who are not forced to work in the evenings employ the hours used at other times for theatre attendance.

Christmas shopping or else take the opportunity of earning additional money by the many extra temporary positions that are open to them for their evening hours.

The fact that the lull has been described would be a source of confidence to the exhibitor. It is the surest indication that could occur to show that the country is getting back on a basis of normalcy. The American people have once more taken up the business of living sane and safe lives.

When the occupation of preparing for Christmas is widespread enough to be felt in the motion picture theatre. The hysteria of war is gone. The carelessness of private extravagance engendered by the recklessness of all the governments of the world, recklessness which caused the people to disregard all customs of normal living, is gone and it is for the benefit of all legitimate businesses that it is gone.

Exhibitors have made money during the past two years, but the cost in danger to the entire motion picture industry is beyond computation. The necessity for good motion pictures disappeared. Hodgepodge selections and presentations drew packed houses as easily as did the most efficiently managed shows. Films, that from the method and nature of their production merited small patronage, made phenomenal records of money gathering. The necessity of care in presenting pictures, care in selection of them, and in fact the value of any sort of exhibitor science seemed to have disappeared. The man who through bitter experience had learned that decent films, an orderly house, and well thought out exploitation and advertising were indispensable, saw competitors disregarding all of these things and coining money.

Such a state of affairs of necessity began the work of disintegrating the magnificent organization of exhibiting that had made the American people the greatest picture fans in the world. The whole industry depends upon the efficiency of the exhibitor in the final analysis, and when the business of showmanship started to be discarded because it appeared as unnecessary, the exhibitor was threatened. The hysteria which presages a general de-moralization had begun to show itself. We had the $10 picture on Broadway, and the question of year runs of pictures on the same thoroughfare was seriously discussed.

The brake has been applied just in time. The American public has served notice on the motion picture theatre that it is once again living on a normal basis. Real showmanship will once more come into its own and the man that knows the science of exhibiting is the one who will be rewarded for his efforts. The ones who will suffer are not those who are real showmen, but mere owners or managers of motion picture theatres. The public will be more responsive to well thought out exploitation.

Naturally there are some cases where the new order, or rather the restored order, will present difficulties to the real exhibitor. The craze of theatre building has caused congestion of attractions in some places. This condition in no way warrants the adjustment in these cases will have to be made, but it will be the better showman who will win out. The men who are a detriment to the business of popularizing and the showing of motion pictures will be driven out through the working of the law of the survival of the fittest.

As a producer I welcome the restoration to normal conditions, and believe that those exhibitors, distributors and producers who are working toward the goal of better pictures and more effective showmanship in this greeting. The better grade of pictures will, in the future, receive more substantial recognition from the public than in the period of turmoil and depression going. Extravagance must go and in its place will come sane costs. All in all, we return to normal conditions, the beginning of another era of real prosperity for the producer and exhibitor alike, which, I feel certain, will transcend anything which is past.

NEW YORK, Dec. 21.—D. W. Griffith’s “Way Down East,” has reached its 200th performance at the Forty-fourth Street theatre.

The event will be appropriately celebrated throughout the week, or at least long enough to allow various members of the cast to appear in person at different times. On Monday evening, Lillian Gish and Richard Barthelmess were the guests of honor. Griffith also was present and spoke on Monday evening. On Tuesday evening the guests include Vivia Ogden, Kate Bruce and Burr McIntosh.

All present contracts for the occupancy of the theatre have been cancelled in order to allow the Griffith picture to remain there indefinitely.

Women’s Clubs Are Aiding Endorsers

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Dec. 21.—Motion picture endorsers have received recognition from the General Federation of Women’s Clubs in the appointment of a chairman of the motion picture department, it was announced at a recent meeting of the Indianapolis Endorsers of Photoplays.

A letter was read from the newly appointed chairman, Mrs. Wood Allen Chapman of New York, expressing her readiness to co-operate with the local organization in its work. Announcement was made at the meeting that a series of special matinees for children would be given during December under the auspices of the Parent-Teacher associations.

Fred Sanders Buys Indianapolis Apex

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Dec. 21.—Fred W. Sanders, owner of the Fountain Square theatre, has bought the Apex, 1100 North Illinois street, and will take possession January 1.

The theatre seats 850 people, is in a brick building built exclusively for the theatre. This property will replace two theatres within six blocks of one another. The Fountain Square theatre considered one of the leading neighborhood playhouses of the city ranks close to the leading downtown houses.
Addition Being Made to Main Studio

Also included in the immediate enlargements of the Fox establishment is the new construction at the southeast corner of Tenth avenue and Fifty-sixth street, where Mr. Fox lately purchased a four-story building, demolished it and is now erecting an addition to his main studio building, which, with the addition, extends an entire block on Tenth avenue, from Fifty-fifth to Fifty-sixth streets, and runs back 275 feet along Fifty-fifth street and 150 feet on Fifty-sixth street.

At the time the Fox New York studio was constructed it was presumed that its 150,000 square feet of floor space would be ample to accommodate the activities for some time to come. When the building was officially dedicated on May 21 of this year, it already had been demonstrated in the three months it has been occupied that more room was needed.

Not Under One Roof

Built to encompass the activities of 5,000 employees, the Fox studio never has been able to hold all the units of the organization. The scenario department and the print and sign shop and various other departments are in buildings scattered around town. The Kelly-Springfield building is only one block south on Tenth avenue from the main plant. Mr. Fox has taken this modern fireproof structure, occupying a site 100x175 feet and containing more than 50,000 square feet of floor space, on lease for twenty years at an annual rent of $47,000; the gross sum involved in the lease period totalling practically $1,000,000.

The new construction at Tenth avenue and Fifty-sixth street will provide further accommodation for the expansion of the Fox interests and will completely fill the Tenth avenue frontage for an entire block.

Work Being Rushed

Work is being rushed to prepare the annex at Tenth avenue and Fifty-fourth street for occupancy as soon as possible. Some of the space already has been taken over by certain sections of the various departments that will ultimately be sheltered in the newly acquired Kelly-Springfield building.

The temporary discouragements that in many instances have halted progress in some lines during the reconstruction period seems to have left Mr. Fox unaffected. Plans that will be announced later are all set for action in 1921, and Mr. Fox expects to give to picture showmen a line of money-makers that will supplement his large achievements in production.

The legal end of the deal for the Fifty-fourth street building was handled by S. K. Rogers, general counsel for Fox, and by Henry L. Moses for Kelly-Springfield Tire Company, A. S. Kempner and John C. Eische handled the negotiation for Fox so far as the real estate phase of the transaction was concerned, and I. J. Phillips and A. H. Gitterman represented the tire concern.

New Fireproof Structure Taken Over for Period of Twenty Years to Meet Needs of Rapidly Expanding Production Interests

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

William Fox has leased for a period of twenty years the new four-story and basement fireproof structure erected by Kelly-Springfield Tire Company at Tenth avenue and Fifty-fourth street, New York. Fox announces that this transaction was necessary to meet the needs of his rapidly expanding production interests.

Only recently this company announced the million dollar expansion of the Fox studios in Hollywood, Cal.

EDITORIAL of the WEEK

Censoring the Movies

(From San Diego Union)

Censorship of the motion picture industry is beginning to be again a subject of review and discussion. It is even proposed by the radical reformers that a federal board of censorship shall be established whose authority shall be supreme and final.

The "movement," * * * while ostensibly for the "moral welfare" of the nation, carries with it a peril far more subtle than is alleged in the charge that the moral censor is sure to infringe the constitutional rights of the picture producers by misjudging the "moral" effect of many of the pictures. A federal censorship would be likely to transcend its specific purpose by including in its scope what the censors might be pleased to call "the public interest." The phrase would be subject to an almost limitless interpretation, and inclusive of judgment upon practically every question and issue before the people or likely to be presented.

Examples illustrative of this possibility are not wanting among the four legal censorship boards already existing * * *

These boards * * * have overstepped the bounds of their authority * * * One state board deleted from a news picture scenes and subtitles which concerned a political opponent. * * * The real purpose behind this action was all too evident, yet it was taken in the name of "the public interest." * * *

As a matter of fact it is no more advisable that a censorship board should be exercised over the moving pictures than over the publication of a newspaper of the utterances of a public speaker. * * * Certainly, no censorship "in the public interest" would be tolerated in those instances.

R-G-R Handle Distribution
For Big Producer in West
Chicago Concern Has Under Its Control Several of the Well-Known Directors and Stars on the Coast

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 21—Russell-Greiver-Russell have effected a combine with a large and prominent producer on the Coast. The Chicago concern will handle for national distribution all of the pictures put out by this organization. Five reel features of practically every type, special productions, comedies and all other films produced by the Coast concern are affected.

It is understood that Russell-Greiver-Russell by taking this step have brought under their control several of the well-known directors, producers and stars in the West.

Russell Says Transaction Has Been Completed

When questioned by a representative of this paper regarding the matter, Bernard D. Russell, the West Coast representative of Russell-Greiver-Russell, issued the following statement: "It is a fact that such a combination has been completed. The producing organization is second to none on the Coast, and has long been known for the pictures it pur out. "Work of several of the popular and better known stars comes to us through the step we are taking.

"I will add that undoubtedly the arrangements entered into will mean that Russell-Greiver-Russell will step into the front rank as a producing-distributing organization."

Details of Deal Are Not Disclosed

The Chicago office of Russell-Greiver-Russell, when questioned concerning the above rumors, stated that while they would verify the rumor, they did not care at this time to disclose with whom the negotiations had been made. The combination has been effected and work has been going on for some time, according to William D. Russell, president of Russell-Greiver-Russell. Mr. Russell's statement says: "Within a short time we will have ready a series of pictures incorporating the work of stars of the first water—stars who now are appearing in pictures put out by some of the best known producing organizations in existence. Not only will we control several series of star pictures, but this agreement likewise brings to us for distribution a brand of comedies, already established, and several other interesting films. We were not quite prepared for the news to be sent broadcast so early in the game, but as long as the rumor has been started to a certain extent, I will verify it to a certain extent. When the time comes, which I anticipate will be very shortly, the full announcement will be made through the trade papers."

Christie Ahead of Schedule

During 1920 the Company Has Broadened Out Into Field of Feature Productions

HAVING kept pace with an unusually great impetus in its producing activities within the year, the Christie company is entering 1921 with picture production well in hand to take care of forthcoming publications of the winter months and early spring.

Marked not only by a broadening out into six-reel comedy-dramas, but also an increase in the quantity of its short-subject offerings, 1920 has been a big one for the Christies, who now enjoy the distinction of having their first big feature acknowledged as a tremendous success.

The next of the six-reel comedy-dramas has been made. It is "See My Lawyer," from the Broadway play by Max Marcin, and will be issued early in the new year, presenting T. Roy Barnes and Grace Desmond, who made a hit in "So Long Letty," augmented by a list of other stellar players.

Greater than these accomplishments, Al Christie has now two-reel comedies which Educational is publishing at the rate of two a month, which are characterized by the same quality in short lengths as Christie has produced during the year in the feature pictures.

"The demand for more comedies of a high grade this year has been met by a comedy which is at least 50 per cent better in merit and pulling power than at this time last year," says Christie.

"Not only that, but the comedies in the single-reel brand which have now been introduced as Vanity comedies are bearing the same stamp."

C., Dec. 21.—Representatives from every American Legion post in the country attending the annual meeting of the District of Columbia department voted to oppose the Sunday blue laws in Washington. Organization An Accomplished Fact

Sydney S. Cohen Declares that the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America Now Has Nearly 12,000 Members, With the New Association Still Growing

BY SYDNEY S. COHEN
(Prssident, Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America)

The past year has amply proven that organization of motion picture theatre owners is an accomplished fact. The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America today are fully organized throughout the country totaling a membership of about 12,000. The organization is still growing apace and before long almost every exhibitor will be an active member. All the state organizations subscribe to the platform and principles adopted at the National Convention this past June at the city of Cleveland.

Perhaps the most striking part is the participation in organization affairs by the big exhibitors, the men whose investments are large and varied. Herefore, the little exhibitor played the part of Prince Rupert in organization matters, and the debt we owe to him can not be overestimated. The zeal of so-called small exhibitors for organization is as great, as ever and now we have joined to this zeal the material resources of the substantial exhibitors. It is a union of forces which I think has already proven irresistible.

I have been told by many of my fellow exhibitors that they have joined the organized ranks because the platform and the demands enunciated at Cleveland were both constructive and conservative. On this platform we propose to meet all problems. Exhibitors want to be fair and just in their dealings with every other element in the industry.

As a matter of history: I might point to the achievement of various state organizations in liberalizing the old Puritanical Sabbath and defeating other forms of repression, such as censorship. I know these things are striking and conspicuous, but they do not in themselves constitute the achievement of an organization. They are rather the fruits than the seeds of organization. The real test of all organization is the benefit to the rank and file.

Within the organization known as the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, all benefits accruing from organization are shared equally by all and no advantage is enjoyed by reason of organization which the rank and file do not fully share with the men who may be the officers and leaders for the time.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America organization has stood this test. Today the smallest exhibitor, directly and indirectly, feels the benefits of the organization. The organization is in receipt of letters from every part of the country stating complaints and grievances and seeking redress. The officers of the organization are doing their utmost to justify the faith of these exhibitors.

The very existence of our organization has created a better atmosphere in the industry. Men with plans and schemes for aggression and exploitation of the exhibitor have been inspired with a wholesome fear. They realize that even the most powerful individuals are not beyond the reach of a strong united body of men who seek the legitimate protection of their interests and who have been the relentless foes of all forms of injustice and crooked dealings.

In all national campaigns, the organization acts through its congressional units, which we believe is a very effective method. The representatives of the congressional units are the shock troops of our organization.

Pass Bogus Bill at • An Indiana Theatre

ELKHART, IND., Dec. 21.—The old swindle game of passing a raised bill was played successfully at the ticket office of the Orpheum theatre recently when a bogus $20 bill was accepted in payment for tickets.

The bill had been raised from a $5 bill. A suspect was arrested, but later was released when the theatre manager, Mrs. Harris, failed to recognize him as the guilty person.

Lansing Arcade Expected To be Operating Shortly

Labor troubles and materials shortage have delayed the completion of the building, begun last March. The theatre will be operated under the management of the W. S. Butterfield circuit.

Repair Fire Losses In South Bend, Ind.

SOUTH BEND, IND., Dec. 21.—Work has been started on the reconstruction of the Auditorium theatre which was gutted by fire December 7.

George Hines, manager, expects the house to be open again in five weeks. Authorities have been unable to ascertain the cause of the fire which damaged four other places of business in addition to the theatre, at a total loss of $121,500, fully covered by insurance.

Hines says his loss was reduced by the proper functioning of the sprinkler system. The operator's steel cage was not damaged. All the seats, decorations and musical instruments, the latter including a $10,000 organ and $1,000 baby grand piano, were badly damaged. The organ has been sent back to the factory for repairs. Loss to the theatre alone was $30,000.

Report Gives Two New Theatres to Troy, N. Y.

TROY, N. Y.—Troy may have two large motion picture theatres. One house already is assured and the other is understood to be in the planning. M. and J. Weinstein, comprising the firm of Weinstein Brothers, have purchased the two-story brick building at 22-24 Fourth street, expecting, it is reported, to build a theatre on the site.

Gaspere Battaglia has purchased the M. Smith property at 2329 Fifth avenue, to construct a theatre there, understood to be planned to accommodate 1,000 patrons.

Pittsburgh Theatre Open

PITTSBURGH, PA.—The New theatre owned by Harry Davis Enterprises was given formal opening on December 1. John F. Harris is general manager.

Touching Scene From "The Foreigner"

Adapted from the story by Ralph Conlon and produced by the Winnipeg Productions, Ltd.
AMERICAN exhibitors will experience hoarseness on the morning of January 1, 1921, due to replying, "The same to you," to the thousands of patrons who wish them the conventional "Happy New Year" on the day and night of December 31, 1920. It is not likely that many will grasp the full significance of the rejoinder.

It is true that many of the greetings received will be conventional. It should not be true that the theatre man's response will be of like spirit. The significance of the interchange lies in the sincerity of the exhibitor. Unless he is honest in his good wishes he cannot expect his own year to be altogether "happy."

** * * *

The most important resolution that the exhibitor can make at the beginning of the new year is one to the effect that he will exercise every faculty to insure his patrons against the slightest "unhappiness" while within his theatre. That simple resolution embraces all the requisites of a successful business year.

** * * *

If the resolution is made with sincerity and kept in mind after the passing of the holiday it follows that the theatre man will select attractions with greater care than formerly, will advertise them more intelligently and effectively and present them under the best circumstances that can be created.

** * * *

The exhibitor who has in the past depended upon the stock phrases and cuts of the press book, in short has echoed the promises of producers and distributors writing for a hypothetical "average audience," will take steps to voice his own promises in his own language to the clientele that he knows and understands.

** * * *

Such a man will give to newspaper advertising the attention its effectiveness warrants. He will consider each display and each word of copy his personal message to the public and take corresponding interest in its quality. That means better advertising, and better advertising means better business.

** * * *

He will reconsider the proposition of extra exploitation. He will come to realize that it is better to reach a greater public by utilizing every avenue of communication and play to larger attendance than to appeal to a limited number and exhibit to a "safe profit." Success dates from that realization.

** * * *

Presentation will be contemplated in the light of a new understanding. If he has discarded the idea as impractical or incompatible with theatre construction or the class of patronage appealed to, he will discover a number of truths that were formerly overlooked and learn that he may have been mistaken in his decision.

** * * *

To open that line of thought is to drive straight to the conclusion that the best in presentation is not too good for any audience in the country, and to fully appreciate that fact is to determine at once to introduce the most modern methods regardless of the expense or temporary inconvenience which may be involved.

** * * *

The sum total of these and similar changes that will ensue upon the making of the designated resolution is simply a better theatre for 1921 than for 1920. This despite the best efforts that have been made in the past to approximate perfection. Nothing is ever so good that it cannot be surpassed.

** * * *

The direct profit can be measured in dollars and cents. The business increase will be of sufficient magnitude to more than offset any imaginary disadvantages. There are no other varieties. No genuine disadvantage can be encountered in an enterprise which is undertaken in the interests of progress.

** * * *

"Happy New Year" from the patron attending the Midnight performance may mean little or much. It is to be hoped that it will be properly motivated, but another consideration is of vastly greater importance. The exhibitor's "The same to you" is the essential thing. His success for 1921 is measurable by its sincerity.
Showmanship Suggestions in the Stills

Indians in war paint may be used in street work for "The Last of the Mohicans," Maurice Tourneur's Associated Producers production, and an Indian prologue can be easily arranged to precede the screening. Direct identification of the story with the novel should be scored in every case.

With the general acknowledgment of short subject importance the demand for special exploitation and presentation becomes daily more pronounced. A good opportunity to begin this type of work comes to hand with the publication by Special Pictures Corporation of "His Model Day," featuring Chester Conklin. The above still suggests the stage setting and the general type of prologue proper for the occasion. It may be treated humorously or in the approved manner of the fashion revue—but the important point is that this and other short subjects should be presented with special introduction.

Gladys Walton, as she appears in the Universal feature, "Risky Business," provides a direct cue for presentation. Tabloid musical comedy or local talent may be utilized, or a versatile ingenue can remodel her act to fit the purpose.

"Down Home," Irvin Willat's first production for Hodkinson distribution, is a story of small town life in New England. The still gives an idea of the class of characters prominent in the cast and suggests a vehicle which may be used to advantage in exterior exploitation. Characters and vehicle are within the power of every exhibitor to approximate for showmanship purposes.
RECENT developments in musical composition are attributed by Hugo Riesenfeld, managing director of the Rialto, Rivoli and Criterion theatres, New York, to the influence of the motion picture. His prologues at the theatres under his direction have been uniformly meritorious and rank high in artistic finish and effectiveness among the presentation works of theatre history, which adds weight to his comments upon the subject in the accompanying article.

Hugo Riesenfeld Sees Motion Picture and Music Benefited by Theatre Combination

By HUGO RIESENFELD
Managing Director, Rivoli, Rialto and Criterion theatres, New York.

It may come as a shock to some people to be told that the motion picture has brought life to music, but the fact is true nevertheless. Photoplays have, probably more than any other form of entertainment, injected so much new life into music and aroused interest in so many people who knew little about music and cared less, that it has become a force to be reckoned with. And, vice versa, music has helped in the development of photoplay exhibition.

Music, like all the arts, has a tendency to stability as opposed to fluidity and life, and it is often through some outside influence that the art develops.

There is a movement in music which is brought about by the especial needs of photoplays. Music, to be effective in photoplay presentation, must not be a mere neck-and-neck race between the orchestra and the photoplay on the screen. It is not that the ear must be intrigued with sounds while the eye is being entertained through pictures. There are some people, I know, who think that we play music in our three theatres just to keep them from talking, but the regular patron knows better. And, may I add in passing, our regular patrons—even though they are not interested in music when first they visit us—soon become regular music "fans."

The especial need of the photoplay, since it has developed from a mere series of scenic studies or a comedy made up of racing mobs, has had an influence on musical composition in that, with the growth of dramatic themes in pictures, there must be a correlated musical theme. It will not suffice to play a composition as loud as possible for tense situations and soft for love scenes—there must be an emotional relationship between music and picture if the blending is to be artistic and effective.

To play a heavy and complicated composition as a musical accompaniment to a comedy or, vice versa, to play a light composition as accompaniment to a highly dramatic screen story would be to defeat both picture and music. The music must be temperamentally of the same psychological significance as the picture—if possible, the story told by the com-

"At the Roadside" was the name given the presentation feature used for the Rivoli engagement of "The Testing Block."
TWO episodes in the elaborate special feature used during Thanksgiving week at the Rivoli. "Falstaff’s Dream" was the appropriate title given one phase of the feature, the spirit of which is conveyed in the right view of the stage. The direct identification with the holiday was scored in the "Thanksgiving Ballet," the stage setting for which is seen at the left.

The Criterion theatre. Some forty composers, I think, were drawn on for different selections. Some of the more important pieces used in the "scoring" are the second and fourth parts of Tschaikowsky’s "Nutcracker Suite," the parts known as "Danse Arabe" and "Danse Russe-Trepak." Tschaikowsky’s "Dornroscchen" ballet music was also made use of. The last movement from J. Nicole’s "From the South" suite; H. Wienenowski’s "Romance" and G. Karganoff’s "Romance" are still other selections which were played during the progress of Mr. DeMille’s picture. Three Arabian songs and three French melodies were interwoven, as well as more than a score more of larger or smaller compositions.

All these fine compositions were woven together with special compositions until the incidental music to "Midsummer Madness" resembles an excellent symphonic concert.

NOTE:—Mr. Riesenfeld stands out as a distinct personality in American exhibitor-dom. He combines with his justly famous musical ability a keen showman’s sense of theatrical values.

As managing director of the Rivoli, Rialto and Criterion theatres, New York, he has scored achievements that have prominent place in the history of the progress of the motion picture theatre.

His present discussion of the influence of motion pictures upon music and the counter-influence of music upon the photoplay is of vital concern to the progressive American showman and a worthy contribution to theatre archives.

That Midnight Show

Practically every theatre in Chicago has announced a special Midnight performance for December 31, listing special talent for the occasion that represents an outlay out of all proportion to the probable receipts calculated upon a basis of capacity attendance.

The explanation, sought by the myopic, is to be found in the fact that the right thinking exhibitor does not concern himself unduly as to the profits to be gained from such a performance.

The occasion is an ideal one upon which to provide patrons with a genuine "treat."

The bonus system has become firmly established in American industry. Its merits have been set forth repeatedly and its general adaptation proves it practical.

Why not consider the New Year’s Eve show a bonus to your patrons?

Why not make it a reward for faithful attendance during the year?

To make it pay for itself should be sufficient.

The American exhibitor has attained a position which warrants and calls for an occasional enterprise of this nature.

And like all worthwhile exhibitor enterprises the New Year’s Eve performance qualifies as excellent advertising.
An innovation of some significance was scored during the run of "Humoresque," the Paramount production, at the Tremont Temple theatre, Boston, Mass. An auto-playlet, hitherto unknown in street work, was employed with success. The idea suggests almost unlimited variation and amplification and should be given the serious attention of progressive American showmen.

Auto Playlet Evolved for "Humoresque" Is Practical Mobile Exploitation Device

The evolution of exploitation is the most interesting subject in modern theatricals. To trace the course of the various standard methods in use from their embryonic crudity to present day efficiency is to observe in detail the march of progress.

An idea is born, no matter how. It is weighed in the balance of reason by the showman and promptly discarded or adopted according to its merit.

Ideas that are adopted are speedily improved and developed.

Thus showmanship is built.

WALTER P. LINDLAR, assistant exploitation director at the home office of the Famous-Players-Lasky Corporation, personally conducted the campaign for "Humoresque" at the Tremont Temple theatre, Boston, Mass. He evolved, in the course of that campaign, the auto-playlet type of exploitation.

Accompanying illustrations show the idea in the concrete. With no other guidance than this individual exhibitors can apply the principle to local conditions and adapt it to other attractions.

Mr. Lindlar's campaign did not center about the stunt indicated.

Two dozen cooperative window displays were obtained, and the town was plastered with paper and cards. The newspapers were also given attention and good results gained in this direction.

But the auto-playlet stands out as the genuine accomplishment of the campaign.

It was engineered in simple manner. A youth who had appeared at numerous affairs as a violin soloist was employed, and a young woman was attired to represent a character from the picture. The composition that shares the title of the picture was brought into use and the final touch was applied by affixing to the automobile a card announcement of the engagement.

Simplicity is one of the big merits of the stunt. With this it possesses mobility, novelty and adaptability.

These three qualifications are sufficient to recommend any exploitation enterprise to the theatre advertisers of the nation. All the established methods of exploitation have them.

The device will be improved and elaborated as time goes on and showmen contribute their individual touches to its development. Much may be expected of it, and the exhibitors who seek the modern and productive will not fail to produce.

Such is the course of progress.

Practically every advertising stunt in common use had a similar beginning. Each was practical, or at least promised practicality, and exhibitors seized upon it with the natural result.

The auto-playlet is the best innovation of the week.

It is one of the best innovations of many weeks. To Mr. Lindlar, responsible for the idea, great credit is due. There can be no doubt that the immediate future will see showmen everywhere following his lead.
"Kismet" Establishes Box Office Records At Academy of Music and Audubon Theatre

"Kismet" is standing the test. The observations of showmen accorded advance views of the Robertson-Cole picturization of Otis Skinner's famous stage success, to the effect that the production should prove an exploitation and presentation sensation, are being substantiated.

Two more box office records have gone into the discard during "Kismet" engagements.

The world premiere of "Kismet," at the Strand theatre, New York, resulted in a new box office record for that theatre. A like precedent was established the following week at the Strand in Brooklyn, N. Y., where Edward L. Hyman adapted and elaborated the exploitation and presentation methods used by Joseph Plunkett for the initial engagement.

The Academy of Music and the Audubon theatre, also New York houses and catering to distinct types of patronage, are most recently reported as having established new box office records with the picture.

The outstanding point of interest from the exhibitor advertiser's angle lies in the piling up of evidence to establish the uncontested claim that exploitation and box office receipts are the most intimately related theatre elements. In every engagement thus far reported the advertising campaigns utilized were but slightly less precedential than the box office marks recorded.

The methods employed at the Academy of Music and the Audubon theatre are consequently interesting.

Ben E. Jackson, manager of the Audubon theatre, an enthusiast in exploitation, centered his efforts upon the lobby type of advertising. He planned to practically recreate the Oriental atmosphere of the story in his theatre, reasoning that this would be one of the most effective means of instilling in patrons the desire to see the picture.

A canvas of property studios and curio shops revealed the fact that outright purchase of the necessary materials would entail prohibitive expense. Cooperation came to the rescue, and an arrangement was entered into whereby the most desirable effect could be gained without cost.

Rich Turkish and Arabian draperies were obtained. Silk, hand-woven "pull downs" twenty-five feet in length, were draped about the columns and hand embroidered drapes were suspended across the ceiling. Artistic signs were skillfully worked into the general decorative scheme and especially painted boards, forty by sixty inches, were made up for the occasion.

One big sign in red, gold and purple covered a space forty by four feet in size, seen in the accompanying illustration.

The oil paintings provided by Robertson-Cole were prominently displayed and also used for cooperative window displays in various locations. Incense burners and other Oriental paraphernalia occupied prominent position in the lobby, and a girl in harem garb distributed literature to patrons.

This display was made up six days prior to the opening of the engagement and its effect upon those attending the theatre during that time cannot have been other than productive. But the mailing list was also brought into use, and a newspaper campaign was conducted with cumulative effect.

At the Academy of Music one sign that was used measured almost 100 feet in length. This was displayed on the exterior of the theatre three stories above the ground. Smaller signs were displayed below it, all being attached to fire escapes. Again the campaign was started a week prior to the opening.

Walter David, manager of the theatre, concentrated also on his lobby and foyer, exceptionally spacious display places. The gold mounted frames with which the huge foyer is equipped were used for special cards, practically all of which bore the head of Otis Skinner in character. And smaller cards were placed at every point of vantage. Twenty-five thousand throwaways of post card size were then distributed throughout the neighborhood.

At the Academy of Music, as at the Audubon, and as at the two Strands before that, the biggest business in history was experienced during the run.

This is what may be expected of the picture throughout the country, providing that exhibitors accord it the treatment it deserves. The exploitation and presentation possibility is present. It but remains for the theatre man to put into the advance campaign and the exhibition the work that is warranted. Showmen will see that this is done.

Report of the Academy of Music and Audubon theatre engagements does not mention presentation. Yet it remains true that every theatre should do something in this line in behalf of the picture. Even where the music alone must be depended upon for the gaining of effect exceptional opportunity for characteristic specialties exists.

With the engagements described in these pages now and in the past as guidance, and with the voluminous and meritorious printed assistance available in the excellent press book compiled by Robertson-Cole, the exhibitor has ample material with which to work out a method of procedure which cannot be otherwise than successfully employed.
Photographs Record Modern Showmanship Methods Prevalent at Production Center

CARL MARQUARD, manager of the California theatre, Venice, Cal., scored great success with his exploitation campaign for "Peaceful Valley," Charles Ray's First National attraction, though only such materials as are obtainable by any and all exhibitors were used. A goat, a mule and farm implements are easily procurable in any section of the country. They may be enlisted for the campaign, in most instances, at practically no expense. Overalls for the theatre attendants, as well as for those who go upon the street, and a rural lobby display likewise may be produced with little difficulty. With pictures of this type plentiful at all times, particularly at present, the exhibitor frequently has recourse to this type of campaign, which is its own assurance of success.

SID GRAUMAN, to whom credit is due for some of the greatest presentations in the history of the American theatre, staged a colorful feature in connection with the showing of "The Testing Block," William S. Hart's Paramount production. Theodore Kosloff's troupe of dancers, the entire company numbering twenty, appeared in an offering called "A Dance of Southern Russia." Following this the Griffin Twins, talented juveniles, executed a military number, after which a male soloist in costume patterned after that worn by the star of the picture sang a characteristic selection which finished with a sudden flashing of six-shooters just prior to the screening. Though few exhibitors are in a position to exactly duplicate Mr. Grauman's splendid stage features, his enterprise in this direction and the skill with which he adapts presentation to feature is of general value to the exhibitor field.
S. L. Rothapfel, managing director of the Capitol theatre, New York, staged one of the most elaborate prologues in the history of that playhouse for the presentation of “Passion,” the First National attraction, using the dramatic style of expression. The photograph shows the big moment of the introductory feature.

Capitol Extends “Passion” Run Following Seven Days of Broken Attendance Records

“They say’ there is danger of a business depression; that it is felt in some quarters at this time.

“Passion,” the First National attraction, a costume play, broke all box office records at the Capitol theatre, New York, during the week of December 12-18 and was held over for a second week.

The significance of the event is unescapable. The picture is frankly a period production. It has not even the name of a big star to discount this alleged disadvantage. Pola Negri, the leading player, being unknown to American theatre-goers. Yet the largest motion picture theatre in the world broke precedent to give it a second week because of the attendance it drew.

Additional interest attaches to the announcement when it is further disclosed that due to the press of crowds seeking admission no tickets were sold after 6:30 p.m. on the Sunday of the opening, and that on the following Monday the box offices were closed at even an earlier hour.

The Capitol record was broken on Sunday. And on Monday a still higher mark was recorded. Report is to the effect that each subsequent day of the week saw a duplication of this performance.

Accompanying illustrations show the presentation accorded the picture by S. L. Rothapfel, managing director, and the crowds standing outside the theatre awaiting admittance. The two are intimately related.

The occasion warranted such a presentation affort as the photographs show was put forth. And the performance, in keeping with the presentation throughout, warranted the attendance indicated.

Greatest importance attaches, however, to the fact that a costume picture scored this triumph at what may be termed the psychological moment.

In that should be a body blow to the calamity howler and the anti-costume picture agitation. The refutation of the arguments presented by these elements is one of the greatest services than can be rendered the industry.
“Lloyd Tribute Month” at Hamilton, Ohio, Opens With Strong Cooperative Campaign

Fred S. Meyer, managing director of the Palace Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, whose exploitation activity has placed that city in a position of exceptional prominence theatrically, announced in a recent contribution to the “What The Picture Did For Me” department that he had experienced such marked success with the showing of “Get Out and Get Under,” Harold Lloyd’s Pathé comedy, that he had planned a “Lloyd Tribute Month” during which time he would repeat five of the early comedies featuring that star. He included in his report the suggestion that exhibitors playing the picture effect a tie-up with local taxicab companies.

The details of the event and the manner of its handling are of great value to the exhibitor field. The ideas are essentially practical. They should be widely adapted.

The initial announcement of the “Get Out and Get Under” showing was made in the house organ, in a herald of exceptionally effective make-up and through a newspaper advertisement occupying almost a quarter of a page and practically reproducing the herald.

Then a special showing was arranged for the members of the Lions Club, the secretary of which sent out a letter to the membership announcing the event and urging all to be present.

When the opening day arrived the big splash was made.

Every taxicab in Hamilton appeared with a circular banner displayed on its spare tire rack. The photographs reproduced herewith give an idea of the effect gained.

In addition to this, posts at all points where motors park were decorated with cards bearing the essential information of the engagement.

Readers will recall Mr. Meyer’s statement regarding the attendance during the three days of the run. Every house record was broken. The Palace, which seats 800, accommodated 4,000 paid admissions the first day, Thanksgiving. Though “A Broadway Cowboy,” another Pathé production, was exhibited in connection with “Get Out and Get Under,” it was upon the latter that Mr. Meyer concentrated and based his remarkable special month.

In the newspaper announcement and in the herald and program were listed the five comedies, “Why Pick On Me?”, “Ask Father,” “Hear ‘Em Rave,” “Bees in His Bonnet,” and “Two Scrambled,” which were to be repeated during the month. With this announcement was given also the announcement that Harry “Smil” Pollard and Bebe Daniels appeared in each of the comedies.

The significance of that move will not be lost sight of. Both of the players mentioned have since been featured, and the opportunity thus accorded Palace patrons to see the three players in pictures which, Mr. Meyer’s announcement intimated, were responsible for their subsequent achievements is of no little importance.

The “Lloyd Tribute Month” is an innovation. Furthermore, it is an innovation which any exhibitor can easily adapt to local conditions and his own requirements.

It can be utilized with other comedians than Harold Lloyd, and with other attractions than comedies. Its straight value as an enterprise is great. American showmen will not neglect the opportunity presented.
Harrisburg Youths Share Benefits of Exploitation

EXPLOITATION is worth while for itself alone. When it is combined with charity it takes on added significance. Incidentally, it gains in the association.

Eli M. Orowitz, Famous Players-Lasky exploitation representative at the Philadelphia, Pa., exchange, recently conducted an exploitation campaign that was also a charitable enterprise of note.

"Humoresque" was to open at the Victoria theatre, Harrisburg, Pa., and Mr. Orowitz determined to make the opening a big event. Accordingly, he invited the newsboys and orphans of the city to a special showing. Then he proceeded to make the most of the occasion, gaining the assistance of the Navy Recruiting Band and the cooperation of the press.

The latter was especially willing to give aid because of the fact that the mayor had been persuaded to permit publication of the theatre invitation under his proclamation, the finishing touch to a well conducted campaign.

The youngsters were gathered at a vantage point and arranged in marching order. Then the letters spelling "Humoresque" were given to the boys in the front rank, who displayed them in the proper order. Other signs contained the necessary words to make up the sentence, "We're going to the Victoria theatre to see 'Humoresque.' It's a Paramount picture."

The net result of the enterprise was a series of newspaper articles and the establishment of a new box office record at the Victoria.

Another result that should not be underestimated was that the hundreds of boys who attended the showing, boys who would not otherwise have had an opportunity of seeing the picture, were given entertainment of a high order.

This is charity. It is also exploitation.

STUNTS

The Chicago "Evening American" is providing exhibitors with one-sheets in red and green and holly border with which to advertise the fifth annual "Go-To-Movie Week," sponsored by that publication and given wide publicity in its pages. The poster reads, "Coming, Christmas to New Year's. Fifth Annual Go-To-Movie Week. Arrange now for a Go-To-Movie Week party. The greatest picture of the whole year will be shown here for your entertainment. Go-To-Movie Week, Christmas to New Year, has been made a Chicago institution by the Chicago Evening American."

Thomas A. Brady, manager of the Associated Producers, Inc., exchange at Buffalo, N. Y., arranged a showing of "The Last of the Mohicans" before the members of the New York State Teachers' Association, in convention at Rochester, gaining for the picture the endorsements of those present. At New York City, Boston, and Johnstown, Pa., the precedent has been duplicated with similar success.

The Ascher Brothers theatres in Chicago designated the matinee performance of Friday, December 24, Kiddies Christmas Party and provided crackerjack and other good things for the little ones, a specially selected program being presented.

Fifteen models wearing creations of a New York modiste were employed in a fashion show at the DelMonte Theatre, St. Louis, Mo. A concealed speaker linked the successive figures in a dramatic dialogue in which he posed as the fashion arbiter, the climax coming when juveniles in wedding array brought from him the confession that he had no control over this type of dress. The revue gained strength by reason of the dramatic treatment.

H. K. Robinson, manager of the Terminal Theatre, Newark, N. J., utilized the stills from Pearl White's Fox production, "The Thief," to induce eighteen merchant advertisers to take special space aggregating three pages in which the photos were used as illustrations in advertising furniture, pianos, talking machines, watches, paints, automobiles, weather strips, drugs, screens, rugs, corsets, millinery, silverware and gowns. The biggest Sunday business in Terminal history was one of the results.

W. H. Ostenburg, Jr., manager of the Orpheum Theatre, Scottsbluff, Neb., sent to his mailing list postcards bearing no marks save a reproduction of the brand applied to the wife's flesh in Goldwyn's "The Branding Iron." At the psychological moment he sent another card giving the dates of the engagement and the other essential facts. The results more than warranted the double expense.
DO YOU RECOGNIZE ANY OF THESE STARS?

Art Institute Offers Gold Medal For Best Still on Any Production

A still photography contest is to be conducted by the Maryland Institute of Fine Arts of Baltimore under the auspices of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers between February 1 and April 16. A gold medal is the high award.

This contest is the outgrowth of the recent visit to New York of Professor Alon Bement, director of the institute, at which time he was a guest of the A. M. P. A. In a talk he voiced a desire to do something that would aid in winning substantial recognition for motion pictures as a distinctly American art.

Three Awards Offered

The medal will be awarded to the cameraman or still photographer actually engaged at a studio. Judgment will rest on the following pictures submitted:

The best two artistic pictures—one soft focus if the photographer chooses, and one a straight photograph—for magazine publication. One picture should be of the leading lady or star and the other should be a study of several characters and should tell a story.

Five Judges Chosen

The best two pictures for newspaper reproduction. These should be clear and contrastive, with every line sharply defined. One should picture the star or featured players and the other should picture not more than three figures. They should have news value.

The best set of six pictures for lobby display. One must have poster qualities and the others should show the pictorial features of the production.

The merits of the photographs will be passed upon by James Montgomery Flagg, Baron DeMeyer, W. Z. Curtis, Otto Kurth and Arthur James.

Fay Tincher and Ed Barry Will Co-Star in Comedies

Two featured players appear in "Dining Room, Kitchen and Sink," the latest Christie comedy to be issued through Educational exchanges.

Fay Tincher and Eddie Barry are the two players, each of whom has heretofore been featured alone. However, a point is being made by Educational that the new Christies do not rely for their interest or quality on single players but that in all of them there are a group of players of unusual ability and with strong fan following. It is announced that this policy will be pursued in all future productions.

Urges Film Titles in Foreign Languages

U. S. Agent Says Pictures Are Great Factor in Instructing Aliens

Commissioner of Immigration Frederick Willsis at the last luncheon of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, made an earnest plea that embryo-Americans, be given a deeper and more sympathetic understanding of American ideals through the medium of the motion picture.

Proposition Is Considered

Acting on the commission's statement that a big step in this direction would be made if the pictures at present shown at Ellis Island were titled in foreign languages, a committee of the A. M. P. A. has put the proposition before the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and the committee on Americanism. It is expected that definite action will be taken immediately.

Commissioner Willsis forcefully brought home the need of a more sympathetic reception at our gates of aliens. He explained the psychological condition in which they arrive here—not knowing just what to expect, ready for anything, and sincerely anxious to know more of this country at the earliest possible moment.

Two Languages Understood

"There are two languages that everybody can understand, no matter what his tongue," said the commissioner, "they are music and pictures. Down at Ellis Island the thousands of immigrants are swayed irresistibly by music and motion pictures. But more than anything else they understand and feel motion pictures. They are human—hungry for knowledge of their new home and for attention. The screen could be a wonderful educator to these home-hungry thousands. The even more widespread inculcation of American ideals into motion pictures would redound immeasurably to the benefit of this country at large.

"Virtually every nationality has a large representation at Ellis Island at all times. And they actually go crazy over motion pictures, so eager are they for information and the universal human sympathy they get from these movies. Imagine, then, how much wider and deeper and more lasting would be the appeal of the films if the titles were in a language that a large number would understand."

Jenks, Scenarioist, Now With Metro Writing Staff

George Elwood Jenks, author of the screen versions of many of the big special productions filmed by Jesse D. Hampton, has joined the story producing department at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood.

As his first task under the contract just negotiated by Bayard Veiller director of production at Hollywood, he has completed a screen version of John Fleming Wilson's "Uncharted Seas," a story of the frozen North, in which Alice Lake is being starred. He has been a writer of scenarios and original stories for the screen for several years, and many of his adaptations are "The Trail of the Axe", for Dustin Farnum; "A Woman of Pleasure", starring Blanche Sweet; "The Man Who Turned White" and "The Pagan God" for H. B. Warner, and "The Parish Priest" for William Desmond.

Detroit Official Declares Tourneur Has Portrayed Successfully and Triumphanty the Wonderful Characters Which Cooper Created

After viewing Maurice Tourneur’s “The Last of the Mohicans,” from James Fenimore Cooper’s famous Indian novel, Royal A. Baker, Detroit police censor, wrote the following letter to the Detroit office of Associated Producers:

“It is not with unexpected surprise that Maurice Tourneur has made the first motion picture classic, for it was merely by a hair’s breadth that he failed in reaching this point in ‘Treasure Island.’

Declares It an Achievement

“The Last of the Mohicans’ is decidedly a cinematographic achievement—not a small achievement, but a far reaching one. The wonderful characters created by Cooper, in probably America’s greatest historical novel have been by Maurice Tourneur so successfully and triumphantly portrayed, that the dreams of fiction have stepped out of the book in living, breathing human beings, with their trials, tribulations and romances.

“The hero of the story is a savage, and never for a second are we allowed to forget that fact; because of this, never for a second is our intelligence shocked or insulted by the love that the savage portrays for the heroine of the story.

New Path Is Opened

“All this goes conclusively to prove that motion pictures are still in their infancy and that Maurice Tourneur has opened a path to a field which seemed to belong exclusively to the novel.”

Another commendatory letter was received from J. H. Wilson, supervisor of visual instruction for the board of education in Detroit, who said: “Permit me to say that the board of education will consider it a privilege to cooperate with any theatre in the city desiring to exhibit ‘The Last of the Mohicans,’ and we will be glad to notify parents in any community in the city, through the schools, concerning special dates for showings. I believe this film to be one of especial value.”

Educational Trade Mark Will Be Made Familiar By a Special Campaign

Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., has announced that it has adopted a trade mark that will appear on all of its films and in its advertising.

For the design the Greek lamp which has been identified with Educational has been retained. In case of titles on the films themselves these will be animated with the smoke spelling out the words “Educational Pictures.” All of the posters, lobby photos, etc., will also bear the design and a campaign will be conducted through the trade papers to familiarize exhibitors with the new trade mark.

Pearl White's "The Thief" Booked in Large and Small Cities of Country

That showmen got a good line on Pearl White as star of features in the William Fox presentation of the former serial star in "The White Moll" and "Tiger's Cub" is demonstrated by the quality and quantity of bookings on "The Thief" that the Fox contract department has reported. Aside from countless bookings in smaller towns, the Fox organization has contracted "The Thief" in every large city from Coast to Coast.

Miss White made her appearance in her third Fox production on Sunday following Thanksgiving. The picture proved to be "just the ticket" for showmen, who in that booking are said to have warded off the slump in box office takings that generally follows a holiday period. Reports are still coming in from all directions confirming the contention of Mr. Fox that Pearl White would be an even better "draw" when she became established as a one-presentation star than she was in serials.

Off for a Record

And with "The White Moll" and "Tiger's Cub" she became established as demonstrated in box office takes in the printed expression of editorial opinion, and in the manner audiences received her presentations. Now comes "The Thief," an offering that is said to be off to a better start than either of its predecessors.

The showing of "The Thief" at the Terminal theatre, Newark, N. J., was a success to such an extent that house records fell despite strongest opposition, according to statements issued by H. K. Robinson, manager. This was the earliest report on any engagement played by "The Thief."

Launches Ad Campaign

Manager Robinson made the Pearl White production the basis of some active hustling which resulted in an elaborate local newspaper campaign. He went personally to local merchants, in co-operation with the advertising staff of the Star-Telegram, and put stills from "The Thief" into every advertisement that was included in the resulting three-page spread preceding the photoplay's opening.

M. L. Markowitz plays "The Thief" at his Strand theatre, San Francisco; in Chicago the H. C. Moor Company plays Miss White's new one at its Rose, Boston, and Aleazar theatres, and Rowland & Clark have contracted their Savoy theatre, Pittsburgh, for "The Thief." Among other showmen in the larger cities who have booked Miss White's latest are:

Expects to Close With the Independent Exchanges

On Output

Coincident with launching the exploitation and teaser campaign on the initial Sunrise Pictures Corporation publication, "The Price of Silence," starring Peggy Hyland, Winfield F. Kelley, general sales manager, will start on a tour of the important film centers to close with independent exchanges on the picture. Kelley also may close on future Sunrise productions.

Will Aid in Advertising

Through an arrangement perfected by Nat Dorfman, director of publicity and advertising, state right buyers will be aided in their exploitation of "The Price of Silence" both from New York and by a personal visit to the various exchanges by either Mr. Dorfman or another newspaperman.

President Max Carnot announces that the Sunrise company is just as anxious to sign up independent buyers for future pictures as the company is desirous of disposing its first Peggy Hyland feature.

Story Is Wholesome

"State right buyers," said President Carnot, "will get a true insight into the style of production which Sunrise will release from its initial production, which is taken from the world famous novel, 'At the Mercy of Tiberus.' This story, to my mind, is one of the cleanest, wholesomest and one of the most interesting that I have ever read, and it even makes a more exciting film. It should prove one of the biggest money-makers offered the independent buyer in many years."

The company plans to open its own exchange for the Greater New York and northern New Jersey territory within a fortnight. Local exhibitors who book "The Price of Silence" will be aided by twenty-four sheet stands which will blanket the city.

Mary Pickford’s “The Love Light” Is to be Published on January 9

Production Was Written and Directed by Frances Marion—Third “Big Four” Film That The Star Has Made

Mary Pickford’s third “Big Four” production, “The Love Light,” will be published on January 9, Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists, announces. “The Love Light” was written and directed by Frances Marion.

This Frances Marion story is entirely different from any in which the star has appeared. She is said to have been given unusual opportunities to display her exceptional talents, and in it she “returns to the screen in all her glory, with her wealth of golden curls, her smile and her inimitable personality.”

Impression Is Lasting

Concerning this production a United Artists official says, “The Love Light” will doubtless go down as the big picture of 1921, principally because of the wonderful and lasting impressions this exceptional production will make upon everyone who sees it and takes to heart its message. The story is filled with delightful humor, pathetic appeal, and has a wealth of character and keen artistry, in the title role of which Miss Pickford attains heights she has never before reached.”

Miss Marion obtained the material for this production while in Italy in company with Miss Pickford. The entire plot was worked out in Europe. Because of the nature of the story, the star brought players from abroad for several of the roles.

Europeans Support Star

Among those coming from Europe who support the star are Jean De Briac, once Sarah Bernhardt’s leading man, Raymond Bloomer, Edward Phillips, Albert Prescott, Evelyn Dumo and George Rigas. Charles Rosher and Henry Cronjager handled the photography. Stephen Gosson supervised the art work.

The story follows: Angela and her brothers live in a fishing village near the sea. The brothers and another she loved go to sea and Angela is left to tend the lighthouse. Then comes an imposter into the village. Angela loved and trusted him, the self-seeker using this love to further his operations, thereby bringing catastrophe into the village, and in the havoc and wreckage Angela’s brother lost his life.

Husband Is Cast Off

Realizing the type of man she had married, Angela cast him off. But the village did not realize her innocence and they made her an outcast and took her baby from her. After wandering about the old familiar scenes and haunts for a time she met the woman to whom her child had been given. The foster mother who had come to love the baby feared it would be taken from her and she hurried aboard a fishing vessel.

A storm cast the boat back onto the rocks, the lighthouse signal failed and Angela in desperation fired her own home as a rescue fire. The baby was saved and then, secure in the love of the boyhood sweetheart who had returned, she and her little one found a haven and great happiness.

Christie Comedy Shows

Views of Film Colony

“Movie Mad,” a two-reel Christie comedy, which will be issued through Educational exchanges early in January, is said to be the first comedy ever made that is really based on “kidding” film comedies.

It is based on the admiration of a visiting young woman in Los Angeles for a comedian and the desperate means to which her sweetheart resorts to cure her of the infatuation. The picture opens with aeroplane views of the film colony, showing the various studios. The picture marks the resumption of the work of Dorothy Devere in two-reel comedies after having been loaned to Charles Ray as his leading woman in “Forty-five Minutes from Broadway.” Neal Burns is the other featured player.
Moore, O'Brien and All-Star Films Are on Select's January Schedule

Three productions are announced for January publication by Selznick Pictures Corporation, and these include "The Chicken in the Case," in which Owen Moore is seen in another of his farcical characterizations; "Worlds Apart," starring Eugene O'Brien, and "You Can't Kill Love," an enthralling story of love, romance and adventure interpreted by a strong array of screen talent.

"The Chicken in the Case" is an original story written and directed by Victor Heerman, and picturized by Sarah Y. Mason. Mr. Moore, following his success in the current Selznick picture, "The Poor Sperm," is declared to romp home a box office winner in his latest starring vehicle. He portrays the role of a gay man about town.

Miss Perry in Lead

In the supporting cast are Katherine Perry, famous Ziegfeld Follies girl and well-known beauty, in the feminine role; Teddy Sampson, Vivia Ogden, Walter Walker and Edgar Nelson. The production is scheduled for publication on January 10.

The age old philosophy that love is indestructible and that its holy flame burns forever is given a new angle in "You Can't Kill Love," directed by Burton George.

Heading the cast are Hedda Hopper, who plays the leading feminine role, and William B. Davidson, in the leading male part. Maurice Costello, Betty Hilyburn, Charles Gerard, Warren Cook, Patrick Hartigan and Red Eagle are the other members of the cast. Michael J. Phillips wrote the story and it was picturized by Edward J. Montagne. "You Can't Kill Love" is set for January 20 issue.

Shoot Picturesque Scenes

"Worlds Apart" reveals Eugene O'Brien in the role of a young man who is spurned by his best girl because his fortune is not as great as that of his rival. Many picturesque exteriors form a striking background to the production, and one of these shows a realistic fox hunting scene in which a number of prominent society people participated.

Prints on both the one and two-reel comedies will be filled the schedules through January already have been received in the New York offices of Educational.

THE MOTION PICTURE PRODUCER’S CREED FOR THE COMING YEAR

By J. PARKER READ, JR.
(Member of the Associated Producers, Inc., and Producer of the Louise Glauk Specials)

I believe that the Producer and the Exhibitor are the joint Guardians of the Greatest Medium known to the World for influencing the Thought of the People—the Motion Picture.

I believe that this Guardianship should be held as an Expression of a National Confidence and that we be able to give a Worthy Account always of that trust reposed in us.

I believe that everything in Life that is sincere and worthy merits our most earnest efforts of portrayal.

I believe that the Screen through its Universal Humanity should be made to reach and speak to all Men and all Nations.

I believe that since the World is our Stage we should be unhampered by narrow prejudice.

I believe that our Creative horizon expands so rapidly that what has been done in the Past but faintly foreshadows the Possibilities of the Future.

I believe that with the co-operation of the People, both Exhibitors and Producers will give to the World greater and more uplifting benefits that will contribute to the realization of the Great Ideal of the Screen.

EXHIBITORS HERALD

“The Spice of the Program” Is Slogan of Educational Exchanges

Launches a Campaign to Impress Upon Exhibitors That Company Can Supply Everything But Features and News Weekly

With the adoption of the slogan “the spice of the program,” Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., has started an intensive campaign through all of its exchanges to impress upon exhibitors that it does not stand in the position of an organization able to supply this or that brand of short subjects, but that it can supply every portion of the program except the feature and the news weekly every week in the year.

This plan has been adopted since it was found that some exhibitors have not realized the immense growth that the organization has had in the past year and the immense increase in the product that it has handled. Rather than an effort to make immediate sales the exchange men throughout the United States and Canada will be instructed to devote their time to explaining to exhibitors the variety and the volume of pictures that it is now handling.

Publish Chester’s Monthly

In the two reel comedy field Educational is now publishing a Christie every week and a Chester, a Mermaid and a Torchy comedy every month. In single reel comedies it now has a weekly issue, the Vanity and Gaity series alternating. The Bruce Scenics Beautiful and the Chester Outings will hereafter alternate, affording a weekly publication. In addition there will be a number of other scenic pictures, while the company will continue its policy of announcing specials in one or two reels whenever a picture is held to possess the highest degree of box office power. Other special pictures such as the Rufus Steel two reel dramas will be distributed.

In addition to this Educational claims to have the largest library of any short subject organization and in many territories this claim has not been shown, while leading theatres such as the Rialto, Rivoli and Capitol, New York, often call upon this collection for pictures that have been exhibited, but which are deemed worthy of repeating.

Specialize in Field

“We are doing this,” says President E. W. Hammons, “to bring home to the exhibitor realization of the fact that he has in us an organization that supplies everything he needs except the feature and the news weekly. We believe that we have now firmly established the quality of every one of our releases, but at the same time it is true that exhibitors have gotten in the habit of shopping around for their various productions without realizing that they can get them all in one exchange, in exchanges that specialize in this particular field and that can furnish them better product for all their needs and better service with it than any other organization.

“Most exhibitors do not realize that we are now working on a basis of 230 releases a year. We mean to bring home to the showman who makes money out of this or that brand of two reel comedies that our other product means as much to his theatre. To do that we have had to maintain the same high standard of product, and we feel confident that we have done that.”

Salesmen Are Added to Alexander Film Staff

“Eddie” Bell and Abe Levy of Special Pictures Corporation, Jerry Wilson and Arthur Gershwin of New York Independent Sales and Matty Cahan, formerly with Select, have resigned their respective positions to join the sales force of Alexander Film Corporation.

The latter has recently taken over the entire output of Triangle Film Corporation, which includes 150 features and fifty-two single and two-reel comedies for distribution in Greater New York and northern New Jersey.

1921 Will Be a Banner Year for Reelcraft Pictures Corporation

Nineteen-twenty-one is to be a banner year for Reelcraft Pictures Corporation, according to the announcement of President R. C. Cropper.

"Nineteen-twenty-one is to be a big year for Reelcraft," says Cropper. "Starting January 1 we will release a new series of releases for each week in that month. First will come the series of Al Christie produced single reel comedies, featuring Betty Compson and Billy Rhodes, made for the Mutual program and now reissued by Reelcraft.

Scenic Series to Start

"The following week the Reelcraft Scenic Nature Beautiful series will start on a weekly release schedule. This series has been nearly a year in the making, cameramen have covered nearly every part of the United States, and many thousand feet of film made in foreign countries have been received. Each release is to picture the beauty spots of nature with a thread of continuity throughout that will maintain the interest, for instance "The Spirit of the Trapper," "Wind Goddess" and "Crater Lake" all have a cast of players throughout the Scenic views.

"The third week brings to the exhibitors our long promised series of single reel comedies featuring little Bud Duncan in his "Bud and His Buddies" comedies. It has taken six months to arrange and perfect this series. We expect this series to be a record breaker.

Introduce New Comedian

"The last week in January will introduce our new comedian, George Clarke, in a series of fifty-two single reel slap stick Paragon comedies. Slap stick is to be the rule throughout, and of the broadest kind.

"All of the above represent our beginning for the new year. For February we have two more series of two reel comedies now being prepared. March will also introduce additional product.

"Our distributing organization will also be increased during the coming year, and more offices opened to care for our rapidly increasing business."

Inter-Ocean Reports That Foreign Trade Is Heavy

Despite the fact that there is what some local motion picture exporters declare as "a period of inactivity in the foreign market," Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, specializing in the distribution of American-made films in foreign film markets reports a good business in trade.

In a statement issued recently, Gus Schlesinger, manager of the department of foreign film sales, makes mention of the fact that the company has disposed of numerous productions for many choice foreign territories. Prominent among the sales listed is the disposition of the series of Black Diamond comedies to one of the largest film renters operating in China for physical distribution throughout the Chinese republic. "Below the Deadline," the Ascher production, also has been sold for territorial distribution throughout China. The same picture is reported as having been disposed of at a record figure to a well known film renter operating in the Japanese territory for distribution throughout Japan, Formosa and Korea.

Hank Mann Comedies

Proving Popular Abroad

Hank Mann's popularity as a comedian among the foreign film fans, is attested by the number of sales recently closed for the Arrow-Hank Mann comedies. Guy R. Hammond, general export manager, announces that the entire series of twenty-six two-reel Mann comedies were sold to Suzuki of International Motion Picture Company, who bought the series for Japan; Diaz, representing Gonzales of Porto Rico for Porto Rico, Santo Domingo and Haiti, and Joseph K. Lamy for Cuba.

Martha Mansfield and Tearle to Star in Series of Selznick Films

Pictures Featuring Both Players Have Been Put In Production, the Former for Publication In March, the Latter in February

Martha Mansfield and Conway Tearle are to be starred in a series of productions by Selznick, according to an announcement by Lewis J. Selznick. Each player will make four pictures in the first series, the initial ones now being in production.

Miss Mansfield's first will be published on March 30 and Mr. Tearle's on February 20. Alan Crossland is directing Miss Mansfield and the Tearle subject, "Society Snobs," will be a Hobart Henley production.

Public Demanded Change

The addition of Miss Mansfield and Mr. Tearle to the Selznick array of stars which includes Eugene O'Brien, Elaine Hammerstein and Owen Moore, is the outgrowth of a popular demand on the part of exhibitors and public, according to Selznick.

Miss Mansfield, long hailed as one of America's prettiest magazine cover girls, endeared herself to the public almost over night. She was born in New York and, following her first stage appearance in William A. Brady's big spectacle, "Op 'O My, Thumb," which was produced some six years ago at the Manhattan Opera House, was besieged by noted artists for sittings. For two years she gave up the stage. She then returned to the footlights and was cast for a role in the Ziegfeld-Dillingham production, "The Century Girl." Max Linder, famous French screen comedian, then engaged her as his leading lady.

Returns to Stage

Later she returned to the stage to play a prominent role in A. H. Woods' play, "On With the Dance." Following the New York run of that play she appeared in both the Ziegfeld Follies and the Midnight Frolic. Miss Mansfield's next public appearance was made in support of Eugene O'Brien in the Selznick picture, "The Perfect Lover." Later she played an important role in the picturization of "Civilian Clothes," and John Barrymore selected her as his leading lady in the screen version of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde." Miss Mansfield's latest appearance in Selznick picture is opposite Eugene, O'Brien in "The Wonderful Chance."

Long in Theatricals

Conway Tearle has long been associated with the screen, following a successful stage career in plays starring Sir Charles Wyndham, Ellen Terry, Billie Burke, Ethel Barrymore, Viola Allen and others. The screen plays in which Mr. Tearle has played prominent roles include "The Fall of the Romanoffs," "Stella Maris," "The Reason Why," a Select picture, "Virtuous Wives," "A Virtuous Vamp," "Mind-the-Paint Girl," "Two Weeks," and other successful screen dramas.

Reynolds Opens New York Office of Renco to Exploit Myrtle Reed Novels

H. J. Reynolds, president of Renco Film Company, has arrived in New York for the purpose of establishing a permanent New York headquarters for the exploitation of Myrtle Reed's novels, for which he has exclusive rights and which will be produced as features in the near future.

"Lavender and Old Lace" has been completed under the able direction of Lloyd Ingraham, and Mr. Reynolds is in New York for the purpose of ascertaining the best method of marketing this Myrtle Reed product. The attractiveness of the story is evidenced by the fact that many offers have already been received.

Reynolds Makes Statement

Being interviewed, Mr. Reynolds is quoted as follows:

"For several years I have considered the wonderful possibilities for motion picture material of Myrtle Reed's books, especially her best known book, 'Lavender and Old Lace,' but up to last year I felt that the public taste was not quite ripe for a picture of this sort.

"My observation has been that the public has more or less grown weary of sex problem productions; also, the big, spectacular and costly productions very often mean little to the average audience, and I firmly believe that the time has arrived when a sweet and refreshing story with heart interest would appeal strongly to the public taste."

Appeals to Every One

"In 'Lavender and Old Lace' we have a picture that not only appeals to women, but on account of its laughter provoking comedy appeals just as strongly to men and children. This is a demonstrated fact and not theory."

"Before producing this picture, 10,000 synopses of the book were mailed to persons representing all walks of life. A questionnaire was enclosed and from the returns we were able to ascertain an average of 80 out of every 100 persons consulted have read this book. We have also received thousands of answers from ministers and school teachers pledging their moral support to this production on account of its elevating influence."

November Shows an Increase of 80 Per Cent in Hodkinson Sales Country Divided Into Districts During Drive Which Was Conducted During Month—Record Is Tribute to Company’s President.

November, 1920, has passed into history as the record month for sales since the inception of W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. The total sales for the month in actual figures showed an increase of 80 per cent over any previous month.

This is considered a tribute on the part of the sales organization to Mr. Hodkinson and a tribute on the part of exhibitors to the president of the distribution company.

Divide Into Districts
Starting out on the first day of November, with the slogan “Nothing Can Stop Us,” the members of the Hodkinson sales organization proceeded to justify this slogan. The country was divided into three major and four minor districts, each district assigned to a supervisor.

P. N. Brinch, sales manager, outlined to his organization the lines along which the drive was to be conducted and quotas were assigned to each district. As an added incentive to put the Hodkinson month drive over the top, gold watches suitably engraved were offered for the highest percentage of sales, and a silver cigarette case was offered to each member who reached the quota of sales assigned to him in collections.

Cash Commission Given
A liberal cash commission was also offered to each branch reaching a fixed quota. This commission to be shared by the representative and sales force.

The trend of exhibitor opinion seemed to be Hodkinson-ward, it is said. Letters from exhibitors to branches and direct to the main office and reports from the field indicated this. Mr. Hodkinson had been since the inception of this corporation, waiting just such a moment to show exhibitors that his proposition was one which had for its basic principle a square deal for the exhibitor.

A comparison of Hodkinson publications during 1919 and during 1920, when such pictures as “Sex,” “Riders of the Dawn,” “Love Madness,” “Down Home,” and “The U. P. Trail,” were offered to exhibitors, will show the progress which had been made in the production line.

While new product was being obtained a sales organization was being welded together, an organization which knew Mr. Hodkinson’s plans and knew that they must be successful.

Praise Supervisors
A great slice of the credit for the success of the Hodkinson month drive is due to the district supervisors. Joe Bloom, Kansas City supervisor; H. S. Beardsley, Atlantic division supervisor; and W. F. Seymour, Chicago district supervisor, had remarkable success in aiding the men obtain business. Working with R. Melcher, Omaha representative, Joe Bloom signed up $9,000 worth of contracts the first week of the drive; Mr. Seymour working with Hurn of Cincinnati, signed up a $5,000 contract in Columbus, Ohio; and H. S. Beardsley, working with Mr. H. hand of Buffalo, signed up a $5,000 contract with the Palace theatre.

All the figures are now in for Hodkinson month, and to W. O. Edmunds of San Francisco goes the gold watch for the greatest volume of sales during the drive. To R. Melcher of Omaha, the gold watch for the greatest increase in cash collections during the month. Twenty-seven members of the organization qualified for a silver cigarette case and twenty-two branches qualified for big commission checks.

Holman Day’s Stories of Maine Will Be Produced for Pathé Publication

 Millions of Americans who have read the stories of “Down East” by Holman Day, the Maine bard and litterateur, will soon see his works picturized.

Pathé Exchange, Inc., announces the acquisition of “The Holman Day Series.” This series is to be composed of two reel productions starring Edgar Jones, and will be based upon the stories written by Mr. Day around his experiences in the Maine woods.

Publishes Books of Poems

For twenty-five years Holman Day has been writing these stories, and he has had published three books of poems about Maine, and the quaint people of “down east”; eighty short stories, frequent articles in the Saturday Evening Post, stories in Red Book and Country Gentleman, the Captain Sprout sea stories, and other literary efforts.

A number of his stories have appeared in motion picture form. “The Red Lane,” “Squire Finn,” a novel produced with Maclyn Arbuckle as the star; “King Spruce,” with Mitchell Lewis, and other celebrated outdoor pictures, are to Mr. Day’s account.

The Holman Day series will be produced in the actual country wherein the author found his atmosphere and his characters. Edgar Jones Productions, Inc., has established headquarters at Augusta, Me.

Use Well-Known Locations

Of the pictures that have been completed, such nationally known places were used for location as Moosehead Lake, Dead River, Lake Umbagog, the Upper Penobscot and the Kennebec River.

Pictorial beauty will be a great factor in the Holman Day series, as well as the stirring dramatic vein of the stories. Nowhere in the United States, or, in fact, in the world, is the grandeur of nature more pronounced than in Maine. Giant trees, shimmering rivers, magnificent lakes, in fact everything that goes for scenic splendor, are to be found in rock bound Maine.

Elaborate Production Plans for 1921 Made

Edward Soman Will Direct Four Specials Filmed By Frothingham

Elaborate production plans for 1921 have been outlined by J. L. Frothingham, who recently entered the ranks of independent producers. During a recent trip to New York, Mr. Frothingham signed a contract with W. W. Hodkinson Corporation for a series of four specials to be directed by Edward Soman.

The first of the specials will be a picturization of "The Other Woman," a novel by Norah Davis. The others will be announced later.

Jane Novak in Cast

In the cast of "The Other Woman" are Helen Jerome Eddy, Jane Novak, Jerome Patrick, Joseph J. Dowling, Frankie Lee, William Conklin and Aggie Herring. Tony Gaudio, until recently with the Allan Dwan Company, well-known cameraman, has charge of the photography, and David Howard is director Soman’s right-hand man.

Mr. Frothingham is no newcomer in photoplay production. For nearly three years he has been producing at the Bruntont studio, of which he is a member of the board of directors. He produced several series of photoplays starring Bessie Barriscale.

Produced Two Specials

Early in the fall, he entered into an arrangement with W. W. Hodkinson for the making of two specials in which Miss Barriscale appeared, the first of which, "The Broken Gate," a picturization of Emerson Hough’s novel, was a December publication. The other is an adaptation of a magazine story, "The Living Child," by Mary Lerner, the film version of which has been named "The Red Horizon."

Pathe Gets Unusual Shots of the Statue of Liberty for News Reel
Pictures Are Included in the Final Issue of the Tenth Anniversary Celebration—Other Interesting Scenes Are Screened

Nobody but Bartholdi, the immortal sculptor of America's noblest and most picturesque monument, ever has enjoyed as intimate a view of the Statue of Liberty as is shown in Pathe News No. 99, which is the final issue of the period of the tenth anniversary celebration.

In a most spectacular manner "Miss Liberty" becomes the heroine of the "stunt" feature of this issue. By special permission of the United States army, she submitted to the attention of human pygmies who scrambled about over her classic features and made hazardous journeys among the folds of her draperies, while cameramen took close-ups of the proceedings.

Hugeness and Beauty of Statue Is Shown

As never before, the statue of "Liberty Enlightening the World" from its splendid position in New York harbor is made familiar to the masses throughout this country, emphasizing the hugeness and beauty of France's great gift to her sister republic. Men are seen climbing down the statue's arm from atop the torch, which is 305 feet from the surface of the Bay. Several find ample room to rest in the shallow of the neck.

From this flash one gains a clear idea of the immense size of the statue, whose total weight is 450,000 pounds. One high climber gets the first close view ever shown of the scroll, which is encircled by a forefinger five feet in circumference. Upon the crown there is ample room to seat twenty people.

Other Events Pictured

Men are seen standing high above the harbor on tips of "rays." From every possible point of view, "Miss Liberty" is shot—from the top down, and from the pedestal upward. The film itself is the best demonstration of the thoroughness with which the Statue of Liberty is thus made familiar to millions of people who share in the gift which France made to the United States.

For graphic representations of world events, this number of Pathe News more than sustains the reputation which its service has earned during the ten years of its existence. In Mexico the ceremonies of the inauguration of President Alvaro Obregon are pictured. The president and members of his family are seen leaving for their home.

In England, for the benefit of the War Memorial Hospital, horses with their riders are seen in daring leaps of leaping through high spouting flames.

Harding Makes Speech

For the first time President Wilson submits his message to congress through a representative. His successor, Senator Harding, is pictured making his farewell address to the senate. He is the first president-elect to speak on the floor of that body.

A magnificent panorama of the Italian city of Naples with Vesuvius in the background is pictured from a dirigible, from which is photographed Pompei from a height of 3,000 feet.

Theodore Roosevelt is seen speaking while on his nation-wide tour for preparedness. The arrival of President Wilson at Brest, France, on December 13, 1918, is pictured. He also is pictured with King Albert of Belgium. The ending of the biggest war in history is indicated in the signing of the Treaty of Versailles, on June 28, 1919.

Following publication of the last issue several camera "correspondents" met in New York with Emanuel Cohen, editor. Among those at the supper party were following from the home staff: A. Richard, Henry di Siena, John Cohen, Al Wetzel, Bert Green, cartoonist; H. Blauvelt, Harry Harde. And from other cities: Jake Coolidge, Boston; Tom Baltzell, Washington, and C. W. Chapman of Chicago.
Discusses Importance
Of Music to Program
Synchronized Official Says Good Music Has Aided in Theatre Development

In a discussion of the relative importance of music and motion pictures in the theatre of today an executive of the recently organized Synchronized Scenario Music Service, 64 East Jackson boulevard, Chicago, draws interesting comparison between the theatre of the present time and that of a decade ago. "Today," he says, "a theatre standing is determined almost solely by the quality of its musical entertainment."

Aided in Development

To support that statement it is pointed out that the early attempts to establish motion picture theatres in downtown districts and in direct competition with legitimate houses could not have succeeded had not a superior class of music been offered.

The fact that the same pictures may be obtained by all classes of theatres is designated as responsible for the important part that music has in the success of the present day playhouse, the conclusion being that the exhibitor who supplies the best music is practically certain to attract the crowds.

Demand Is Supplied

It is upon this principle that the new concern bases its activities. It is to supply the demand for better music in connection with motion picture presentation that the company was organized.

Under the direction of Carl Edourade, musical director of the Strand, New York; James C. Bradford, formerly of the Broadway, New York, and C. J. Breil, who arranged the score for "The Birth of a Nation," music scenarios are made up for every production published by any concern.

These are supplied in book form to exhibitors and used by orchestra leaders or single accompanists as direct musical translation of the picture.

Directors Go East

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 21—Marshall Neilan, Al Kaufman, Allen Holubar and Dorothy Phillips (Mrs. Holubar), left here Sunday via Santa Fe for New York, where they will spend the holidays.

Exhibitor Committee
Is Named to Confer
With M. P. Operators

At the last meeting of the Chicago unit of the Illinois Exhibitors Alliance and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America a committee was appointed by President L. L. Brumhild to confer with officials of the operators' union, whose contract with the theatre men expires shortly.

Permanent executives were elected as follows: L. L. Brumhild, president; Paul Satter, treasurer; Adolph Powell, financial secretary, and William Sweeney, secretary.

Arc-Controls Sold
To Lubliner & Trinz

Exhibitors Supply to Furnish All Accessories for New Chicago House

Exhibitors Supply Company, on the first day of a thirty-day trial drive on Peerless Automatic Arc Controls, sold the Lubliner & Trinz chain of theatres in Chicago thirty-four of the Arc-Controls.

Chain Is 100 Per Cent

This makes the Lubliner & Trinz chain 100 per cent on this article. They are installing them in every one of the theatres they operate, and have ordered them for the new 4,600 seat theatre nearing completion at Kedzie and Madison streets.

Exhibitors' Supply is not only furnishing the new theatre with Arc-Controls, but is installing 3 type-S Simplex Projectors, 2 double hundred Transverters, a 25-foot Minusa Screen, 3 Simplex ticket selling machines, 3 Kromolite Lens, and the complete equipment for the projection room which will be one of the most complete in the middle west.

Has Three Ticket Machines

The house will have a three-window box office, with three girls selling tickets which necessitates three ticket selling machines.

According to President Dutton of Exhibitors' Supply, its policy of service and courtesy in the supply business pays, as is evidenced in the business received from Lubliner & Trinz.

Curwood Production
Establishes Records

"Back to God's Country" Is Considered Successful from Many Angles

"Back to God's Country" has established five distinct records as a result of its success as a special First National attraction.

First, it established Canada as a successful producer of motion pictures and paved the way for other big successes to follow. It proved James Oliver Curwood, the author, on a royalty earning basis which is bringing him an average of from $35,000 upwards a picture. It proved that David M. Hartford was a successful director providing he got the managerial co-operation. It demonstrated that Neil Shipman in her two previous Curwood successes, "Baree, Son of Kazan" and "God's Country and the Woman," were not accidental. As a star of outdoor productions Neil Shipman stands paramount.

It proved that Ernest Shipman's judgment in selecting the author, the story, the star and the director was good judgment and opened the door to a success which has repeated itself many times within the current year.

In addition to these five records it has earned for the exhibitors of the United States and Canada over half million dollars and has rolled up foreign contracts which have seldom been surpassed with any feature picture in recent years.

The great value of this outdoor classic is that it is repeating again and again, having been released as many as seven times in some neighborhood houses, with an increase of business on almost every reappearance.

Still Going Strong

Sends
New Year's Greetings to
All His Friends
THE present week is notable in that the first of the Stoll films has been brought from England and shown to exhibitors by the Stoll managers located in the various Pathé exchanges.

Although there have been British pictures on exhibition in America before, this is the first company to establish headquarters here and become part and parcel of the film industry of the U. S. A.

Heretofore American exhibitors have treated English pictures lightly, being inclined to laugh at the comparatively small amounts of money spent on them. The complaint has been made, too, that the English films are too slow in action and altogether lacking in those qualities which the American audience loves. It will be interesting to watch the reception of the first Stoll production at the hands of American exhibitors.

“SQUANDERED LIVES” (Stoll Films Corp.), the first of the English-made films to be exploited through Pathe exchanges in America, presents an interesting story of English society life. Lavish sets and remarkably beautiful scenes aboard a houseboat are outstanding features of the picture. Ivy Duke and Guy Newall play the leads.

“IRELAND IN REVOLT” (Chicago Tribune) is the pictorial summary of revolutionary Ireland’s struggle for freedom. It was photographed by Capt. Edwin Weigle of the Chicago Tribune, and is attested the first complete authoritative pictorial review of events there. A high-grade special production and one that should be universally popular.

“ROGUES AND ROMANCE” (Pathé) is a story of love and intrigue set in actual Spanish surroundings which are most attractive. It carries a generous supply of thrills and excitement and deals with the capture of an American girl by Spanish revolutionists and her rescue by an American lover. June Caprice, Marguerite Courtot, George B. Seitz and Harry Smelz carry important parts.

“RED FOAM” (Selznick) presents Zena Keefe in a small-town romance that is appealingly natural and human. Good local color, interesting and entertaining. Harry Tighe gives a notable performance in the role of a traveling salesman.

“THE JUCKLINS” (Paramount) is an Opie Read story featuring Monte Blue, moderately interesting. Good atmosphere and attractive settings. Plot well developed and will please the general patronage.

“BEAUTIFULLY TRIMMED” (Universal) offers Carmel Myers in the role of one of a trio of crooks whom the love for a good man reforms. Concerned with a bogus oil deal that turns the tables on the schemers. Star good, but limited in opportunities.

“BROADWAY AND HOME” (Selznick) stars Eugene O’Brien in a humanly appealing story of small town and metropolitan life. Sceneically interesting and attractively staged, but vehicle is rather weak. Will please O’Brien fans.

“THOUGHTLESS WOMEN” (Goodman-Pioneer) is a human and realistic story excellently presented with Alma Rubens as the star. Derides the mother who bartered her daughter in marriage. Melodramatically tinged, but altogether absorbing and interesting.
RE VIEWS

ZENA KEEFE IN
(SELNICK)
A play which has its greatest value in the novelty of its trend. A valuable item is the characterization of a traveling salesman by Harry Tighe. Abundant small town stuff, well produced. Absorbing, interesting and entertaining. Directed by Ralph Ince.

All the high lights peculiar to the small town, particularly as the city dweller visions them, are introduced into this drama of village life that carries good entertainment value. There are the depot at train time, the church social, the inevitable game of checkers in the country store, the village oracle, the ladies' aid society and the town scandalmongers. There are other details, too, all carefully presented to make an interesting background for the romance threaded through it.

Harry Tighe as Andy Freeman, traveling salesman, gib and jovial, oily of tongue and clever at deception, gives a performance that is really notable.

Prime mover in the little village to which he brings his "dear little wife," he soon becomes the local leader. So smoothly does he put it over the good folks of the village, that they hardly realize that the happenings before they have reached their climax in his murder. Arnold Driscoll, a recent comer to the village, who has been seen in the company of Freeman's wife, is the logical suspect. The confession of a local poolroom keeper, whose wife the salesman has lured away with him on a trip, exonerates Driscoll, and there is evidence that a union with the young widow will reward him.

THE JUCKLINS
(PARAMOUNT)
An Opie Read story of the Alabama mountain country brought to the screen with good local color, but presented by a mediocre cast. Monte Blue gives good interpretation of the leading role, but lacks good support. Good entertainment value. Melodramatic tinge. Directed by George Melford.

The most promising item of this screen adaptation of an Opie Read story is the encouraging work of Monte Blue in the leading role. Despite the handicap of a cast that lacks sufficient strength to give the play the impress that it could have, the new star makes as much as possible of the role and is highly attractive. Mabel Julienne Scott has the leading feminine role, less of an important character than she has interpreted in other pictures. She gives good performance.

Scenes in the Alabama mountain country are excellent in their local color. The incident, familiar in so many stories of two generations ago, of the bullying of the country school teacher, the part played by Blue, is very well worked out. A spectacular destruction of the schoolhouse by fire is a high point in excitement, and a suspected murder supplies mystery until the trial at the end closes this in a wholly unexpected manner. However, the play has enough points of attractiveness to please the general patronage, and the fact that Monte Blue is a "comer" should lend it value.

A husband who plays poker and snores—the former because of the latter, combined with being out late at night—supplies the unit of action in this one reel comedy as purveyed by the Gayety players. Unable to resist the temptations of persuading friends, the husband hires a fellow clubman, who also has a reputation for "sawing wood" while sleeping, to substitute for him. To the spare room to which the husband was ostracized and where he left his friend slumbering as he stepped out, comes the wife to surprise the sleeper. The tables are turned, insofar as the surprise is concerned, and things move lively until the husband, accidently stumbling onto a safe robbery as he sought to sleep in his office, establishes an alibi that clears him of blame and restores domestic harmony. Mary Wynn, Harry Edwards and Herbert Murdoch have the leading parts. The whole is good fun, speedy of momentum and a good laugh generator.

ROGUES AND ROMANCE
(PATHE)
Replete with thrills and exciting happenings, beautiful of setting in the Spanish city and hill country, rapid of action and a mystery plot well developed. Written, produced and directed by George B. Seitz, who is also a member of the cast.

The beautiful mountain country of Spain and its cities and sea edges have been made the locale for this lovely tale of love and intrigue which holds thrills replete and will provide enough excitement for any patronage. The intrigue of a Spanish outlaw and revolutionist and the love of an American girl in Spain form the focus point of the story. The familiar dashing American hero, once the girl's fiancé, then discarded for the fascinating Spanish rogue, forms the third of the leading trio of players.

June Caprice impersonates the girl, Harry Semels is the outlaw and George B. Seitz the hero. Marguerite Courtot also carries an important part, that of a Spanish dancer in love with the rascally outlaw, Pezet.

The American girl, Sylvia, infatuated by the Spanish leader of revolutionists, is led by him into serious danger at the time of the riot resulting from his band's efforts to capture the governor. They are foiled in this, and only succeed in holding the girl until her American lover fights his way to the frightened and disillusioned sweetheart. There are fights and chases aplenty, realistic and sensational in their staging. Atmosphere is capital. The picture has an educational value in its setting. Lighting is very good and photography is excellent.
The story of three crooks who went crooked, one who went straight and a man whom fortune favored at the expense of the three. Moderate in entertainment value, well suspended interest, but the whole rather weak. Star very attractive, but limited in opportunities. A well ordered production directed by Mace de Saro.

The pleasant record established by Carmel Myers in "Jin Folly's Trail" will suffer in comparison with "Beautifully Trimmed." The vehicle itself is too lukewarm to admit of her displaying any particular ability, although she does take good advantage of the several emotional scenes. Pell Trenton is a new masculine lead playing with her in the part of Captain Chris Gibbons, while Irving Cummings and George Williams impersonate the crooks. Miss Myers appears as their associate, Norine Lawton. The three have framed a plan to sell bogus oil stock to Captain Gibbons, a young aviator representing post-war charities. The girl draws the captain into the trap by a feigned personal interest. This soon grows to love on her part and she is ready to withdraw from the scheme. One of the crooks seeks to hold her by his love for her, but fails to do so. Even before she warns the captain of the worthlessness of his investment, however, he has discovered it. Then, as one suspects from the first, oil is struck and the stock held by the "victim" makes him worth a million dollars. In true trend of such a screen role, he also gets the girl, and the two crooks are sent packing.

CARMEL MYERS IN

BEAUTIFULLY

(UNIVERSAL)

The appeal of the human and natural trend of this drama is the outstanding good point of its many worthy qualities. Alma Rubens plays a role new to her in the opening scenes of the picture, that of a young lady of Poverty Row. Later she blossoms into the beautiful society woman that lovely clothes can make her. In both characters she is charming.

The cast supporting her does able work and includes Marcia Esmond as Mrs. Marnet, the girl's mother; Lumsdon Hare as John Hewitt, Robert Williams as Basil Boulton, and Mrs. Brundage and Gladys Valerie as his mother and sister.

The story, written, directed and produced by Daniel Carson Goodman, has the theme thread in the indictment of the modern mother who would barter her daughter in marriage. The girl in the story, Annie Marnet, is urged into marriage with Basil Boulton by a socially aspiring mother, a cheap boarding house keeper. Boulton has wealth and social prestige, and he becomes easy prey to rid himself of the girl his mother has chosen for him in their own circle. Snobbery that is nothing short of brutality meets Annie when she is introduced to the household of her husband's family. She finds a friend in Hare, who deserts his attention to the sister to champion Annie. Disillusioned, she leaves the home and eventually returns home to meet her mother's rebuffs. Tempted to take her own life, she is dissuaded by the reappearance of Basil and Hare and an exciting event of theft attributed to her by the mother-in-law. Basil is returned to a woman with whom he has previously lived, and Hare proves Annie's comforter.

The play moves evenly and with force, although it is not particularly exciting. There is excellent modern treatment of dramatic trend, continuity is good and action is spontaneous.

EUGENE O'BRIEN IN

(SELZNICK)

The theme of forgiveness developed in an appealing story with human touches. A high spot is the depicting of a New England coast storm. Will please the general patronage. Directed by Alan Crosland.

Eugene O'Brien as Michael Strange heads the cast that plays this story of society and humble home contrast that is well developed and attractively performed, but of no particular convincing force. It will please, however, for the work of the star and the support is good. This is a storm and rescue scene along the New England coast that is reproduced vividly and graphically at the story's climax. The lighting might have been better, but the photography is artistic and good.

The tale deals with Michael Strange, a young man, the son of a New England clergyman, reared in a coast village and deserting it for the city. He has a patron in Richard Grayson, late of Broadway, who persuades Strange to return thither with him. In New York a young woman, Laura Williams, comes upon the scene. Strange knows her as a friend of Grayson's until after he has wooed and won her. Then comes excitement when Grayson, determined not to give her up, disclosed the scheme of her complete financial dependence upon him. Unable to forget this, Strange deserts the girl as he was wont to marry her, but no particular convincing force. Perjured by a clergyman friend of his father that forgiveness is due her, he returns to her to find that she has killed Grayson because of the latter's attempt to kill Strange. He hurries her away as his wife to the village of Rest Haven from whence he came, but officers pursue them. Strange aids in the rescue of the representatives of the law as they battle with the storm at sea, realizing that their coming means the conviction of Laura, who has seriously ill in his cottage home. As the law is about to close about her, she is taken by death. The ending is one of the best points of the play, its tragedy well modulated.

"Gasoline Alley" Ready

For January Publication

Work on the animation of "Gasoline Alley," the new animated cartoon to be presented by Russell-Crosland about the middle of January, has been started.

Five scenarios are in the hands of the animators. The first, a sequel to "Broadway and Home," is ready for showing the early part of February. An extensive publicity campaign going direct to automobile owners is being mapped out as a preliminary to the first publication.
IVY DUKE AND GUY NEWALL IN SQUANDERED LIVES

(A STOLL FILMS CORP. OF AM.)

A British made film, with British actors, filmed in the original locale of the story. A decidedly novel and cleverly handled story, adapted from Cosmo Hamilton's novel "Duke's Son," showing careful, thoughtful direction. It is in six parts.

"Squandered Lives," the first offering of the Stoll Films Corporation of America, presents an interesting picture of society and the life of titled Englishmen, across the water. The featured players are Ivy Duke, in the role of Joan Lambourne; Guy Newall, as Lord Delamere; Edward O'Neil, as Adolphus, duke of Cheshire; Philip Hewland, as Lord Tarporyle, older son; Tonie Bruce, as Mary, sister of Delamere; Hugh C. Buckler, as Sir Robert Sheen; Sadie Jerome as Lady Halesowen and C. Lawford Davidson, as Charles Denbigh-Smith. Perhaps the most notable work of this splendid cast is that of Mr. O'Neil. He acts with more vitality and convincing force than the others, and injects spirit into the final reels.

The interior sets are especially beautiful and the houseboat scenes present a unique feature of English life. In its titling the picture is far superior to many American products editorially. The ong objection is their great number and length. The home life of our brothers across the Atlantic is presented without any artificiality. There is realism in settings and every detail has been carefully looked after.

The story is woven around Francis Delamere, second son of the Duke of Cheshire, who is cut off from his allowance. Lacking the courage to face poverty, he joins another "second son" in exploiting their acquaintances at cards. At the death of his father Francis marries Joan Lambourne, who previously, through her sharpness at cards, is able to keep up appearances in her set. The two apparently without income, maintain a comfortable home. Denbigh-Smith, Joan's former admirer, detects the two cheating at cards and he tells Joan the price of his silence. Francis throws him out. The two are exposed at a house party and they attempt suicide. They are restored, however, and leave England.

(FOX)

"The Huntsman," while not as funny as "Kiss Me Quick," Cook's first Fox comedy, still contains many bits of genuine comedy and should prove a good draw for any house.

In this two-reeler Cook poses as a country hunter to peruse a Pullman car. The distinguished guest at a country club, he goes through the paces at a fox hunt, staged especially for the count. Here is introduced the comical situations of trapping, riding, and considerable slapstick about logs and stumps. The best laugh in the picture is where he captures the "fox" and displays it to the assembled hunters—a skunk.

The serious faced, loose-jointed comedian introduces his specialty of bending himself into all sorts of shapes and does his loose limbed dance as of yore. J. S. Blystone directed "The Huntsman."

IRELAND IN REVOLT

(CHATAGO TRIBUNE)

An unbiased, pictorial summary of events in revolutionary Ireland taken by Capt. Edwin F. Weigle, Chicago Tribune war photographer, in the autumn of 1920. Illuminating, educational and entertaining, and a feature that should be one of the biggest drawing cards, among current issues.

Here is a special feature more resembling an elongated news reel than anything else, which should bring to the theatre the country over some of the season's heaviest patronage. It is one of the most intelligently assembled features of the sort ever issued. It has a systematic continuity that threads it on a string of events logically sequenced and capably organized. There is nothing tiresome about it, for extreme care has evidently been taken in presenting contrasts in scenes that keep it from growing monotonous.

Views of Ireland, its cities and its beautiful lake region open the feature. There are some charming effects in cloud and water scenes and reflections. Then the first movements of the Sinn Fein, the Irish rebel body standing for Nationalism, are recorded and the history of the present struggle between Britain and Ireland is traced with succeeding events, raids, riots, reprisals, sacking, burning, and burning. All is caught on camera results and acquaint the viewer in thoroughly clear and intelligent way with the matters in Ireland made so prominent by the newspapers. Much valuable information is given in titles and text accompanying the film. Terrance MacSwiney, photographed just previous to his arrest, and his funeral following his death from starvation, is shown in excellently caught scenes. Arthur Griffith, leader of the Sinn Fein, is also shown. The R. I. C. (Royal Irish Constabulary), or the "Blacks and Tans," the police representing British rule, are shown in their activities and barracks, and many other people, places and events of great interest are filmed.

While the timeliness of the picture should in itself draw universal interest, the exhibitor should not fail to exploit this feature, particularly working with schools to interest children. Irish societies would be brought closer with the theatre, and every assurance can be offered its booker that it will more than meet his every expectation.

VANITY PLAYERS IN HIS FOUR FATHERS

(Educational)

Irene Dalton and Laura La Plante lead a bevy of unusually pretty girls through parts of a one reel comedy offered by the Vanity players. Neal Burns has the important male role. The story is centered about the romance of the young couple impersonated by the latter and by Miss La Plante. The match is forbidden by the father of the prospective bridegroom, who believes the bride-elect to be the daughter of a former enemy. To hurry the apology demanded from the bridegroom's father by the bride's father, also the wedding day, Miss Dalton, elad in the habiliments in which she is to appear in amateur dramatics, comes to ask the pardon. So does Burns, impersonating his father. The complex situation comes with the meeting of the two, but all is cleared when the father discovers that they have been mistaken in one another's identities. The action moves briskly, the parts are well played and the idea is well worked out.

Madaline Traverse Seeks Three More Good Stories

Before beginning work on "The Ivory Disc," from the novel by Percy Breen, which will be the first of a series of special productions with her own company, Madaline Traverse is in search of at least three more stories of similar high calibre.

There will be at least four of the Madaline Traverse playphotops made during 1921 and the star is desirous of obtaining the stories now so as to avoid any delays in production.
At the Studios

Wesley Ruggles, the Metro director, is a regular story teller, we take it, from the expressions on the faces of "Itchey" Headrick and Alice Lake, who are making "Mother Love."

Wanda Hawley, the Realart star, says "be sure and write it 1921," which most of us won't do for a couple of weeks of the new year.

Ruby De Remer, the star of "The Way Women Love," an Arrow production whom M. Paul Helleu, the artist, declares is the most beautiful woman in America.

Viola Dana, the clever Metro star, wants to prove she's clever with the cleaver, but Gareth Hughes doesn't want his appendix removed that way.

Bebe Daniels and Wanda Hawley Star In Realart's December Publications

Two important productions—one adapted from a musical comedy success and the other based on an Alice Duer Miller story—constitute Realart's December publications.

These pictures are included in the quota of thirty-six productions offered under the Realart star franchise.

One Stars Bebe Daniels

The first is "Oh, Lady, Lady," adapted from the play of the same name by Bolton and Wodehouse. Bebe Daniels, the "good little bad girl," is featured, while a strong supporting cast includes Harrison Ford, Walter Hiers, Charlotte Wood, Lillian Langdon and Jack Doud.

It was directed by Major Maurice Campbell and the scenario was by Edith Kennedy.

The story is full of humorous incidents and furnishes Miss Daniels one of the best roles she has had, Realart officials believe.

Offer "Her First Elopement"

Realart's second December offering is Wanda Hawley in "Her First Elopement," a story by Alice Duer Miller. Miss Hawley starred in "Food for Scandal" and "Her Beloved Villain," both recent Realart productions. Her first picture for Realart was "Miss Hobbs."

"Her First Elopement" was directed by Sam Wood and the scenario is by Edith Kennedy. Miss Hawley carries the role of Christina Elliot, wealthy, beautiful and carefree, who, by helping her cousin out of an unfortunate love affair becomes involved in several unusual and exciting situations.

Patrick in Support

She is supported by Jerome Patrick, who will be remembered for his fine acting in "The Furnace," a current Realart issue. Others in the cast are Nell Craig, Lucien Littlefield, Jay Eaton, Helen Dunbar, Herbert Standing, Edwin Stevens, Margaret Morris, Ann Hastings and John MacKinnon.

Miss Hawley as Christina Elliot has the role of a typical American girl, one that seems particularly suited to her. Through her desire to assist her rather irresponsible cousin, Gerald, she goes to call on the woman of his choice. While there she meets Adrian Maitland, who is on a similar mission, as his younger brother has also fallen victim to the charms of the woman who has ensnared Gerald. Adrian mistakes Christina for the "other woman" and decides to use original methods in saving his brother. He does—and the results furnish much amusement and many exciting moments.

Logsdon Buys Playhouse

24 Sheets Herald "Lone Hand Wilson"

Capital Production Receiving Ample Advertising Space

In Larger Cities

24 Sheets Posted

Following is a partial list of the towns that have fallen in line on the 24-sheet poster campaign:

Kansas City, Milwaukee, Cleveland, Los Angeles, Utica, Minneapolis and Des Moines.

"Lone Hand Wilson," from its showing some weeks ago, has stepped into the front ranks of recent Western productions. Cuneo, in his first starlet picture, has allowed his way into the inner circle of Western stars, it is declared.

Record Is Sought

Those who have viewed "Lone Hand Wilson" are reported to be anxiously awaiting the arrival of the second Cuneo series, "The Ranger and the Law," now being photographed at the Double-day Studios at the Coast. It will be ready around the first of the year.

Spurred on by the wonderful reports received from points where "Lone Hand Wilson" has been played, the studio is enthusiastically stepping out to break the record established by the first Cuneo picture.

"Devotion" Will Be Next

Vehicle for Vera Gordon

Vera Gordon, the famous mother of "Humoresque," will soon be seen as the star of "Devotion," a forthcoming Harry Rapf-Seitznick special, which gives this actress another role of the type with which she has become associated.

Since "Humoresque" established her as one of the greatest film finds in several months, Mrs. Gordon has been seen in "The North Wind's Malice" and has recently been headlining in vaudeville as the star 'n' Lullaby. S & E Sells "Cowboy Jass" And Markets New Midgets

S. & E. Enterprises has sold "Cowboy Jass," the two-part special Western production, for Washington, D. C., Maryland, Delaware and Virginia to Leo Garner of Reliance Film Company, Washington.

The new Shenefeld-Ennis organization is also marketing a series of eight two-part Midget comedies. These pictures will be sold on a series plan only.

Postpones Construction

Proctor Managers Seek Honors in Exploiting Tourneur’s “County Fair”

Starting on January 16, an exploitation contest will be conducted among the managers of the Keith, Proctor and B. S. Moss theatres in Greater New York. Maurice Tourneur’s "The County Fair" has been booked over the entire circuit.

On December 14, General Manager Hart of Proctor Enterprises, assembled his managerial staff at the Simplex projection room in New York for a review of the production. Manager Hart and S. Barret McCormick talked on practical exploitation. In case two or more managers tie for the prizes equal amounts will be distributed. Concerning the contest, Mr. Hart says:

Set Aside Cash Prizes

"After our entire circuit had booked 'The County Fair,' I desired to try something at least original in the way of a contest where every manager of our twenty theatres would have a fair and equal chance regardless of the seating capacity or location of his theatre and it was upon this scheme as one that would satisfy all managers. The Keith office has set aside a certain amount of cash prizes to be contested for by the various managers of the Keith, Proctor and B. S. Moss theatres in Greater New York. It is purely an exploitation contest."

Three Prizes Offered

"So on January 16 an exploitation contest, the first of its kind in America, starts for the Keith exploitation contest which offers three prizes, to be awarded as follows:"

"To the manager: who shall conceive the most attractive, novel but inexpensive lobby display shall be awarded one cash prize.

"To the manager who shall conceive the most artistic, novel and inexpensive stage setting shall be given a cash prize.

"The manager obtaining the largest amount of free publicity and advertising for "The County Fair" shall receive a cash prize.

"Any one manager may capture one or all three prizes, regardless of the size or location of their respective theatres."

Leonhardt Film Pictures
The Life of Jenny Lind

Harry Leonhardt, president of Allied Independent Attractions, Inc., announces that Allied has entered into a contract with P. B. Lyon, general manager of Jenny Lind Photoplay Company, to produce, distribute and manage a feature production of the never-to-be-forgotten "Swedish Nightingale."

It is understood that the greater part of production work will be done in California with shots taken in New York where Jenny Lind appeared under the direction of F. T. Barnum and in Boston and Northampton, Mass., where the diva was married to Otto Goldschmidt. The production is said to lend itself to a charming romance of Jenny Lind's life from early childhood to her death at Malvern Hills, in England.

Elinor Lynn Is New Star

Predict First Zeigfeld Film Will Be One of the Finest Made This Year

Dramatists and others associated with the legitimate theatre are said to be looking forward eagerly to the first showings of W. K. Ziegfeld’s initial screen productions, now being completed at the Peerless studios, Fort Lee.

This offering, which gives every promise, it is said, of being one of the finest photoplays produced this year, is of particular interest to playwrights, as its entire personnel is composed of people who have been successfully identified with the spoken drama.

Florence Reed Stars

With Florence Reed, whose acting in “The Miracle” is creating a sensation, in the stellar role, and Emile Chautard, former director-general of the Theatre Rejane, as director, W. K. Ziegfeld provided his first offering with a group of prominent players.

Among these are, in addition to Miss Reed, Tyrone Power, Norman Trevor, Earle Foxe, Henry Stephenson, William Roselle, Mlle. Dazie, Paula Shay, the famous French team of Breon and Bourbon, Muriel De Forrest, Wanda Lawrence, Alison Bradshaw, Camilla Lyon, Carol Ray, Ernest Lambert, Halbert Brown, Florence Moore, Jeanette Dietrich, Charles Jackson, Mabel Olson and others.

Scenario by Bartholomae

The scenario, based on an original story by Ethel Donohue, was written by Philip Bartholomae, the noted dramatist, author of “Very Good Eddie,” “Over Night,” “When Dreams Come True,” the first edition of the “Greenwich Village Follies,” and a score of other successful plays.

Bartholomae looks on Ziegfeld’s entry into the motion picture field with enthusiasm.

“To my knowledge,” he says, “W. K. Ziegfeld is the first one to consistently use nothing but talent recruited from the dramatic stage in his picture work, for every one connected with his new venture has been successful on the stage in the same capacity they are being used in pictures, for even the supers in the large scenes were supplied by the Actors Equity, who sent only people who have had stage experience.”

Reelcraft Salesmen Plan Special Drive in January

The salesmen of the New York exchange of Reelcraft Pictures Corporation have set aside January as “Singer month” in the territory of Greater New York and Northern New Jersey, and are endeavoring to obtain 100 per cent representation of the four new series offered by Reelcraft during the month.

This effort has been planned by the salesmen themselves as a testimonial to Julius Singer, manager of the New York exchange. The sales force expects to place the New York exchange at the top of the Reelcraft list and establish a new selling record.

Frank Mayo Starred in Universal’s “Colorado”

Production has begun at Universal City. In the cast also are Gloria Hope, Lillian West, Charles LeMoyne, Leonard Chapin, Charles Newton, Dan Crimmins and Rosa Gore. Reaves Eason will direct.

First National
The Branded Woman, with Norma Talmadge.—This is very good. A 100 per cent entertainment. Played two days to good business. Boost it strong as it will carry.

You. Strong favorite. Sister "Salome."

The Yellow Typhoon with Anita Stewart.—Good. Everybody says it is great. You know lots of Desipio and the story in the Saturday Evening Post, and that was a good advertisement for me.—William G. Atkinson, Star theatre, Rockingham, N. C.

The Curtain, with Katherine MacDonald.—A good picture. Please only about 50 per cent.—Peter Krauth, Denison theatre, Denison, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Splendid Hazard, with Henry B. Walthall.—If you value your business do not play this. Nothing in the story to recommend it.—Custer Carland, Victoria theatre, Frankfort, Mich.

PASSION'S PLAYGROUND, with Katherine MacDonald.—A great picture. We would be glad to get her every day for a while, as she gets the business when you put her name in front of the theatre. They say she is the best star in the world here.—William G. Atkinson, Star theatre, Rockingham, N. C.

The Family Honor, a King Vidor production.—A good, interesting picture.—W. H. Creal, Suburban theatre, Omaha, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Love Expert, with Constance Talmadge.—Got over fairly well.—Giacomo Braga, Alameda, Tombstone, Ariz.—General patronage.

Polly of the Storm Country, with Mildred Harris Chaplin.—Just fair. The people of this town do not like her so well. Just fair business.—William G. Atkinson, Star theatre, Rockingham, N. C.

The Inferior Sex, with Mildred Harris Chaplin.—Nothing to it. Did not please.—Giacomo Braga, Alameda, Tombstone, Ariz.—General patronage.

In Search of a Sinner, with Constance Talmadge.—This picture along with Shoulder Arms broke box office records here. Connie pleased at least 90 per cent of my patrons. Book this one if you want to stand them up.—Paul L. Tupper, Rex theatre, Green River, Wyo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Two Weeks, with Constance Talmadge.—Good business. Everybody likes Constance Talmadge here. One reason is that all the theatregoers here like comedy-drama better than any other kind of a picture. Big house for matinee and night.—William G. Atkinson, Star theatre, Rockingham, N. D.

The Inferior Sex, with Mildred Harris Chaplin.—A fair program picture.

Theatre, Alameda, Cal.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Greatest Question, a D. W. Griffith production.—This picture is different. Had lots of attention. Some enjoyed it and some did not. You should run a comedy with this one.—Peter Krauth, Denison theatre, Denison, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

In Old Kentucky, with Anita Stewart.—This is great. Any house should be proud of putting up a picture like this.—Hoffman Bros., Happy Hour theatre, Burke, S. D.—Neighborhood patronage.

Heart "O the Hills," with Mary Pickford.—An old picture, but a good one. Mary still draws them in and these.—W. H. Creal, Suburban theatre, Omaha, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

Back to God's Country, with Neil Shipman.—A picture that will appeal to all because it's clean and has a lot of animal interest that will get the children. Worth exploitation.—C. E. Power, Power's theatre, North Branch, Minn.—Country patronage.

Daddy Long Legs, with Mary Pickford.—A very good picture for small towns. Ran it two days with good results.—L. M. Rothweiler, Palace theatre, Bison, Kan.—Small town patronage.

Midnight Romance, with Anita Stewart.—This picture will certainly please. The photography is good and the story very pleasing. A good everyday program picture.—C. E. Power, Power's theatre, North Branch, Minn.—Country patronage.

Fox

The Little Grey Mouse, with Louise Lovely.—This is a good picture. We gave it two Saturday sessions and they liked it. Miss Lovely is a comer.—Harry M. Palmer, Liberty theatre, Washington, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Little Wanderer, with Shirley Mason.—A very good picture. Pleased the big majority.—Adolph Kohn, Pastime theatre, Granville, N. Y.—Neighborhood patronage.

Just Pals, with Buck Jones.—A splendid picture. Pleased a large crowd. Buck Jones is a favorite with us.—James A. Harris, Auditorium theatre, Monroeville, Ala.—Neighborhood patronage.

Sunset Sprague, with Buck Jones.—A good Western. If your patrons like them you'll make good with this.—W. H. Creal, Suburban theatre, Omaha, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

Leave It to Me, with William Russell.—This pleased as do all Russell's pictures. Russell one of the best bets.—G. W. Johnson, Mystic theatre, Marmath, N. D.

WHILE NEW YORK SLEEPS, with a special cast.—From a box office standpoint this is one of the biggest features we have played in many a moon. If the other fellow gets it you are the loser. It pulls them back the second night. Excellent satisfaction.—Harry M. Palmer, Liberty theatre, Washington, Ind.—General patronage.

Beware of the Bride, with Eileen Percy.—A fair comedy, but not as good as The Husband Hunter. Went over with a serial crowd, and got several laughs.—W. H. Creal, Suburban theatre, Omaha, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Man Who Dared, with William Russell.—A seven-reel crackerjack of a picture. One that you can advertise to the limit. Special attention should be given to the music in the scenes where Russell breaks the "hard-boiled." Experiences the change of heart.—Harry M. A Sister to Salome, with Gladys Brockwell.—Very ordinary picture. Did not please.—Adolph Kohn, Pastime theatre, Granville, N. Y.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Tattlers, with Madlaine Traverse.—Another of those fool dream scenes. When they can’t do anything else some authors dream it and the audience damps it.—Giacoma Bros., Crystal theatre, Tombstone, Ariz.—General patronage.

ter all the time.—E. E. Gailey, Crystal theatre, Wayne Neb.

The Husband Hunter, with Eileen Percy.—Fair comedy drama. Lots of good laughs and should please.—E. E. Gailey, Crystal theatre, Wayne, Neb.—General patronage.

The Man Who Dared, with William Russell.—A melodrama different. It will hold attention, but may not please a general audience.—Peter Krauth, Denison theatre, Denison, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

The White Moll, with Pearl White.—A good picture, and pleased Pearl White fans. Drew better than average, but nothing big for a special.—W. H. Creal, Suburban theatre, Omaha, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Texan, with Tom Mix.—This is a good comedy Western, and will pull them in. Business good.—Spalding Bros., Gem theatre, Taylorville, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Winning Stroke, with George Walsh.—Very good picture. College story. Want some more of this class.—Aitorium theatre, Carleton, Neb.—Small town patronage.

The Strongest, with a special cast.—Rented as a big special and proved to be not even as good as an ordinary program picture. Fox ought to be arrested for this.—Harold Dasmit, Atherton theatre, Kentwood, La.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Lost Princess, with Albert Ray and Elinor Fair.—A fine picture sure to please.—G. W. Johnson, Mystic theatre, Marmarth, N. D.

EXHIBITOR’S HERALD

Larry Semon in “The Suitor” VITAPHGRAPH

“This master fun maker leads a cast through the liveliest stream of fun that has flowed across the screen in many weeks. It is a comedy to be put into a class by itself and the exhibitor who passes it up is missing something good.”

From

Photoplay Magazine

“THE SUITOR” VITAPHGRAPH

“For boys and girls of all ages. When we saw it, a family of three—staid middle-aged father, decorous younger mother, and a son of eleven—had mutual hysterics in Marmarth. Although I suspect the small boy’s enthusiasm penetrated to his parents. Larry Semon isn’t standing still, that’s certain. He has improved his methods of funmaking immeasurably in the past months, and this two-reeler is packed with bright bits of business, clever clowning, and all-round good sense in sets and story. For there is a story—all about a band of plotting dynamos who are hounding the rich father of the lovely heroine, deftly played by Lucille Carlisle. A few more like this and Semon will be in the front rank of the silent comedians.”

Motion Picture News

“The Suitor”—two-reel comedy featuring Larry Semon

Released by Vitaphraph

“For unalloyed slapstick this two-reeler wins medals. *Fast action and novelty gags in which the cleverest kind of trick photography is used to advantage characterizes the picture throughout. Larry Semon as the star again apparently takes many chances of breaking his neck with his tumbling stunts and in this connection is ably supported by a good cast of ‘knock about’ comedians.”
The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come, with Jack Pickford.—A dandy play. Please all classes. Book it. Six-sheets will do. Have civil war music. Get public schools interested. Highly educational with strong heart interest. Charged 30c and 15c.—Philip Rand, Rex theatre, Salmon, Idaho.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Strange Boarder, with Will Rogers.—Just a fair picture. Rogers could not show to advantage in this story.—Custer Carland, Victoria theatre, Frankfort, Mich.

Stop Thief, with Tom Moore.—A good picture full of pep and will please everyone. A good laugh getter and every foot interesting. H. G. Stetmmund, Jr., Odeon theatre, Chandler, Okla.—General patronage.

The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come, with Jack Pickford.—An excellent picture, but failed to draw the business we expected. Probably due to slump in business and cold snap which hit us at the same time.—W. H. Creal, Suburban theatre, Omaha, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Great Accident, with Tom Moore.—Commented for the family circle. There is absolutely no excuse for some scenes that are shown, and I was ashamed to look my patrons in the face when they came out of my theatre. It is pictures of this type that are causing the country to be flooded with censor petitions today.—Harry C. Weaver, Gem theatre, New London, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Upstairs, with Mabel Normand.—Not very good.—Hoffman Bros., Happy Hour theatre, Burke, S. D.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Loves of Letty, with Pauline Frederick.—Star very popular. However, this picture did not please as did her first one, Bonds of Love. Photography excellent, as is the case with all Goldwyn films.—Merle Rhoda, Palace theatre, Royalton, Minn.—Small town patronage.

Old Lady 31, with Emma Dunn.—Pleasing and a change from ordinary run of stuff.—Giacoma Bros., Crystal theatre, Tombstone, Ariz.—General patronage.

Fair and Warmer, with May Allison.—Very good. Excellent. Much better than Don't Ever Marry. Book it, you can't go wrong.—Lang & Smith, Opera House, Cobb, Wis.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Best of Luck, with a special cast. Very poor picture. Did not please and patrons told me so. Had to put it over with a Lloyd comedy.—G. W. Johnson, Mystic theatre, Marmarth, N. D.

The Mutiny of the Elsinore, with a special cast.—Did not do well. My people do not like such pictures as this. Too much fighting in the picture.—William G. Atkinson, Star theatre, Rockingham, N. C.

cellent comedy-drama. Wish there

The Lady of Red Butte, with Dorothy Bennett.—Gave a good play. Audience ran. Stay away from this one.—G. W.
Johnson, Mystic theatre, Marmarth, N. D.

Let’s Elope, with Marguerite Clarke.
—Just missed being a clever comedy.

From The New York Tribune

“Dead Men Tell No Tales” is thrilling drama on the screen. It follows Hornung’s tale close, and reel follows reel without the slightest drop in interest.
It is a fascinating story from first to last. Moreover, we think on the screen than in book form. The picture is one of the best of its kind that we ever saw. It is per-fet in every detail, and the burning of the ship at sea is so realistic that you have to exercise great self-control to keep from jumping on the stage and joining in the rescue.”

Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm, with Mary Pickford.—It’s a revival of one of Mary Pickford’s best pictures. You think at the results. People came who had seen it before but wanted to see it again.—Harry M.

Palmer, Liberty theatre, Washington, Ind.—

manship. You have here an extraordinary, a wonderful picture.

busy with your papers. Use prestige of Hamilton appearing in an important role in EARTH-

Bare Fists, with Harry Carey.—Most any house could use this and make friends if your patrons like Westerns.—W. W. Wales, Yeomen theatre, Seneca, S. D.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Girl in the Rain, with Ann Cornell—This picture was a surprise. A good crook picture. Title misleading. Book it.—Herman Meyer, Niles Center theatre, Niles, Center, III.—Neighborhood patronage.

Burnt Wings, with Frank Mayo.—A strong plot, but bold treatment of sex problem. Many said they liked it. Would not select this, but am taking Universal service, would not cancel it further. Played with Lonesome Hearts and Loose Lions, a poor comedy, Price 30c and 15c.—Philip Rand, Rex theatre, Salmon, Idaho.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Devil's Pass Key, with a special cast.—Broke all records except The Miracle Man, and would have broken that but for downpour of rain.—O. R. Nation, Strand theatre, Davis, Cal.—Neighborhood patronage.

Dead Men’s Tales.

“Dead Men Tell No Tales,” the cryptic advertisement which has decorated the recent dailies in huge black splashers, is now revealed as a harmless, necessary movie at the Broadway this week. This will be a relief to those nervous souls who were startled by its sinister implication, under paterns ads or patent medicine announcements. Our own Globe Trotter assures us that he even saw the notice of an excellent physician with the traditional “office hours from 11 to 2 and by appointment,” and under it the apocryphal prophecy “Dead Men Tell No Tales.”

But the picture is here and all is forgiven because it is an excellent ex- ample of a mystery melodrama of pirates and bottles of rum and beauti- ful Spanish women rescued at least six times for every reel. Most of the burden of these rescues fell on Percy Marmount, as the dauntless hero. Carl Calvert makes a vivid and flashing scenario, who is not too proud to be saved. The film is combined with the usual Broadway vaudeville bill, although it is quite strong enough to carry the programme alone.

them.—John Hainer, Princess theatre, Donora, Pa.—Neighborhood patronage.

Young Buffalo Series (Pathe), with a special cast.—Have run four of them. Have one more to run. Sure glad that’s the last one. Nothing to them. No action, no star, no nothing. Lay off of them.—William Thacher, Royal theatre Salina, Kan.

Rolin Comedies (Pathe), with Snub Pollard.—These one-reel comedies are all good. The little darky who appears in many is very clever and causes many laughs.—Adolph Kohn, Pastime theatre, Granville, N. Y.—Neighborhood patronage.

Kiss Me Caroline (Educational), with Bobby Vernon.—Best comedy I have ever played.—Custer Carland, Victoria theatre, Frankfort, Mich.

Vod-A-Vil (Spanoth), with a special cast.—Am still boosting the Vod-A-Vil. They will go good in any class house. You can't go wrong.—William Thacher, Royal theatre, Salina, Kan.

Monkey Comedies (Universal), with Mr. and Mrs. Joe Martin.—All good up-to-date. We have only to advertise Joe Martin and the monkey draws the crowd.—Mrs. Lloyd Junkin, Queen thea- tre, Aspermont, Tex.—Small town patronage.

Shoulder Arms (First National), with Charlie Chaplin.—This is an old subject, but it sure is a peach. Drew fine, although Chaplin isn’t popular here. If you haven’t played this do it at once, as it will get you the money.—Paul L. Turgeon, Rex theatre, Green River, Wyo.

Strand Comedies (Robinson-Cole).— These cannot be beat for one-reel com- edies. They are nice and clean and each has a good moral.—Hoffman Bros., Happy Hour theatre, Burke, S. D.— Neighborhood patronage.

A Barnyard Comedy (Universal), with a special cast.—A comedy that is really funny. Our patrons are well pleased with it.—Mrs. Lloyd Junkin, Queen theatre, Aspermont, Tex.—Small town patronage.

The Head Waiter (Vitagraph), with Larry Semon.—You know, this is the best comedy. We have 12 booked and we think they will be the best cards we have to get the crowds with.—William G. Atkinson, Star theatre, Rockingham, N. C.

Edgar Comedies (Goldwyn).—We have played all six of these and every one was good.—Hoffman Bros., Happy Hour theatre, Burke, S. D.—Neighborhood patronage.

Bookings Indicate No Depression in Business, Declares E. W. Hammons

“There is not the slightest sign of business depression shown in our bookings,” according to E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., “in fact, every month is showing a marked increase over the month preceding. November far surpassed October and the reports received for December business indicate that the month will show a bigger percentage gain over November.

Contracts Cover Series.

“Not only is this true, but practically all of these contracts cover entire series of comedies and single reel pictures. It is the more significant when it is stated that this has been brought about without increasing product and that no special productions are responsible for this gain. Still more important is that these contracts show faith in future business for the theatres. It indicates to us that the theatres of the country are on a much sounder business basis than ever before.

Only a short time ago managers would have been in a panic at rumors of business depression. Now they know that their affairs are being conducted on a sound basis they refuse to be frightened by rumors.”

Mr. Hammons added that this was a particularly important statement because in case exhibitors did feel that they had to retrace that they would be inclined to contract for cheaper product instead of the higher, both in features and in short subjects.

Survey Is Conducted

This statement was made not only on the reports of bookings from the exchanges, but on a survey of conditions generally made through the home office. This embraced an examination into the steadiness with which the prints were working and the demand for posters, photographs and advertising material. All of these showed a marked increase over the whole period that Education’s own exchanges have been open and brought forward larger orders for the future.

Educational’s production plans are settled for many months to come. All of the various producing units are far ahead of schedule and actual prints are being received in the New York office weeks ahead so that all advertising and exploitation material can be completed.

While there may be no further increase in product by Educational, the company also announces that there will be no decrease in the number of offerings.

Forman Gives Picture

Machine to Sing Sing

In appreciation of the help and cooperation of Sing Sing officials during the filming of scenes at the prison for “The Quarry,” Thomas Meighan’s latest Paramount picture, Tom Forman, director, has given the prison a motion picture projection machine for use in the “death house.”

Forman spent a week at Sing Sing taking exteriors and interiors for the picture and while there he was struck with the utter hopelessness of the inmates of the “death house.” He inquired if it would be possible to show motion pictures to these men and was told that a projection machine was most necessary. He made immediate arrangements to have a machine sent to the prison.

Gordon Standing on Stage

Starring in Barrie Play

Gordon H. Standing, who plays a prominent part in “The Foreigner,” the Ralph Connor story, and other screen successes, has forsaken temporarily the silent drama to play the leading part on the speaking stage in a Barrie playlet, “Half an Hour.”

Standing has not been seen on the speaking stage for more than five years. He has been devoting himself during most of this time to motion pictures except for his army service.

Green Bay Improvements

GREEN BAY, WIS.—Henry Goldman, manager of the Grand and Colonial theatres, will double the size of the latter house and make it one of the best theatres outside Chicago. Work will begin in the spring and is expected to be completed by autumn.
Welcoming the New Year

With J. B.

This is the week for the New Year handshake. It's all right to shake the hand but don't let the foot slip.

LADIES SHUK, cellist, assisted by Mischa Levitski, is packing 'em in at Aeolian Hall. Moiswieitsch, soloist, is warbling to packed houses at Carnegie Hall. Bernardo Dolabella, a tenor of high note who brings home the bacon at Carnegie Hall. Bon-Ami is not "Polish" but Hebrew and is making a clean-up at the 9th Street theatre.

The activity of foreign buyers is indicated in a statement issued by the Arrow Film Corporation in which GUY R. HAXSOON, general export manager, states that the following pictures, four special five-reel features starring Jack Hoxie, the first of which is "A Man from Nowhere" and "The Deceiver," were purchased by Neuf-Hessin & Company for Argentine, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile, Peru, Bolivia and Ecuador.

Rod LAROCQUE closed last week in Alice Brady's play, "Anna Ascends." Mr. LaRocque has been working continuously in pictures and on the stage throughout 1920 and will take a brief holiday vacation before returning to the screen.

MORt Banks arrived on the Aquitania on Sunday, December 12.

PAUL MOONEY had a birthday December 12. Which one nobody knows.

WILLIAM "Bill" HADDox, chief director for the Hemmer Productions, left for New England on Saturday, December 18. Mr. Haddock expects to return from the yule log party on December 27.

Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Lewis, who have been their Christmas shopping in New York for the past four weeks, left for their home in Los Angeles on Saturday, December 18. Mr. and Mrs. Lewis are always popular, at home as well as abroad, and a host of friends were sorry to see them depart.

HARRY D. WILSON, one of Los Angeles' best in the special representative and publicity line, is still arranging appearances for George Beban in New York. Harry speaks Spanish "like a de deuce" and is using it on the Jersey exhibitors in great shape.

CARL LARMILE returned from the coast in time to meet a number of exhibitors who are serving on the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America committee meeting with the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

PAUL OSCARD, the young French dancer who has charge of the choreography in the Rivoli, Rialto and Criterion theatre, returned under the direction of Hugo Riesenfeld has opened a studio at 223 West 70th Street with children as his specialty pupils.

BEN WILSON, who is producing a series of five real western features starring Jack Hoxie, for the Radelac Production Corporation, returned to the coast this week having completed several important deals in the east. An announcement of several new producing units under Mr. Wilson's supervision will be made in the near future.

VINCENT COLEMAN, here tofore best known as a screen leading man for Constance Talmadge, Alice Calhoun, Dixie Lee and many other screen players, will open in Chicago early in January in "It's Up to You," a musical comedy in which he is playing the lead.

J. F. LEE, the human dynamo behind "The County Fair" advertising and exploitation, is a man in a million. If he makes a bet on headgear he overlooks the overhead and pays his bets "pronto." Thanks, Joe, that's a fine Stetson. In fact, it's my crowning glory.

W. CHRISTY CARANNE arrived in New York with his second Robertson-Cole special "What's a Wife Worth." We don't know, but Justice Mauchusser of Westchester recently handed down a decision to the effect that a wife was entitled to whatever she might get from her husband's pockets.

MAURICE BARON, whose "Triumphant Overture" was considered second best in the recent prize contest in which Hugo Riesenfeld offered $500 for the best original American overture, will conduct the Rialto orchestra next Sunday when the orchestra will play it for the first time in public as the principal orchestral number of the week's program.

Eggs fell twelve cents last week without breaking. Harry Bensons of the New Rochelle Laboratories fell off a chair, and broke his wrist, all of which reminds us that night falls without breaking and day breaks without falling.

JAMES CRANE and Alice Brady will leave for Bermuda this week for a holiday trip. Mr. Crane will return to the stage after his vacation, for a road trip with "Opportunity," in which he is starring, while Miss Brady will choose a new play in which she is to appear next spring.

M. JAY CASEY, president of the Art-O-Graf Film Company of Denver, who are producing feature pictures, was a visitor at the Arrow concerns. The Art-O-Graf recently produced "The Desert Scorpion" and "Wolves of the Street." The..."

J. E. MAPLE, general manager of the Northwestern Film Company of Sheridan, Wyoming, was another Arrow visitor. Mr. Maple recently produced "Before the White Man Came" for Arrow.

Charge Two Exhibitors With Misrepresentation In Exploiting Pictures

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, Dec. 21.—James Bliskov and Samuel Crystal, proprietors of the Strand and Strand theatres at Union Hill, N. J., were summoned before Magistrate Hauenstein of the Union Hill police court on Monday, December 6, and held in $500 bail each to await the action of the grand jury on a charge of falsely advertising D. W. Griffith's production of "Way Down East." The theatre owners described Thomas H. Shearer's "Homespun Story of "Way Down East,"" displaying the title of the Griffith picture in letters fifteen to twenty times as large as the name of the Ince picture actually being shown, and spreading the false advertising throughout the town of Union and neighboring sections in an effort to give the impression that "Way Down East" was being shown. The court ordered that an officer be placed in the lobby of the theatre and announce to patrons that they were not to see "Way Down East." This was done throughout the engagement of three days.

Wesley Barry Playing In MacDonald Picture

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, Dec. 14.—Wesley Barry, Marshall Neilan's freckled-faced star of "Dinty," published through First National, has been loaned by the producer-director to the Katherine MacDonald Company for "Trust Your Wife."
Marguerite Clark, who has entered the independent producing field. "Scrambled Wives," her first production, is to be distributed through Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

William DeMille Confines Effort To Producing Original Scenarios

William DeMille announces that in the future he will confine himself to the production of original stories because of the impossibility of successfully adapting plays or novels.

Edward Knobloch, who is at the Lasky studio in Hollywood, is completing the script of an original story which will be Mr. DeMille's next production for Paramount.

Screen Is New Art Form

The producer of "Midsummer Madness" explained his decision to abandon adaptations as follows: "Although there are several good plays and novels available they are good merely as stage productions or as books. They are rarely of any use as motion picture material, for the reason that they were written to be produced on the stage, or to be published between covers.

"The motion picture medium is entirely different. It is a new art form, and authors who hope to see their stories or plays on the screen must realize that fact. They must realize that if they are going to have their works put into motion pictures they must go into picture studios and learn their new medium.

Must Learn Technique

"I have adapted several plays in the past, and novels, too, but I am convinced that the maximum of success can only be achieved when the author learns motion picture technique and works in close cooperation with the continuity writers and directors.

"This is what Mr. Knobloch is doing now. When he arrived in Hollywood he went at once to our studio, literally took off his coat, rolled up his sleeves and started to learn the craft from the bottom up. This is the same procedure being followed by Sir Gilbert Parker, who may write the story for the production which I shall do following my Knobloch story; Elinor Glyn, who is now writing an original story starring Gloria Swanson; Avery Hopwood, Henry Arthur Jones and others of the group of famous authors whom Mr. Lasky has enlisted to the service of the screen.

"The day is soon coming, I earnestly believe, when our best authors will write for the screen first, and think afterward about writing for the stage only. Moreover, authors are coming to realize that a good book or a good play does not necessarily make a good picture, and are turning more and more to the screen to learn its technique first hand."

New Ticket Chopper Offered by Newman

Wood Replaced by Steel in Body Of Model Which Is Now Being Marketed

What has been termed the biggest improvement over existing styles of ticket choppers was recently put on the market by the Newman Manufacturing Company of Cincinnati, Ohio, manufacturers of theatre accessories.

The new product is marketed under the name of the "Newman Steel-Clad Ticket Chopper." It is constructed of cold-rolled steel, heavily braced at the joints and reinforced throughout. The finish is a correct reproduction of grained mahogany, enamedled and highly polished. The trimmings which include the handles, feet, wheels, etc., are nickeled. It is similar in construction to the substantial wooden chopper of recent years, the patent mechanism having been slightly changed and a steel body replacing the wooden box.

What has always been considered a strong feature of the Newman chopper—the automatic ticket feeder has been supplemented by the installation of lateral-cutting knives. Just a few tickets are fed at one time to the mutilating knives, making, it is claimed, the clogging of the machine an impossibility.

Parker Back With Lasky

WITH THE PROCESSION IN LOS ANGELES

By Harry Hammond Beall

DAGMAR GODOWSKY, daughter of the world famed pianist-composer Leopold Godowsky, who has appeared in a number of Universal pictures, is confined in a hospital in Los Angeles suffering from an attack of appendicitis. Miss Godowsky recently played the part of a native South American girl in "Honor Bound" with Frank Mayo.

Prohibition officers recently came near being involved in a pistol duel with FRANK LAWRENCE, chief film editor at Universal City, as he was returning to Hollywood in his car through a blinding rain. The officers ordered Lawrence to open the back portion of his car in order to inspect it. Lawrence refused as he had a roll of valuable film in the compartment. His refusal was the cue for the officers to reach for their guns. He insisted that they get in the car and accompany him to the Hollywood police station, where he drove the car in out of the rain and showed them the film. He was taking it home to do some editorial work on it and didn't propose to have it ruined to satisfy the curiosity of prohibition pushyfooters.

EDOE POLO, Universal star, together with J. P. McGowan, his director, and Madga Lane and Inex MacDonnell, who will play opposite Polo in "The Seal of Satan," a serial which will be enacted against the historic backgrounds of Moro Castle and San Juan Hill, have made application for passports to Cuba and will leave for location there this week.

ADOLPH ZUKOR, president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has returned to New York City, following a two weeks' stay. Mr. Zukor was fortunate in having the weather remain most pleasant during his visit, which added immensely to his enjoyment.

KATHERINE MACDONALD, "The American Beauty," will enjoy a few weeks' rest before starting on her ninth production for Associated First National. She has just returned from a hasty trip to New York, where she visited her mother and sister.

DAVID KIRKLAND will direct Mary Pickford's next picture. He has been associated with Henry Lehrmann in the direction of the latter's comedy productions for First National.

The executive offices of Gower Bros. and SOL LESSER have been literally flooded with requests from leading stars, directors and producers for allotments of seats for the opening performance of the new Ambassador Hotel theatre, which will take place during the latter part of January.

JOE M. SCHENCK has just concluded negotiations for the film rights to Andrew Souran's dramatic story "Courage," according to word received from Sidney Franklin.

JANE NOVAK, who was met with considerable success as a result of her characterization in "The River's End," and Charles West, who played the role of a dope head in the same production, will return to the Marshall Neilan studio in "Not a Drum Was Heard."

SOL LESSER returned from Chicago this week enthusiastic over the meeting of Associated First National franchise holders. Among other matters that claimed Mr. Lessor's attention during his Eastern visit was the arrangement of the George Beban tour of the important cities of America with his latest production "One Man In A Million."

MITO SEKI, a prominent merchant of Japan, was a recent guest of Sessue Hayakawa. He was extremely interested in watching the Japanese star film his latest story under the direction of Colin Campbell. Mr. Seki represents a number of prominent American concerns in Japan and has been asked by the Industrial Board of the Japanese government to report on the motion picture industry upon his return.

Twenty-five Goldwyn players, headed by Director Reginald Barker, left Los Angeles December 1 for Banff, Canada, to make exterior scenes for "Snow Blindness," a story by Katherine Napper Burt.

MASON N. LITON, who has been directing the Booth Tarkington "Edgar" series of comedies for Goldwyn, will take a month's vacation following the completion of "A Day's Diet," the eleventh comedy of the series.

A shiver of horror went through the Christie studios recently when T. Roy BARNES, "So Long Letty" star, who had gone duck-hunting with "Bill" Beaudine, wired to Al Christie as follows: "Beaudine forgot his moustache wax. What shall I do. Wire reply." Upon receipt of this harrowing message it is said that Al Christie swooned and upon recovering burst into tears.

NELLY EDWARDS, the comedy star, has been loaned by Special Pictures to play "Toto" the clown in the Avery Hopwood story now being done as a Mary Miles Minter production.

WILL M. RITCHIE, retiring as supervising director of the Realart Studio on account of ill-health, will take a vacation this month preliminary to assuming new duties as a writer for Paramount Pictures on Frank Woods' staff.

A new arrival in Los Angeles is Rupert Hughes, the Goldwyn author. He is accompanied by his wife and daughter. His first original screen story, "Mr. and Miserable Jones," is now in production under the direction of E. Mason Hopper. While in Los Angeles Mr. Hughes will make an intensive study of motion picture technique.

MILTON SILLS, who has one of the leading roles in the new Metro production, "What's the Matter with Marriage?" has purchased a beautiful new home in Crescenta Park, Hollywood. His home is but a few doors removed from the residence of Nazimova. Dustin Farnum is also a neighbor. A swimming pool and a large garden will be two interesting features of this popular player's new place.
Andy says—
Treat Her Well

A good wife is the sunshine of home.

An intoxicated husband is the moonshine of a home.

All women are good, but the wife is a little better.

When she becomes a Mother she is still better.

All women are better, still.

Some wives talk all the time.

All wives talk some of the time.

A wife is the first person to find double use for a rolling pin.

A wife hears more alibis than a jury.

A wife can make or break a husband.

She usually does one or the other.

Will give you many a chuckle and satisfy many.

More Than Thirty Authors Now Contribute to Goldwyn Program

This Is in Addition to the Half Dozen Writers Who Comprise Eminent Authors—List Is Made Up of Novelists of Note

More than thirty prominent American writers, in addition to the list of eminent authors, either have contributed stories for Goldwyn's fourth year program or are now preparing stories for it.

Rex Beach, Gouverneur Morris, Rupert Hughes, Leroy Scott, Mary Roberts Rinehart and Gertrude Atherton are the six Eminent Authors.

Tarkington Contributes

Among the others contributing is Booth Tarkington, author of a series of two-reel comedies of boy life known collectively as "The Emotions and Adventures of Edgar Pomeroy." The twelfth of the series is being filmed. Tarkington will contribute original scenarios for feature productions the coming year.

Ben Ames Williams is represented by four pictures, Will Rogers, "Jubilee!"; Tom Moore's, "The Great Accident"; Jack Pickford's "The Man Who Had Everything;" and Reginald Barker's production, "Godless Men," produced from "Black Paw!".

Rogers in Cobb Story

Katherine Newlin Burt's first success, "The Branding Iron," will be followed by "Snow Blindness." Reginald Barker directed both. Will Rogers, "Boys Will Be Boys." Peter Clark MacFarlane also contributes a Rogers vehicle, "Guile of Women." Madge Kennedy's "The Highest Bidder," was picturized from Maxmillan Foster's "The Trap."

Mabel Normand's "The Slim Princess" and Jack Pickford's "Just Out of College" were from stage successes by George Ade. Ralph E. Dyar's stage success, "A Voice in the Dark," has been done for the screen by Frank Lloyd, Graham Moffatt, a Scotchman, contributed "Hunty Pulls the Strings." Herman Raith, a Viennese, "The Concert;" and Maurice Maeterlinck, the Belgian dramatist, is writing one feature scenario a year.

Others Are Represented

Adapt Other Stories

Among the authors no longer living who are represented are J. G. Holland, whose "Seven Oaks" formed the basis for "I'm Call Me Jim," for Will Rogers; O. Henry, whose "The Roads of Destiny," as transmuted into a stage drama by Channing Pollock, formed a stellar vehicle for Pauline Frederick.

New Rothacker Plant To Open in February

Laboratory Chief and Staff Will Attend the Formal Affair in Hollywood

When Watterson R. Rothacker returned to Chicago after a fortnight upon the Coast, he brought with him the contract for the promise of a four million dollar laboratory completed in January. The formal opening is planned for February. Mr. Rothacker and members of the executive staff will attend.

Sees Holubar Picture

"While in Los Angeles I saw Al Kaufman's super-feature, 'Man, Woman, Marriage,' which is one of those expensive and portentous pictures of the year and which will play an important part on the First National program of 1921," said Mr. Rothacker. "This picture was directed by Allan Holubar with Dorothy Phillips in the leading role.

"It is one of those present at a delightful dinner given for me by Harry Kane in honor of Charles Ray, at the Beverly Hills hotel. The dinner was marked by wonderfully enthusiastic predictions concerning the future of First National and Associated First National. We will begin printing Ray's coming production, 'The Old Swimm'min' Hole,' in the Chicago laboratory the first of the year."

De Havens at Work

"I found Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Havens hard at work at the Chaplin studios finishing their next First National release. Louis B. Mayer is particularly enthusiastic about Anita Stewart's picture, 'Sowin' the Wind,' which is soon will be published through First National. At the Mayer studios Edwin Carewe was making progress on 'The Crossed Wires,' starring Anita Stewart."

"Mr. Fineman of the Katherine Mac-Donald company, told me that Miss McDonald's next First National picture will be the biggest ever, replete with thrills and big moments."

"I was a guest at a delightful dinner party given by Gloria Swanson, on the occasion of the birthday of her husband, Herbert Somborn."

Special Christmas Film

Ford Motion Picture Laboratories have produced a special Christmas film for issue during the holidays, a one-reel drama portrayed by actors.

The film is entitled "Christmas Thoughts" and is described as bearing the real while of the Christmas spirit. This film is published so that it can be used in the theatres of the country during the holidays. "Orchiby Turns Cupid," starring Anita Stewart, is the contribution of the Ford laboratories and Fitzpatrick & McElroy of Chicago, representatives, to the good fellow movement of the holidays.

New Loring, Minneapolis,

Books All Educational

The Loring theatre, located at Nicollet and Fourteenth streets, Minneapolis, was opened Saturday, Dec. 3. Its seating capacity is 1,300. Architecturally it is one of the most modern of theatres. "Torchy Turns Cupid" was featured on the opening bill, and with the first change of program Lloyd Hamilton in "The Sindic."

McDonald, was opened, the theatre has announced the policy of showing all the Educational comedies.

Two More $50 Checks

H. J. Aldous, treasurer of the Rothacker Film Mfg. Company, is a busy man these days writing out $50 checks for holiday babies. Carl Coverdale, laboratory developer, proudly announced the arrival of a girl last week and claimed the $50 reward, and W. H. Strafford, another Rothacker employee, put in a claim the next day for Enid Adair Strafford.

Aaron Jones, Adolph Linick and Peter J. Schaeffer believe in spreading the Christmas cheer over the whole year and this Christmas they will present each employee under the J. L. & S. banner with a life insurance policy, premiums paid. Those who have been in the firm’s employ six months get $1,000 policies and they run from that up to $5,000, according to the length of service. Each $1,000 policy increases $500 per year until it reaches $5,000. Every doorman, projection machine operator and stage hand, as well as stenographers, will receive his or her policy this week.

Y. Crump, popular film salesman, transferred his effects from Pathe to Select on Saturday, Dec. 18.

Don R. Davis, Pathe’s star road salesman, left the Chicago office Friday last Saturday and left for St. Louis, where he will sell Pathe films hereafter. Don’s home is in Arkansas. Hence the move. He will be succeeded by Gene Quinlan, late advertising man with the Chelton publications.

An endurance pinocchio contest was staged in Galesburg, Ill., last week by “Dutch” Myers, H. Weisman, Harry Grant, and A. F. Hickox. Madison Smith’s recent six-day contest is said to be a tame affair compared to it, according to the participants. Yes, “Dutch” copped the dough.

Oscar Florence, Pathe salesman, is looking for a plate glass window for the side door of his fly. Who’ll contribute? Jas. Gulick has become an oil magnate. How do these Pathe men do it?

Abel Stineberg has had his hands full last week piloting Zena Keefe, the cute little Select star, around Chicago’s theatre. But Abe put it over in fine style. Got lots of notice and everything. But Paul G. Smith says the Stratford Hotel serves the best halibut in town. Everyone else at the M. P. Press Club meeting thought it was pork. How about it, P. G.?

Harry Rice, business manager of Independent Films Association, is back in Chicago after a three-weeks’ trip through the east. Harry says he has a real sensation to spring on an unsuspecting film world in a few days. “Nothing like it has ever been attempted,” according to Harry. Well, we shall see what we shall see.

Melba Theatre, Canton, Opens With Big Crowds

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

CANTON, O., Dec. 21.—Canton witnessed the opening of a new theatre recently when the Melba, a 632-seat house, opened its doors for the first time. The Melba began under the most favorable circumstances. The picture was playing to capacity on “Humoresque.” Because Frank Lupson, owner and manager, is a man of magnetic business experience but with no experience in the motion picture field, F. E. Walters, exploitation representative for the Cleveland exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, was called in to put over the opening show.
SHOTS AND MISSES

By Mac

Someone informed us the other day that a certain exhibitor was using full page ads in the Danville Beacon Light. So be it. Our hat’s off to the subtle Tom Rosan, manager of the Terrace theatre. Mebbe Tom owns the hull darn village.

Sam Rieger is now covering the Chicago territory for the Illinois and Indiana exchange, and must be putting it over by the way he is carrying that perpetual smile with him these days.

Look what the wind blew in. We have a program from Manager Applebaum’s Ardmore theatre stating that the evening of Dec. 18 he will offer. Fannie Ward in “She Played and Paid,” also a “G & Mule-Ostreich Com.” Listen, “Apple,” are you holding out on us? You might as well let us in on any NEW ones you offer your clientele.

While stopping off for a brief visit en route to New York from California, H. J. Roberts, general sales manager for Special Pictures, was given a most agreeable surprise upon his arrival at the Hotel Sherman when Frank H. Marshall, central division manager, presented him with a gorgeous silver cigarette case, gold lined, as a token from the central division managers of Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Detroit, Cincinnati and Indianapolis.

The ol’ bowling howls are in the atmosphere once again. Jim Salter, Ed Rowley, Ed Lansing and Bill Bremmer claim to be the best bowlers of local filmdom and are anxious to take on any combination in film circles that care to dispute the claim for any amount.

We arise to comment on the advent of a budding Apollo Belvidere within our midst. Yes siree, no other than the genial Sid Goldman, manager of Associated Producers. He is now a member of the freshman squad at Postle’s. One of the cunniest stunts Sid puts over is the Neapolitan dip. In other words, you are to stand rigid, bending from the waistline and touching the floor with your finger-tips without bending the knees. Just now Sid is giving his own version of how to do it, and take it from us, ’tis a veritable gem in calisthenics.

Max Roth and Frank Marshall, division managers for the Special Pictures Corporation, arrived in Chicago to attend the conference arranged upon the arrival of H. J. Roberts, general sales manager, Dec. 17.

J. O. Campbell, city sales representative for the Associated, is busy these days accepting the congrats of his fellows salesmen upon his successful arrangement with Manager Brown of the M&L theatre centered less to play his company’s offerings for exclusive loop runs. Thata boy, “O. B.,” we knew you had it in yer.

E. M. de Berri formerly associated with the Da-Lite screen of this city, passed through Dec. 16 on his way from Iowa to New York. Ed has been trying his ability as a salesman for the Philadelphia branch of Select Pictures, resigning recently to accept an affiliation with one of the big studios east in the laboratory department.

Ivan French, former film salesman around this territory, has forsaken the films and is now publicity manager for “Stepping Around,” with the Sunshine Bathing Girls. Regret losing you Ivan, but have to admit you are SOME picker when it comes to switching jobs.

I. Maynard Schwartz, manager of the Educational, hailed us the other day in the mess hall of the Winter Garden, and after singing us a couple of operatic arias, we finally concluded that Mayme has added another cycle to his accomplishments and we may expect any day to see his nomer mixed with Rosa Raisi, Giacomo di Rienzo, Caruso and the rest of those songsters.

With the charming Louie Fazenda departing eastward last week, the handsome Pat Dillon, manager of Special Pictures, can be paged at the Dillon castle most any time from now on.

With Tom Mitchell again hovering about the Film Exchange building, having returned to the Doll-Van exchange, No. 207 again looks natural. The smoking salon with “Mitch” absent is verily a local calmity.

Didja notice the extraordinary projection at Woods theatre where Griffith’s “Way Down East” is packing them in? Well if you’ve been there you’ve noticed it, and right here we want to tip you off as to who is responsible for it. It’s none other than our old friend “Jack” Williams of the Mid-West Company.

Commencing this week Universal is holding regular weekly trade showings at their projection room in the Consumers building. These will be held every Wednesday at 1 o’clock, according to postcard notices which I. L. Leserman has just sent out.

The members of Associated Producers predict for the new year tremendous prosperity in all lines of business, including the motion picture theatres, despite necessary readjustment of industry and standards of living.

Those who would seek at this time to "talk a depression into being" are fools and the enemies of this, the greatest and most prosperous country the world has ever known.

"It took a picture like 'The Mark of Zorro' to do it," says Mr. Schenck of the Marcus Loew Offices

Mr. Hiram Abrams, Pres.,
United Artists Corporation
729 Seventh Avenue, New York City.

Dear Mr. Abrams:

I have just returned to my office from a screening of Douglas Fairbanks' new picture "The Mark of Zorro", and I cannot refrain from telling you that I think it is really the most wonderful picture he has made.

We believe the picture is so big that we have decided to play this feature in our theatres a full week instead of our usual policy which has always been to play everything three or four days.

It took a picture like the "Mark of Zorro" to do it.

Best wishes and kindest regards.

Yours very truly,

A Splendid Story With A Superlative Cast

Harry Leon Wilson's name is one that will attract many extra admissions to your box-office. And no less strongly appealing is the fact that this,—the greatest of all his sparkling comedies,—is enacted by a superlative cast,—a cast that is more than capable of doing it justice.

Joseph J. Dowling, the man who made "The Miracle Man" famous,—Claire Adams, starred in many past Benj. B. Hampton successes,—Robert McKim, "the best-loved villain on the screen,"—Niles Welch, voted by many the most popular juvenile of the present day,—these stars are a real attraction for your patrons.

THE SAGEBRUSHER

THE WESTERNERS

RIDERS OF THE DAWN
J. Parker Read, Jr., has achieved, in "A Thousand to One," starring Hobart Bosworth, a melodrama that is different. Though much of the action transpires in a Western setting, neither a six-shooter nor a two-gun bad man, black curses of the "Western movie," is visible.

In his newest Associated Producers picture, this young producer demonstrates that the message of the clean, upstanding story of a moral coward who conquered an evil self may be told on the screen without a foot of hokum or a breath of bombast.

Gentlemen:

"KISMET", week of November 21st, shattered

every record for the week's business in this theatre, and more than justified the lavish exploitation campaign preceding its engagement.

Our equipment for handling huge crowds was nearly paralyzed by the unprecedented numbers waiting to see this picture. This condition existed through-cout the week.

The writer takes this means of expressing both thanks and appreciation for the splendid co-operation extended by your force.

Very truly yours,

To those aspects of modern life of which he is admittedly the greatest master, Cecil B. "Mr. Wu"

The Play in Which Walker Whiteside Starred for One Year on Broadway

A father punishes betrayal with death—the death of his idolized daughter.

On the family of the betrayer, the revenge of the crafty Oriental is swift, seemingly sure and doubly diabolical.

It is founded upon the ages old principle of an Eye for an Eye.

A Woman for a Woman

The Mother, trapped, knowing submission to Wu will prevent her son’s execution chooses a Spartan death.

Mr. Wu, in a moment of serene gallantry takes from the hand of the Mother the poisoned cup of tea that will save her family’s honor.

If Wu drinks it the tapping of a gong will restore to liberty Mother and son.

What does he do?

Go to the local Pathe Exchange and ask the Stoll manager to show you “Mr. Wu,” that for yourself you may see this thrilling denouement and the fast-moving action leading up to it. Then we are confident you will agree with us that.

Worthy to be mentioned in any company. The master work of a truly great screen artist, made in her palmiest days during her spectacular development by the Selznick organization.

Louis B. Mayer
Presents His First Annual
ANITA STEWART ANNIVERSARY WEEK

To comply with so many unsolicited requests from exhibitors in large and small towns all over the country I have, at their demand, inaugurated, and feel very proud to present, my first Anita Stewart Anniversary Week commencing January 16th, which I will make an annual event.

The product in which I have presented Anita Stewart, coupled with her popularity, has reached a pinnacle far surpassing my fondest dreams and this remark was made to me by one of the most prominent executives of First National: "Mayer, in my opinion, you have been the most consistent shooter in First National and I congratulate you."

My ambition is a full 100% representation in the United States. Many exhibitors of the smaller towns have not, to date, played all the Stewart Productions. Every exhibitor has played one or more but I want a full 100% representation!

First National branch managers have received instructions relative to revised price list which I am sure will meet with the approval of all exhibitors to such extent that I will gain the object of this campaign, namely, a full 100% representation of the Anita Stewart product in every town.

Exhibitors by the score have repeatedly told me that the cost and worth of my productions upheld my predictions and you will please me greatly by making my first annual Anita Stewart Week commencing January 16th a great big success.

I thank you.

LOUIS B. MAYER

"If more pictures were made like this one exhibitor's troubles would be over."—Pfeiffer Bros., Kenton, O.

"Great picture. Any exhibitor who can't cash in on this one better close up shop. Turned 'em away 3 days."—J. F. Foss, Ogden, Utah.

Advertising Wisdom

Swift and certain attainment of a preeminent position in a competitive field is invariably the result of vision, initiative and a very fair measure of commonsense administration.

In the motion picture industry there is not a more graphic example of the swift and certain attainment of a preeminent position in its chosen field than that instanced by the Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., in the division of short subjects.

In perfect accord with the vision, initiative and commonsense administration upon which the splendid Educational organization has been built is the Educational's plan, just announced, of confining its advertising to EXHIBITORS HERALD and one New York medium.

After a thoroughly intelligent and conscientious analysis of advertising media and circulation facts the executives of the Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., have entered into this arrangement which enables them through EXHIBITORS HERALD, supplemented by one other national medium, to cover the entire motion picture trade in the United States and Canada completely and at a minimum cost through the elimination of additional media of lesser reader's interest and smaller distribution.

Educational is to be complimented upon this thoroughly constructive move which obtains for it an advertising schedule arrangement which assures a complete and thorough distribution of its advertisements among the exhibitors of the United States and Canada on a basis which effects a substantial saving which is of a very pertinent interest to Educational's customers as well as to the company.

Educational has proved its right of leadership in the field of short subjects and in the plan just embraced it assumes an intelligent leadership in the important work of clarifying the facts relative to motion picture trade papers and circulations.

AS THE motion picture industry launches into the New Year there is an unusually imperative necessity for a sane and thorough understanding of the conditions affecting the business.

In the present period of readjustment that already has here and there evidenced serious manifestations the position of the motion picture industry is unique among those of the great industries of the country. As every observer knows various types of business already have been hard hit in the process of readjustment. Others that have thus far escaped will eventually be touched before the process terminates because no business which comes within the province of the readjustment will be able to evade the working out of the natural laws of commerce.

The pertinent question is, just what is the position of the motion picture industry in this process of readjustment? and the answer is that it is not concerned in it at all.

THE readjustment that is now going on, which is variously misconstrued as a business depression or the beginning of one, is simply the re-establishment of commodity production upon a normal basis and the wiping out of artificial values in merchandise. The late war and every other war of history has resulted in a system of financial pyramiding which carries with it inflation of values. Very obviously this pyramiding cannot go on indefinitely, and when the limit of the natural law is reached the process of deflation automatically ensues.

The working out of this process is thoroughly equitable, even though it is difficult for those concerned to view it that way. Those businesses which are inordinately benefited by the inflation of values are the ones to feel the sting of the readjustment. Those producers of commodities who first have the advantage of abnormal demand must later bridge the lean period while an even balance is being re-established.

The motion picture industry gained nothing incidental to the burst of commercial activity during and immediately following the war. And, consequently, it has nothing to repay: no readjustment to be undergone. The progress of the motion picture industry during the years since the commencement of the European war has been normal and even and has not been due to the occurrence of those things in business which must now be compensated for.

THROUGHOUT the war and since the Armistice this industry has given its customers—the public—honest values for every dollar received. This industry has no stocks to be depreciated. This industry faces no shutdown through an over-production of its product. And of greatest importance is the incontrovertible fact that there is nothing in the existing situation that even suggests the possibility of a lessening in box office receipts.

The product that has been and is now being offered the public in the motion picture theatres of the country is the biggest and best value that is now or has been given to them for their money. And any industry, whether it be that of motion pictures or anything else that can substantiate a similar claim, need have no fear of the readjustment that is now going on, because it simply does not concern it at all.

The problems and perils that this industry faces at the outset of the new year are those of an internal nature, which are peculiar to the industry itself and are entirely foreign to the general business and financial situation. Any effort to link up this industry with those businesses which must now settle down and settle up after a wild orgy of inflation, pyramiding and profiteering—in which excesses it has had no part—is predicated on a serious lack of knowledge of the true facts.

On a basis of fact and not hollow optimism it may be unqualifiedly declared that for 1921 this industry faces a period of no uncertain progress and prosperity.
Heraldgrams

MARSHALL NEILAN paused in Chicago on December 22 between trains, en route to New York from the Coast. Other notables from the film colony who passed through the same day were Dorothy Phillips, Allen Holubar and Al Kaufman.

JESSE L. LASKY, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky corporation, who has been on the West Coast for two months, will return to New York January 2. He will remain in the East for several months.

JOE BRANDT, president of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, shook hands with Chicago friends on December 21. He is making a special sales trip through the Southwest.

CHARLES SCHWERN, the well-known state righter, was another Chicago visitor last week.

CHESTER A. CLARK, business manager for J. Stuart Blackton, sailed on the Imperial, leaving her December 28th, to open the Blackton offices and start the new international film producing organization.

TOM TERRIS, director of the Tom Terris-Vinagro productions, addressed 5,000 students at the Stuyvesant high school, New York, on Dec. 21, at their Christmas exercises.

FAIR C. QUINN left New York on Sunday, Dec. 26, for Los Angeles where he will be engaged for a month completing arrangements for the next Jack Dempsey serial.

GEORGE A. BLAIR, sales manager for Eastman Film department, visited the Rothacker Laboratories, Chicago, last week. Other visitors during the week were Louis B. Mayer, John M. Stahl and W. H. Leahy, all of the Mayer productions.

According to all reports from the West Coast, "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" will kick up as much dust when released as "The Queen of Sheba" or "Foolish Wives" which is going some.

CLARA WHITTLE, one time World Film Corporation star, who recently married James Young is to return to the screen under her husband's direction. She will appear as Clara Young.

ELISSA BENSON, manager of the Strand theatre, San Francisco, has resigned to become manager of the Rialto. He succeeds E. A. Smith, who took Berg's place.

Ten quarts of fresh milk are being used every day to paint the screen at the Woods theatre, Chicago, according to D. W. Griffith's press agent, and to back up his assertion he points to the stage carpenter's fat kitten. We suppose the milk is to give "Way Down East" the proper atmosphere.

"BRONCHO BILLY" ANDERSON, after staying from the screen for six years, is to return to his former screen.

ROSCOE Arbuckle returned from a sightseeing trip of Paris on the Olympic, December 28th. He was accompanied by William Vogel and Mr. and Mrs. George Fitzmaurice who were also on board.

On Saturday, Dec. 25, Miss Ruth Leser—man, daughter of I. L. Leser, manager of the Chicago Universal exchange, was wedded to Theobald Schlaeger, one of the Universal salesmen, at the home of Dr. Schlemeter.

OLIVER MOROSO is to personally direct "The Half-Breed," a picture in which William Desmond will star supported by Frances X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne and Aunt Little. The production will be made on the Coast.

LOUIS SHERWIN, former New York dramatic critic, who has been connected with the Goldwyn Los Angeles studios, has resigned.

It begins to look as though Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford would have to defer their European trip until the former catches up on his production schedule. An elaborate production of "The Virginian" is planned for "The Melodramatic" a Bob Wagne story, which in turn is to be sequel to "The Nut."

PETE SMITH, who is used to the swirling winds of Times Square, says it's pretty windy in Los Angeles and he has to go around with a pillowful of shot in each pocket to keep from being blown over the studio roof. Some wind.

HARRY SHERMAN is back in New York and has opened offices in the Fitzgerald building.

GEORGE H. HAMILTON has opened offices in the Film building, 727 Seventh avenue, New York, where he will handle twenty-six pictures during the coming year.

SARAH V. MASON, the Selznick continuity writer, has relinquished her contract.

ETHEL CLAYTON passed through Chicago, en route to California and the Lasky studios, Tuesday, Dec. 28.

What we'd like to know is how a new theatre can break "all records" the first week it is opened?

KATHERINE HILLERER, who years ago immortalized "Phoebe Snow" and the Lackawanna Railroad as "the road of anthracite," is credited with writing the subtitles for First National's "stellar attraction, "Passion."

FLORENCE ZIEGFELD, Sr., has been made brigadier general by special order of Frank S. Dickson, adjutant general chief of staff, on the command of Governor Lowden of Illinois, for his twenty years of "meritorious service as assistant inspector general of the Illinois state and National Guards."

J. WARREN KERRIGAN is the latest actor to announce the formation of his own company. He will work at the Hollywood studios and his company will be known as J. Warren Kerrigan Productions.

W. SOKERBET MACMACH is the latest of the big authors to join the film colony on the West Coast. He is on his way around the world and only stopping briefly in Los Angeles.

OPENING PAFAN

There was a man in our town
And he was real curt,
At getting the kale this fella
Was considered quite a beast,
But some stickers' came along
And offered him a chance.
To buy some moving picture stock
And he nearly lost his pants.

A FESTIVAL

The year 1920 will probably go down in history as the greatest in the life of the fifth industry.
Over $1,465 big deals were put over.
Negotiations were completed for the purchase of 26 studios in the U. S. A. by English capital.
Twenty-six deals immediately followed.
If every story who was reported to be going to Europe had been true, they would have taken all the boats of the White Star line three years to take them across.
Four hundred and seventy-six directors made pictures that were "kicked out," "Second Birth of a Nations" or "my finest work."
Six-five producing companies congratulated themselves on the cleverness of their titles, their stars, their directors and their extras.

SHOOT HIM AT SUNRISE

Colin Campbell, the director, must have his little joke, even at the expense of his fellow workers in these high and dry—particularly dry—times. Says he knows a place where you can get eighteen-year-old Scotch whiskey at six bucks a quart and then slips you this address: "John MacKenzie, 241 East First street, Glasgow, Scotland."

WHAT'S THE ANSWER?

"See 'The Misleading Lady' and learn what it is that makes some men rough and what can be done with a girl who won't behave," is a Metro catch-line. We know what makes some men rough, but what's the answer to the other?

"WES" AND HIS FRECKLES

Wesley Barry, the Marshall Neilan star, was asked the other day by an admiring youth how he came by his freckles.
About 1045 of them fell through.
"Well, yuh see, I was on a roof one day and got my face wet and then the sun came out and I just rusted."

HOT STUFF

They are making a picture on the coast called "Tolasoce." That ought to put pep into any program.

BIG TIME COMING

The "soup and nuts" suits will have to be grabbed away from the moths again next week for scenery at the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce hall at the Astor January 5.

BRING YOUR LUNCH—FILM

That Italian production in 77 reels that takes fifteen hours to run ought to be a sufficiency for the patron who thinks exhibitors skimp their shows.

By the way, don't forget to write it 1921.
Membership Meeting of Indiana Executives to Be Held After Holiday
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)
INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Dec. 25—Gustave G. Schmidt, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Indiana, has announced that a meeting of the executive committee of the organization will be held in Indianapolis immediately following the holiday season, to determine plans and methods of obtaining a full membership in the organization.

Ways and means of financing the organization and plans for an intensive campaign of publicity also will be taken up, according to Mr. Schmidt who recently returned from the meeting of exhibitors in New York with the officers of the national association.

"There is no question in my mind but what the exhibitors of Indiana will, within the next few months, have an organization of great power," Mr. Schmidt said.

Tax Burdens Bring Protest From Oregon Theatre Men Letter Addressed to Members of Congress Asks That the Revenue Bill As It Affects the Exhibitors Be Reconsidered
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)
PORTLAND, ORE., Dec. 28.—The Motion Picture Exhibitors League of Oregon at a recent meeting in the Benson hotel addressed a letter to the members of congress asking that the revenue bill as it affects theatre men be reconsidered.

The petition declared that at present the government taxes are too great—burdens for the owners of the smaller houses. An effort will be made by the Oregon association to have similar action taken by the exhibitors of Washington.

Secretary Houston Recommends an Increase
"Secretary Houston," declared Melvin G. Win-stock, vice-president of the organization, "in his final report as a public official has seen fit to recommend an increase, not only on the incomes of moderately paid men and women, who can least afford added tax burdens, but has recommended in addition a doubling of the theatre admission tax, and an increase in the 5 cent taxation on the amount of film rentals.

"The amusement people of the United States, embracing the drama, opera, musical comedy and motion pictures, so far from submitting without protest to increased taxation, are going to congress in a body in an attempt to have the theatre taxbusiness altogether abolished, or, at least, substantially modified."

Point Out Tax Burdens
The tax burdens now shouldered by the exhibitors were detailed to those present. It was pointed out that under the present regulations of the revenue bill an occupation tax is levied on each seat in a theatre. In a house seating 250, the federal tax is $50 a year, and $200 for a 2,000 seat theatre. This ratio is believed by film men to be unjust to the small exhibitor.

One requirement is that this tax must be paid by the owners, regardless of the fact that it had been paid previously. This provision is believed by the exhibitors to violate the spirit of the bill.

Ask That On Gross Receipts
In the petition to congressmen the theatre men suggested that the admission tax be made on the gross receipts, instead of the ticket. It was pointed out that when the scale of price is $1.00 and $2.50, the tax amounts to approximately 15 per cent because each individual admission is taxed.

The 5 per cent rental tax is considered a great burden, in view of the fact that the exhibitors are called upon to meet numerous other taxes.

Government Rules Local Postmasters Can Settle All Parcel Post Claims
(Washington, Bureau, Exhibitors Herald)
WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 24.—Motion picture men and others who use the parcel post service for the transportation of films, paper, etc., need no longer send their claims for the loss of or damage of insured parcels to Washington.

Under orders just issued by the postmaster general, postmasters at all of the larger offices are empowered to receive such claims, investigate and pass upon them and make payment of indemnity without referring any but the most complicated cases to Washingtion.

In the past it has been the inflexible rule of the post office department that all claims should be referred to Washington, where the claim was the subject of investigations of such intensity that it was frequently a matter of many months before the sender of the parcel received his insurance money. This procedure naturally aroused much unfavorable criticism. The new orders will result in materially speeding up the settlement of such cases.

Stockholders Visit Terre Haute Houses
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)
TERRE HAUTE, IND., Dec. 28—Stockholders of Consolidated Realty and Theaters Company from Evansville visited Terre Haute recently to personally inspect the new Liberty theatre which opened Christmas Day. They visited also the Capitol theatre which opened at Clinton Christmas eve. The Capitol is under the management of Russell Brentlinger.

Slayer of Exhibitor To Hang February II
Eddie Brisbane, confessed slayer of William Mills, manager of the Crawford theatre, Chicago, will hang on February 11, the Supreme Court having sustained the action of the lower court. Brisbane, in his confession, blamed drink. He said he went to the theatre on the night of the murder to rob the box office. When Mills confronted him, he fired.

$1,000,000 Theatre To Be Built in Dallas
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)
DALLAS, TEX., Dec. 28.—A theatre to be one of the largest in the South will be erected by Charles T. Jones of Dallas and Jesse Jones of Houston. Its cost is approximately estimated at $1,000,000.

Begin New York Theatre
SPRINGFIELD, N. Y.—Plans have been drawn for a motion picture theatre here and work has been begun upon its building.
Educational Opens Two More Branches to Handle Business

One Will Be Located at Albany, N. Y., While the Other Will Be at Salt Lake City—This Will Give 29 in This Country

AFTER completing its own exchange system with twenty-seven offices in the principal distributing centers in the United States and at the six focal points in Canada, Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., announces it will immediately add two additional branches in order to care for the demand for its product.

One of these will be in Albany and located at 308 Broadway. It will care for the middle portion of the state as far south as Westchester county's northern limits and the territory below that of the Buffalo office. A considerable portion of this territory has not been developed for sales and an intensive campaign will mark its opening.

Another branch to be opened is the new branch to be established in Salt Lake City. Manager E. J. Drucker of the Denver territory has found the demand for Educationalists so strong that he is opening a branch in Salt Lake City early in January. He already has made numerous bookings in Salt Lake, including showing of all the comedies and most of the other product at the American Theatre. A separate office in Salt Lake will afford better shipping facilities and will enable more continuous use of the same prints.

According to the home office every exchange is showing the effects of the year-end drive just started, which is evidenced by the demand for additional prints on many subjects. Since each office is charged a certain amount against each print and therefore seeks to conduct its exhibits with the least number possible for efficient service, this is said to be a certain indication of increasing business. Service is one of the chief points stressed by Educational's exchanges, and this point is being emphasized during the current drive.

With barely six months passed since the opening of our first office," says President E. W. Hammons, "it is quite pleasing to find that we now have to go considerably beyond our original schedule. The demand for Educational product has exceeded our original estimates so greatly that we have had to establish these new branches. They deserve to be considered largely service stations. The demand for our pictures has grown so great that we do not consider our offices so much from the standpoint of sales as from that of service to the exhibitor. Yet that very point we are making the foundation of our success, for we are endeavoring to give the local manager a degree of co-operation that has not been known before in this field.

With the opening of these two new offices we take third rank among all the motion picture organizations of the country in the number of our branches. We will continue to open them with every demand for service. We established this organization as specialists in the short-subject field, and we promised to give the utmost in exhibitor co-operation, and there is no limit to the extent to which we will go to meet every demand for the theatre managers."

C., Dec. 28.—Plans are being made by the American Federation of Labor to fight reformers of the country who are seeking passage of blue laws which will prohibit what the agitators term a "commercialized" Sunday. It is understood that in all probability the labor organization will join with the Anti-Blue Law League in its campaign.

William L. Mann, leader of the League, has been in Washington conferring with Samuel Gompers, president of A. F. of L. and other labor officials, and is understood to have been promised the co-operation of Gompers.

It is planned to distribute buttons to the patrons of the motion picture theatres and to use other propaganda in the nature of screen slides. The work of the labor organization probably will consist of propaganda distributed among its members.

Xmas Stunt in Charleston Nets Theatre Men $15,000

Carrier Brothers Place Gift Book on the Market, the American Legion, Red Cross and Others Aiding in Big Holiday Sale

CHARLESTON, W. Va., Dec. 28.—An enterprising exploitation stunt smacking of the holiday spirit was concluded on Christmas day by the management of the Strand theatre, Jimmy and Eddie Carrier.

As a result of their ingenious scheme of placing "amusement" on sale as a staple commodity in competition with the retail stores, the Carrier brothers realized $15,000 in an advance sale of tickets to their theatre.

Two Styles of Gift Books Are Provided

Two styles of gift books, on the covers of which was a picture of Santa Claus and a holly design in red and green, were placed on the market. One style contained ten admission tickets for children and sold for $1.50. The other had five adult admission tickets and retailled at $1.50.

To herald the stunt, two styles of one sheets were posted throughout the city. Twenty-four sheets as well as window cards also were used to spread the news of the gift book idea.

10,000 Are Printed

Ten thousand of the gift books were printed originally, but before Christmas had arrived a rush order for 5,000 additional books was given to the printer.

Aiding in the disposal of the gift books were the American Legion, the Red Cross, Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, White Cross Girls, Ladies' Auxiliary, other clubs and lodges and one of the largest book stores here. A special display of the gift books was made in a conspicuous window in the book store.

Legion Is in Charge

The American Legion took active charge of the sale, receiving 15 per cent of the gross receipts in return. Within a week after the sale started a city-wide campaign had been launched. The Legion prevailed upon every society to distribute its quota of gift books.

A booth was erected on the post office steps by the Legion, girls being posted throughout the day to handle the sales. Other girls organized a house-to-house campaign covering every section of the community.

Allowing 15 per cent for overhead for printing gift books, stands, window cards, etc., the total of sales would amount to $15,000. Allowing for the loss of a certain percentage of the gift books, the Carrier brothers believe the ultimate profit of the campaign will be considerably larger.

Priest Attacks Plan To Sabbathize Towns

Men Should Go to Church Sundays Then Choose How to Spend Time

Religious atavism prompts the movement to Sabbathize the north shore suburbs of Chicago, according to the Rev. Father Du Pensee of Milwaukee, who spoke in the Church of the Immaculate Conception of Waukegan on Sunday, December 26.

Agitated by Fleming

The priest's attack was prompted by the address delivered by Dr. W. S. Fleming at a recent meeting of the Church Community Council, which represents seven north shore churches, at Waukegan. Dr. Fleming advocated a revival of the old New England blue laws.

In his attack, Father De Pensee declared that "Sunday was made for humanity, not humanity for Sunday."

Men Should Choose

"Certainly men should go to church," he continued, "but after worship they should be permitted to spend their time as they choose."

Twelve towns—Wilmette, Evanston, Kewitworin, Indian Hill, Winnetka, Hubbard Woods, Glencoe, Ravenswood, Highland Park, Lake Forest, Lake Bluff and Waukegan—are involved in the blue law campaign on Chicago's north shore.

LAEMMLE SCOFFS at CRY of DEPRESSION

Says Industry Will Be Affected Least by Unrest Because It Did Not Profiteer

THERE is too much calamity howling among motion picture men, in the opinion of Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, who recently returned to New York after a survey of the California production centers and of the conditions in the various film exchanges from Coast to Coast.
The film official believes that the motion picture industry has less to fear from the present general business unrest than any other industry. Motion picture producers and exhibitors, he contends, did not profiteer during the war and immediately afterwards, and consequently have no inflation to unscramble and no fictitious prices to reduce.

The Universal chief predicts there will be much less production during the coming months. This state of affairs he welcomes as a much needed correction for the great over production of the past months. It is his opinion that both the producer and the exhibitor will be brought successfully through the coming year, by lessened production and concentration on big pictures with high exploitation value.
He urges that all film men, producers, distributors, exhibitors and others, turn their faces away from general business conditions and recognize that the amusement field is the last that will suffer from the pinch.
Discussing the relation of the present conditions to the film industry, Mr. Laemmle said:

"This cry of business depression is all wrong.

"I won't deny that there is a certain amount of business uneasiness in coming production lines, but there never was a period in which the motion picture business was in a more flourishing condition than it is today, and there has never been a time when exhibitors were more prosperous.

"Naturally there is a slump in some lines, but any thinking person knows that this slump had to come sooner or later, and the surprising fact is that it did not come sooner.

"During the war everybody made a lot of money. Some saved a little, but the big majority did not. While the people were making the highest wages they ever earned in all their lives, they did not stop to consider the price of anything, and the profits made by profits, thought they would continue to gouge the public.

"We'll keep it up as long as we can, and when we can't we'll can the idea, and get back to earth, is the way they reasoned. Then the people began to awaken to the fact that they could get along without certain things which were costing them twice or three times as much as they were worth, and suddenly they quit buying. They left the market in with prices which had been reached at the very highest prices, and in order to dispose of their stocks the merchants and manufacturers had to get prices down to something like normal.

"I'm not trying to argue an economic question. I simply want to show you how business uncertainty, or whatever you choose to call it, hasn't a thing to do with the motion picture business.

"Like other commodities the price of production of motion pictures doubled and trebled during the past three years, but unlike other lines the tremendous increase in the price of production was carried on to the ultimate consumer, as was done in other lines of business. Rentals are higher now than they were three years ago, but they are just about what the increase really amounted to, nothing like the increase which was made in commercial lines.

"Exhibitors may have made slight increases in admission prices, but they did not go wild and put the price up so high that they now have to make radical reductions. People may refrain from buying suits of clothes for $75 or $100 that are worth $25 or $40, but they are not giving up attendance at picture theatres, the admission prices of which are 15 cents, 25 cents or 50 cents.

"As a matter of fact, even if business were as bad as it is painted in some quarters, it would have very little effect on the amusement business generally, or the motion picture business in particular. Nothing short of a panic can stop the public from seeking amusement, and as moving pictures are the most popular of all forms of amusement, the people are going to continue to enjoy their favorite entertainment regardless.

"All this squawking doesn't do the industry any good, and the sooner it is stopped the better it will be for all concerned."
Advisability of Films
In Churches Debated Woman's Republican Club in Minnesota Town Favor
Censorship
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

KOKOMO, Ind., Dec. 25.—One faction in the First Baptist church here wished motioned pictures displayed in the church at various times. Another faction didn't. To avoid friction the pastor submitted the question to a debating team and the side that opposed the others won. It was argued that the use of films in religious institutions would commercialize the institutions. Prominent citizens acted as judges.

Theatrical Association and Exhibitors Affiliate in R. I.
Preparations Made at Convention to Collect Public Sentiment on the Proposed Blue Laws and Other Legislative Questions
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Dec. 28.—The outstanding feature of the convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Rhode Island, in session here for one day, was the approval of the arrangement by which the Theatrical Managers' Association of Rhode Island, representing the legiti-mate theatres of the state, becomes affiliated with the exhibitorial body.

By the affiliation the two organizations pledge themselves to act as one in all legislative matters affecting the interests of the two most important factors in Rhode Island amusement.

Selection of Congressional Representatives Is Made

Selections of congressional district representatives were made from the membership rolls of both organizations. These representatives will earest close contact with their individual legislators and apprise them of the state of public sentiment in respect to all proposed legislative movetments touching upon the business of the two bodies. Preparations will be made immediately to collect public sentiment on the proposed blue laws and other legislative questions.

The convention elected E. M. Fay president of the organization, and H.
Hertzberg, secretary-treasurer.

Sydney Cohen Present

Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, reported to the convention the result of the meetings in New York between the joint committees of the national body and the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. He offered the Rhode Island exhibitors the full support of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in all their undertakings.

Denies Special Pictures
Is to Enter the Field
Of Feature Production

The report that Special Pictures Corporation was to increase its scope and enter the feature field as well as the domain of comedies and other short subjects, has been denied by C. C. Craig, business manager of the West Coast production organization.

"At the time we turned our distribution over to Federated Film Exchanges of America and announced that we would confine our activities to production only, a rumor was started that we were to invade the feature field," says
Mr. Craig.

"Later when two feature companies leased space at our studio and started producing, this report gained further credence, for a weekly Los Angeles film magazine carried a story to the effect that these companies, namely the John Gorman, and a unit which Jesse D. Hampton is directing, were part of our organization. It is not true."

EXHIBITORS HERALD

"Am enclosing some reports on films shown here recently which I trust will help make still better the best department of the best trade paper it has ever

R. O. Rhoades, Manager, Orpheum Theatre, Converse, Ind.

"Enclosed please find reports for 'What the Picture Did for Me.' Will send reports in from time to time from now on as this department is certainly a great aid, especially for small-town exhibitors in booking pictures."—Adolph Kohn, Manager, Pastime Theatre, Granville, N. Y.

"I have left Ashland, coming here and putting in a modern house. Business is good, but I can't depend upon my memory any longer. I must have
'What the Picture Did for Me' if I expect to keep using the S. R. O. sign. Am enclosing a check for two years' subscription."—Mack Jackson, Manager,

RE-CHRISTENING the VILLAIN

By REGINALD BARKER

"THERE's talk of reforming the screen villain," remarked Reginald Barker, the ace of Goldwyn directors. "Whether it's part of the blue law reform movement I don't know. Some say once a villain, always a villain.

"I read one comment by Heywood Broun that 'dramatists have a perfect passion for reforming people,' and decrying the practice. Nowadays, along about the third act, the evil characters enlist in the war or get religion at home or become wealthy through honest effort, Mr. Broun said, and he restored belief in the verifier of this to life."

"But why take a stand on either side? The studio is not a factory, it is a laboratory. And drama has no fixed formula any more than life has. There is a great deal of good in the worst of us. There is bad in the very best of us.

"The villain who is continually and consistently evil is not believable. His villainy is mid-Victorian. It isn't being done. Bertha the Beautiful Sewing Machine Girl and watch of its ilk have been forgotten.

"We depict evil in the films, not for the sake of the evil, but to illustrate good.

"In Godless Men' the principal character would be erroneously termed the villain, although his actions are frequently those attributed only to villains. I would rather call him a tragic hero. Tangled to Fate in a net of his own weaving, his reaction, true to character, is a heroic and tragic solution.

"So why try to reform the villain? Why even call him that? Plays that have come down to us from thousands of years ago have as principal characters men who would be target for gallery hisses under Theodore Kremer standards. Now, still in their own petty decade, Kremer's thrillers and those of Drury Lane are very high forgotten.

"So we won't reform the villain. We'll rechristen him—a tragic hero."

Atlanta to Repeat in 1921
Success of 1920 Festival
Exposition Given Under the Auspices of Exchange Managers Association May Become Annual Affair in Southern City

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

ATLANTA, GA., Dec. 28.—The Southeastern Motion Picture Exposition was a huge success, and already, but two weeks after its close, plans are being made for another next year. It is hoped that it will be possible to have an exposition every year, just as Atlanta has Grand Opera once a year.

The stars who attended the exposition were Eugene O'Brien, Martha Mansfield, Muriel Ostriche, Lillian Walker, Louise DuPre', Helen Gardner, and Willie Mae Carson, leading lady to Charles Hutchison, in "The Fortyth Door."

New York Executives Attend the Exposition

Various executives of New York offices attended, among them being C. C. Pettijohn and Charles McChintock of Select Pictures, W. F. Tobias of World Motion Picture Corporation, Charles Geigerich, president of Fan Film Corporation, which is starring Miss DuPre', Mrs. Garnette Sabin, producer of the Muriel Ostriche Comedies, J. Dannenberg of Wd's Daily, and others.

The exposition was held under the auspices of the Film Exchange Managers' Association, and practically every big company with offices in Atlanta had booths. Among the most beautiful booths were First National, Fox, Select, Realart, Goldwyn, Paramount.

In the Fox booth, which was draped in rose color with a delicate touch of gold, there were potted plants and beautiful tinted pictures of various Fox people. At the top of the booth was a sort of pedestal on which was a cage, containing a beautiful live fox. Just above this cage was a photograph of William Fox, president of the company. A sign read, "He's a live one," and a hand pointed to Mr. Fox, with another pointing to the little animal.

Souvenirs Given Out

The chief feature of interest in the Realart booth was a giant palette—trade mark of the company—with the colors of the rainbow, artistically lighted from behind. Photographs of Realart stars were also in evidence, and were given away as much prized souvenirs.

First National had three booths, one of which was Miss Columbia, dressed in red, white and blue, with silver stars sprinkled over her bodice, and making a coronet around her peaked cap. In the heart of these stars tiny electric globes, in red, white and blue, glowed merrily. Behind Miss Columbia were life sized photographs of Mr. and Mrs. King (Florence) Vidor, Mildred Harris, Marshall Neilan and Mr. and Mrs. Carter de Haven in welcoming attitudes, extended their hands in greeting.

Pictures Welcome Visitors

In the next booth was a big book in which visitors were invited to register. In this booth life sized pictures of Norma and Constance Talmadge and of Charles Ray and Katherine MacDonald welcomed people to the booth. The third booth was a huge framed map of the states which are served by the Atlanta-National offices of First National—Georgia, Florida, Alabama, North and South Carolina and Tennessee—with tiny electric globes reporting the towns where there are First National franchises.

The Goldwyn booth was perhaps the richest booth of all, for the three-piece suite of furniture in it was valued at $5,000, being loaned to Goldwyn through the courtesy of the Empire Furniture Company of Atlanta. The suite was of antique mahogany, upholstered in tapestry of gold and warm brown. There were three very fine oils, scenes from "Earthbound," and in the center a placard which announced that screenings of Goldwyn pictures would take place the following morning in the Goldwyn projection room. Each day a small card was added to this placard, telling what picture would be screened the next day.

Select Booth Crowded

The Select booth was decorated in white and gold, with wicker furniture. Since Eugene O'Brien and Martha Mansfield spent most of their time in this booth, any further decoration was unnecessary. And this booth was the most crowded one at the Auditorium, too.

Maryland Governor Refuses Request to Remove Censors

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

BALTIMORE, MD., Dec. 28.—Governor Ritchie has declined to comply with the request of the Parents’ Club of Forest Park for removal of the present members of the state board of censorship, and for a general reorganization of that body.

The Parents’ Club alleged improper censorship by the present board. The chief executive, however, declared that he did not feel that the situation justifies the removal of the members of the present board for they “are all people of excellent standing in the community.”

Governor Makes Reply

The governor’s reply follows:

“I cannot help but feel,” says the governor in his reply to the club, “that such of the present criticisms should fairly be directed at the failure of the law to provide a sufficiently adequate system of inspection, rather than at the board.

“I feel that the members of the board are conscientiously doing the best they can, but with a confessedly inadequate inspection system the enforcement of their rules is often very difficult. There are probably other respects in which it might be well to amend the law, but all these matters, as you know, must await the next legislature.

Will Advocate Change

“When the next legislature meets, I shall be only too glad to advocate such legislation as may be practicable and effective in giving the highest and best standards in moving pictures, whether such legislation follows the lines you suggest of a five-member board or whether other lines seem advisable.

“The legislature does not meet again until 1922, and I think that the intervening year can best be utilized by a study and consideration of what legislation is really best rather than by attempting to formulate it at this early date.

Removal Not Justified

“I do not feel that the situation justifies the removal of the members of the present board, as you suggest should be done. They are all people of excellent standing in the community and, as I said before, they are doing the best they can in the face of many difficulties, and I think they are doing quite as well as any other three members who might take their places.”

Spiegel’s New Playhouse Is One of Beauty and Novelty

Rialto in Newark Was Designed by Thomas R. Lamb of New York—Strand and Newark Both Are Controlled by Eastern Showman

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEWARK, N. J., Dec. 28.—Beauty, novelty and safety are terms that can be justly applied to the Newark Rialto theatre, located at 915 Broad street here, another link in the large chain of theatres controlled and directed by Max Spiegel, of the Mitchell-Mark Corporation of New York. Newark Rialto Corporation consists of Max Spiegel, president, and William Rafferty of Syracuse, N. Y., secretary-treasurer.

Mr. Spiegel has great faith in Newark as this is the third house built by him in this city. His first was the Strand, a modern playhouse in every detail, and later the Newark theatre, then came the Rialto.

New York Architect Designer of Playhouse

Designed by Thomas R. Lamb of New York, the Rialto’s main entrance is in Broad street, opposite the city hall. To gain access to the auditorium, one passes through a lobby more than 100 feet in length. The walls of this lobby are covered with Sienna marble, with numerous columns breaking what would otherwise be a monotonous surface. Opening at right angles from the west end of the corridor in a broad foyer extending under rear of the auditorium as far as the north wall of the house.

From this two gently sloping aisles lead to the center of the auditorium, the rear seats which can be reached not only from them, but from two broad and easily mounted stairways, which, besides the utilitarian purpose, help to impart the dignity and beauty to the foyer. Midway in the latter and extending under the rising floor of the auditorium is a lounging room equipped with a fireplace and other furnishings that invite rest.

Floor Continues Up

It is in the auditorium itself that the architect has carried out his ideas of results that give a novel and pleasing aspect to the place. Instead of erecting the usual balcony and gallery, he has used the space that might be occupied by them as a continuation of the main floor. From the orchestra pit the seats rise upward to a broad and central cross aisle, back of which they again rise by easy gradations to the rear wall. By this arrangement the audience is made to appear as a unit and no section of it can feel that it is wearing the roof for a bonnet, or that it lacks breathing space.

The ceiling over the auditorium is constructed on the interlocking arch plan, the sections of the arches narrowing as they rise upward to the central ventilator from which a handsome chandelier is suspended. Mural paintings adorn the half circle space formed by the arches as they spring from the sidewalls, and the flat surfaces below them are covered with velvet embossed satin hangings in panel effect and maroon in color, which contrasts well with the ivory and silver tinting used elsewhere in the decorative scheme.

Half Circular in Shape

The stage, half circular in shape, is given a dignified and stately appearance by the groups of columns bordering it and supporting the curved ceiling. In the center of the orchestra pit is the console of the organ built by the Austin Company of Hartford, Conn., and equipped with three manuals, twelve stops and twenty-three mechanical combinations. The pipes have been placed in fireproof chambers back of the walls on both sides of the stage. There is an orchestra of fifteen men, with George H. Mergenroth of Newark as director.

The projection booth which overlooks the rear of the auditorium is one of the most complete in the state. There are three Simplex machines used, which throw a picture 20 by 20 on a Mirroroid screen. The throw is 130 feet. James Younce and George Breiner are the chief projectionists. All lighting and electrical work was done by Newberger Electrical Company, of Brooklyn.

Frank L. Smith, for a number of years publicity promoter of Max Spiegel Enterprises, is managing director of the Rialto, with Albert Barber, formerly assistant conductor of the Brooklyn Strand theatre, as house manager. Alex H. Sherman, formerly connected with one of the largest advertising agencies in the state, is in charge of the publicity.

First National Franchise is “Fair Document,” Says Clark

Luncheon Tendered to Official at Iroquois Hotel
In Buffalo by Rennie, Manager of the Latter Branch

A LUNCHEON was tendered to Ralph H. Clark, general manager and treasurer of Associated First National Pictures of New York, Inc., at the Iroquois hotel, Buffalo, on December 29, by Hugh Rennie, manager of the Buffalo First National offices.

Exhibitors from Northern New York attended, some being franchise holders and others not. According to reports, there was not a non-franchise exhibitor present who did not file an application following the meeting.

After a brief resume of the founding of the First National Exhibitors Circuit, Mr. Clark took up the reasons for the formation of the association.

“The exhibitors who were franchise holders in the circuit,” said Mr. Clark, “realized the advantages of a strong association of exhibitors buying their own pictures direct from independent producers and stars and felt that an enlargement of the idea would not only be for the benefit of every exhibitor member of it, but that each additional member would be a further guarantee to every independent star and independent producer; that there would be a big market for their wares just as long as they kept them up to the standard. It was the necessary protection against the monopolizing of the industry and the throttling of all independence out of it by moneyed interests.”

The speaker reviewed the many factors which had to be considered in the preparation of a plan for enrolling to exhibitors generally a share in the benefits which the organizers had derived as the First National Exhibitors’ Circuit, in order that the arrangement might be equitable both to the independent producers and the independent exhibitors.

“It state to you just as earnestly as it is possible for a man to speak,” Mr. Clark continued, “that it is my sincere belief that an Associated First National franchise is a wonderfully fair document. It is surety to the independent producer that there is an adequate reward awaiting him for every good production he may make while to the exhibitor it means he gets much more out of it than he could ever put in.”

Mr. Clark concluded by stating that there are but forty towns of a stated population in the United States and Canada not represented by an Associated First National franchise.

Moe Mark, of Mark Strand Enterprises, followed Mr. Clark and spoke of his reasons for enfranchising all his theatres and the benefits he had gained by it.

Julie Michaels of the Regent theatre, Buffalo, expressed the sentiment that, for him, every last lingering doubt as to the value of a franchise was removed. Harold B. Franklin told of becoming a franchise holder. He stated that at first he had been opposed to the franchise plan, but that the success of the idea appeared so spontaneous that he had been led to investigate, with the result that he had become a sincere believer in it as the only course for any exhibitor to adopt who values his independence.

Messrs. Marsey, Ullman, Walter Hayes, Weinberg and other non-franchise and franchise holders spoke of various matters connected with the franchise proposition. Harry Rose, of the Flash theatre, Tonowanda, was among the last speakers as a non-franchise holder and summed up the expressions of those who originally had not been favorably disposed toward the franchise proposition, in these words:

“To say that I was opposed to the franchise proposition would be stating it a little bit strong,” he said, “I was merely not interested. I felt that I knew what it was without asking for it, namely, another attempt to stifle the exhibitor. I didn’t want to know about it and wouldn’t listen. What I have heard today has sold me on the franchise proposition and I start work today on trying to procure a sub-franchise for my theatre.”

Monte Blue Becomes a Pedagogue

Goldwyn Is Finishing Four Productions at Culver City

They Are "Don't Neglect Your Wife," "Dangerous Curve Ahead," "A Tale of Two Worlds," and an "Edgar" Comedy

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

CULVER CITY, CAL., Dec. 28.—Four important productions at the Goldwyn studios here will be completed within the next week. They are: "Don't Neglect Your Wife," "Dangerous Curve Ahead," "A Tale of Two Worlds," and the twelfth in the series of Booth Tarkington's "Edgar" comedies.

"Don't Neglect Your Wife" is Gertrude Atherton's original screen story which Wallace Worsley is directing, assisted by the author. Prominent in the cast of this tale of life in San Francisco in the late sixties are Lewis S. Stone, Mabel Julienne Scott, R. D. MacLean, Arthur Hoyt, Kate Lester, Josephine Crowell and Charles Clary.

Hughes Devises Lighting Effects for Picture

"Dangerous Curve Ahead" is Rupert Hughes' story written directly for the screen, with Helene Chadwick carrying the leading role. Director E. Mason Hopper announces that the photography on this production will be completed during the week. Mr. Hughes, who has been assisting in the producing of the picture, has 'designed many intricate lighting effects. In the cast are Richard Dix, M. B. ("Leifs") Flynn, James Neill, Edythe Chapman and Kate Lester.

Gladys Walton to Star in Play Written for "Mary"

Production has started at Universal City on "Rich Girl, Poor Girl," a modern screen version of "The Prince and the Pauper," in which Harry Harris will direct Gladys Walton.

The story was originally written by J. G. Hawks for Mary Pickford and was intended as Miss Pickford's next production, but her European trip altered the plans and Universal purchased the story for Miss Walton. "Rich Girl, Poor Girl" calls for two masculine leads opposite Miss Walton, who plays a dual role. For her lover in the slum scenes Antrim Short has been signed, while Harold Austin plays opposite as her moneyed suitor. Others in the supporting cast are Scotty McGregor, Joe Neary, Wadsworth Harris and C. W. Herzinger.

Take Over the Livingston

PONTIAC, ILL. — Blackstone Theatre Corporation, now managed by Mr. McCullough of Chicago, has taken over the Livingston theatre, managed by A. L. Orr and son. The lease has been taken for ten years.

Bannf with the cast filming "The Magnificent Liar," based upon Katherine Newlin Burt's serial novel, "Snow Blind," has been compelled by the lack of snow to chart a train every day to transport the company to Lake Louise.

Tom Moore is practically in hiding these days so far as any social life is concerned, for he has grown sideburns of the sort affected in the late seventies and early eighties for his role of Mr. Barnes in Archibald Clavering Gunter's "Mr. Barnes of New York."

Valuable Additions Made

To Lasky Electric Outfit

New electrical lighting equipment to the value of $10,000 has been received at the Lasky studio in Hollywood.

This addition is made in preparation for the big production schedule now planned for Paramount pictures to be made at that studio. The standard lighting equipment at the studio consists of Kilglights and spot lights, and the new purchase included twenty-die Kilglights and twenty-five spot lights. This is the second time during the year that the studio electrical equipment has been increased. Frederick S. Miller, electrical illuminating engineer at the Lasky studio, Claud Harding is chief electrician, and Clyde Ewing is shop foreman.

New Year Messages From Goldwyn

By SAMUEL GOLDWYN

(President, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation)

"We want our authors to give the same time and care to their photoplays that they give to their books and spoken plays. Progressive writers have come to realize that the screen furnishes a distinct medium of artistic expression as varied and poweful as that of the written page or the spoken play. In order to get the close supervision by the authors over their stories we are willing to pay handsomely and to give their scenarios an artistic treatment of which they will be proud."

By ABRAHAM LEHR

(Vice President in Charge of Production at Goldwyn Pictures Corporation)

"In the new year we shall bend all our efforts to the making of photoplays with strong, human, appealing stories, acted by well-rounded casts of competent players. Our goal will be fewer and better pictures. We have learned that the public wants logical, sensible plots that appeal to intelligent people. The success of our recent releases shows us that we are on the right track and we intend to stay there. We have merely been borrowing dramatic pages from life itself."

IRVIN F. WILLIAT

Well-known director who made "False Face," "Bedtime Hour," "Above the Surface," "Down Home," and is filming his second independent production, "Partners of the Tide," for publication by W. W. Hodkinson.

Mayer Scouts Slump, Saying Fewer, Better Films Causing Curtailment Producer Lauds Associated First National and Its Officers, Declaring They Stand for Individual Quality Rather Than Volume

That the motion picture industry is going through a crisis is the opinion of many of the financiers and promoters in the country. Looking in from the outside, they see some of the studios idle, they notice that productions are not being turned out as frequently as in the past, and naturally they conclude that the business is struggling through a period of depression.

Louis B. Mayer, producer, publishing through Associated First National, places an optimistic construction upon the recent curtailment of activities in some of the Coast studios. In a recent interview he said:

Will Advance Industry

"The old slogan of 'fewer and better pictures' is finally coming into its own. For years it has been bantered about the trade with semi-humorous intent, regarded rather as something to talk about than as something to strive for. But its day has finally come, and I believe that it represents a sound, healthy development in the advancement of the industry.

"Twenty years ago, when I sold out my theaters and entered the production field, I had the idea that money spent plentifully, even extravagantly, to insure a good production would be wise expenditure in the long run. My plan included securing stories that had strength and real merit, casts that represented the cream of the acting profession, and directors of proven ability.

Idea Scrapped At

"The first two men I talked to on the proposition laughed at me. They were both successful producers and prominent figures in the industry, but they labeled my plan as ridiculous. They even went so far in their criticism as to say that I would become a menace by spending so much money on pictures.

"If it were not for Mr. J. D. Williams and First National, I would probably never have seen my pet idea on production put into practice. Mr. Williams saw the wisdom of the idea and financed it on good pictures rather than just grinding out films for release dates, and in First National he had an organization conscientious in making each production stand up alone.

Concern Fundamentally Right

"This policy is the foundation on which the industry is now settling. Associated First National is fundamentally right.

"Associated First National fosters merit. It accepts only good productions and through its system of distribution picture's success soars in proportion to its worth. This means that a producer can afford to put the best in a picture for Associated First National. It stands 'fewer better pictures,' and explains the present curtailment in production at studios that turn out volume rather than individual quality."

cloud-blue drapery among which were sprinkled silver stars, and a cutout of the Paramount trade mark, attractively mounted, stood just in front of this star-sprinkled sky. The effect was beautiful and caused no end of favorable comment.

The exposition came to a close on Saturday night amid song and color and flashy costumes. Sixty of Atlanta's prettiest girls donned the costumes of their favorite stars in competition for a cup awarded by Miss Katherine Williams, dressed as a chorus girl, won this prize.

Girl Wins Chaplin Prize

Prizes offered by the local film exchanges for the most appropriately dressed Charlie Chaplin and Harold Lloyd were won by Miss Belle McBride as Chaplin and Arthur Tew as Lloyd.

One of those responsible for the success of the affair was Anna Eugene Aiken of the Weekly Film Review, who handled the publicity for the arrangements committee. Local exhibitors under the direction of Willard C. Patterson, manager of Sig Samuels' Criterion, also deserve credit for their cooperation.

Reelcraft Adds Another Exchange in Kansas City With Harthill in Charge

Reelcraft Pictures Corporation has established a branch office and exchange for the distribution of its exclusive short subject program at 928 Main street, Kansas City, Mo.

This is the seventh city to house an exclusive short subject exchange of Reelcraft, the others being New York City, Chicago, Cleveland, Milwaukee, Indianapolis and Minneapolis. Reelcraft is also represented in every other important distributing center of the United States by independent allied exchanges.

The Kansas City branch office will be under the jurisdiction of Carl Harthill, district manager of the central states for Reelcraft. The exchange manager will be announced later.
The motion picture theatre can advance only as rapidly as the motion picture exhibitor. The man makes the institution. The great temples that have been erected for the housing of the silent drama were made possible by great men who worked with institutions of lesser magnitude so well as to prepare the way for the super-theatre.

The average American motion picture theatre is not, however, the super-theatre, and it is only by dealing in averages that representative conditions may be ascertained. The average motion picture theatre is the determinant of the average motion picture exhibitor, and the average is high.

None familiar with the remarkable development of the motion picture can belittle the intelligence of the men responsible—or fail to wish that that development were even more rapid.

Men who have at heart the best interests of the theatre advocate enlightenment in any form that will tend to raise the standard of American showmanship above even its present level.

Thinking men do not urge the elimination of such types as hinder progress. Education is the vastly superior measure, and the setting down of hypothetical utterances characteristic of these types is under taken in the light of these conclusions.

The "Class" Exhibitor

"I can't use exploitation. I've got a high class audience and extra advertising of any kind brings in a lot of people from the street that they don't like. All the society people come here when they go anywhere. Sometimes I have them twice in the same week. No, it doesn't pay in the long run. I may get more people but it spoils the 'atmosphere' of my theatre."

He Hates "Vaudeville"

"Presentation? You mean vaudeville. It's small time stuff camouflaged. No, I got into the picture business to get away from 'play or pay' bandits, agents' commissions and temperamental soubrettes. Not any for mine. I show pictures. If the people want actors let them go where actors are. If a picture isn't good without presentation it isn't good enough for my theatre."

Showmanship "Doesn't Pay"

"Don't talk to me about showmanship. I've tried everything. It doesn't pay. I put on a style show and the women's clubs got busy and panned me. The newspapers wrote it all up on the front page, too. Crowds? Sure I had crowds. They broke three plate glass lobby frames for me. No, I'm cured. Never again. I'm playing safe hereafter."

The Chronic Obstructionist

"The trouble with everybody in this business is that they always want to be doing something new. They all think they can make more money some new way, and they've all been making a good living for years the old way. What's the use? Let well enough alone. That's my motto. And I've been running this house for ten years on that basis."

"I'm An Old Timer"

"Have I tried exploitation? Do you mean floats, parades, bands and all that sort of stuff? Well, no. I've read a lot about it but never got around to try it out. Don't think much of it, though. Don't see where it would get me anything. You see—I'm an old timer. This is one of the oldest theatres in this part of the state. Everybody knows me and knows my show. I don't need to advertise."

The Contract Exhibitor

"Advertising is alright. I advertise every day. I've got a contract with the newspaper that runs clear through the year and all I have to do is telephone down to the office every change and tell them what the new show is. They fix up the type and put in the cuts if they have one of the star that's on that day. Yes, I advertise right along. It's good stuff."

Features Exclusively

"I feature my features. The rest don't matter much. Short subjects are alright for filler. Some people like them. And they make the show seem longer. No use in advertising them, though, because my people come to see the big pictures. I've been playing the same stars for three years now and I'm getting by nicely when all things are considered. Don't see why I should make a splurge over a slapstick comedian."

The Theatre Progressive

"Give us new stuff. I'll try anything once. Then I'll try it again. I'll keep right on trying it until I find out whether it's good or not. The world is moving and we have to move with it. Exploitation built up my business. I built up my program and bought another theatre. Presentation eliminated the only vaudeville opposition I had. The pictures are better. The theatre has got to be better, and the management has to make it so. The only way to get anywhere is to keep moving. And that takes new stuff."

EXHIBITORS HERALD
Showmanship Suggestions in the Stills

Bryant Washburn poses as a waiter in "An Amateur Devil," his Paramount production, and the table scene which is pictured in the still contains humor adaptable to prologue purposes. A similar situation is developed in numerous stage farces of the past and present which provide ample working material for the exhibitor who utilizes the dramatic style of presentation.

A cabaret scene from "Torchy Mixes In," distributed by Educational, which gives a direct cue for presentation. The stage setting may be devised with little difficulty, amateurs can be used for "atmosphere" and one professional performer for the feature number.

Richard Dix in one of the three characters he portrays in "Parrot & Co.," Sidney Franklin's production for First National distribution, the make-up for which serves adequately as model for street exploitation. With shotgun, pack and parrot, all easily obtainable materials, a highly attractive street figure can be evolved.

Imagination is not taxed to give an impression of the humor which prevails in the above scene from "The Misleading Lady," Bert Lytell's forthcoming Metro production, which may be presented following a prologue utilizing the indicated stage setting and a script modeled after any of the short farces circulated in book form and obtainable at any public library.
Hyman and Weisfeldt Contribute Practical Prologue-Presentation Model for "Dinty"

Exhibitors who have booked "Dinty," Marshall Neillan's First National attraction, will profit by reading the following account of its presentation and exploitation by two of America's leading showmen.

Edward L. Hyman, managing director of the Strand, Brooklyn, N.Y., is responsible for the best straight exploitation stunt yet applied to the picture.

Edward J. Weisfeldt, managing director of the New Strand, Milwaukee, Wis., contrived an effective prologue that was also strong in exploitation value.

Both men have been identified with the progressive showmanship news of the past two years and their combined assistance to the field in providing this practical presentation-exploitation model is of no little moment.

The United States Navy gave Mr. Hyman invaluable assistance in his campaign for the Strand showing of the picture. The accompanying illustration shows the plane which was loaned for the work and the aviator who went aloft to spread the news of the engagement throughout the drawing territory of the theatre.

Mr. Hyman conceived the idea two days before the opening of the picture. He went promptly to the commanding officer of the naval publicity department in New York and outlined his plan, stressing the effect that it would have upon enlistments. A letter was given him which was presented to the flight commander at Belle Harbor, L.I., who ordered a hydroplane into the water and a pilot into the plane.

With one hundred thousand heralds securely placed in the machine the pilot invited Hyman to occupy the forward cock-pit and personally manage the distribution. Declining the invitation in favor of a C. P. O., Hyman watched the plane hop off and return some time later with the indicated amount of literature sprinkled over Brooklyn.

The newspapers made good use of the story and the "Dinty" engagement is reported from the Strand as "a wonderful week."

The Milwaukee treatment was entirely different.

Mr. Weisfeldt started operations by advertising in the newspaper for a boy who looked like Wesley Barry, other advertisements were for a Chinaman and a little colored boy.

The newspaper co-operated by running publicity stories each day illustrated with stills showing the characters mentioned.

So many boys replied to the advertisement that it became impossible to select one without offending others, so a special screening was arranged and all the newsboys of the city invited to attend.

This was given in the morning and the house was packed with youngsters. After the showing of the picture each boy was called to the stage to show how he sold papers, the ones that received the most applause being selected for participation in the prologue.

The latter opened with newsboys seated on the ground in front of a brick wall engaged in the pastime which is theirs by tradition. Soon the lad who represented "Dinty" came to the front of the stage and sang a rejuvenated newsboy song beginning, "Dinty, Dinty, Dat's de Salute Dey Gimme."

This was followed by various other musical numbers and bits of comedy, after which the picture was screened.

Exhibitors using the attraction should experience great success by combining the precedents outlined. Mr. Hyman's airplane stunt should create desirable public interest in the attraction itself. When this is followed up with the newspaper advertising for prologue characters and publicity stories the original impression will be materially heightened.

The prologue may be adapted with little or any change by practically any exhibitor. And there is no better way of capitalizing it than by use of the special performance idea, though this may in some cases of short engagements be combined with the opening performance.

With such material as a starting basis exhibitors everywhere should find their "Dinty" engagements immensely profitable.
Midnight Performances Accommodate Crowd During New Mission "Mark of Zorro" Run

"The Mark of Zorro," Douglas Fairbanks' United Artists production, has made history in Los Angeles, production center and home of enterprising showmen and theatres extraordinary.

That is a reliable indication as to its future theatre record.

It has been demonstrated repeatedly in the past that the picture creates a furore in Los Angeles will duplicate that performance throughout the country.

The New Mission theatre engagement of the new Fairbanks attraction is reported as a furore of no mean magnitude.

The New Mission selected "The Mark of Zorro" as its opening attraction. Robert E. Wells, managing director, then proceeded to do all in his power, which was considerable, to make the opening—an event of precedential magnitude.

The opening night was attended by film personalities whose presence alone, properly advertised, should draw to any theatre epochal patronage.

Douglas Fairbanks was there, with his wife, Mary Pickford, Mrs. Charlotte Pickford and Fred Niblo, director. Others present were Enid Bennett, Charles Murray, "Bull Montana," Ben Turpin, John Stephen McGoarty, Earle Williams, Nazimova, Mack Sennett, Allan Dwan, Mary Miles Minter, Thomas H. Ince, Jesse L. Lasky, Cecil B. DeMille, Lew Cody, Allen Holubar, Dorothy Phillips, Sidney Franklin, Chet Franklin, Charles Ray, Carter DeHaven, Mr. and Mrs. Edward A. Dickson, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Lee Wolvine, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Jevne and M. P. Snyder, mayor of Los Angeles.

As automobiles drew up to the curb they were met by attendants in costumes patterned after that worn by Douglas Fairbanks in the picture. Within the theatre the ushers and other attendants were similarly attired.

Floral decorations were used throughout the theatre to create an atmosphere suggestive of "The Golden Age of California."

A few doors from the theatre the window of the Western Costume Company, which provided the costumes worn in the picture, was used for a cooperative display which is reproduced herewith.

Photographs presented upon the opposite page show the attendance which was experienced on the opening night of the run. But more significance attaches to the statement that business increased during the week to such proportions that on Saturday and Sunday nights midnight performances were given to accommodate patrons who could not gain admittance at other times.

Mr. Wells has the following to say about the event:

"Los Angeles believes that 'The Mark of Zorro' is Douglas Fairbanks' greatest picture, as evidenced by the fact that since our New Mission theatre, the finest appointed theatre in the world, was opened, we played to absolute capacity, with midnight shows added both Saturday and Sunday. We have established world's attendance records during these past four days with prices from fifty cents to one dollar and fifty cents."

Much of the exploitation planned for the run was abandoned when it was found that the theatre was not going to accommodate all that sought admittance as a result of the advance campaign and newspaper notices. These latter were uniform in praising the picture and of course powerful in influencing attendance.

The outstanding point of the engagement, despite the presence of the notables mentioned, is the fact that midnight shows were necessary to take care of the crowds.

That is good news to the trade. Pictures that create that sort of patronage when properly exploited are the pictures the exhibitors want.

They warrant the type of advertising that every showman likes to sponsor, and this performance gives ground to the belief that "The Mark of Zorro" is such a picture.

While the advertising done by the New Mission is not especially remarkable, it is advertising such as can be done by any and every exhibitor. Coupled with the newspaper work outlined and provided for in the excellent press book furnished with the picture the New Mission stunts should produce an altogether satisfactory result.

The New Mission theatre, Los Angeles, was decorated with flowers for the record run of "The Mark of Zorro," Douglas Fairbanks' United Artists attraction.

Motion Picture Notables Attend On Opening Night
Interpretive Dance as Presentation Solves ‘Difficult Attraction’ Problem

Classic dancers and an artistic stage setting in black and white were used in presentation for “Idols of Clay” at the Broadway-Strand theatre, Detroit, Mich.

The American exhibitor progresses. Problems arise to confront him in every department of his business. He solves them, at once or ultimately, and proceeds on to new triumphs.

That has been the record of the motion picture theatre since the beginning.

The showman’s ability to overcome seeming difficulties is responsible for his present high standing among the business men of the world.

Not all pictures published are easily exploited. Even fewer possess in satisfactory degree the qualities that make for good presentation.

The exhibitor has evolved a means of overcoming this difficulty.

The interpretative dance, the classic if you will, has advanced in surprisingly short time from a sort of parlor art to a practical and dependable theatrical property. It solves the problem of the ‘difficult’ picture.

Two photographs reproduced herewith show stage settings and players who have figured in prologues used thereupon. They serve excellently as illustration for the present discussion.

When “Idols Of Clay,” the Paramount production, was shown at Phil Gleichman’s Broadway-Strand theatre, Detroit, Mich., interpretative dancers working about an immense reproduction of the statue which has been associated with the picture in all its advertising produced the desired effect.

Black and white were the only colors employed in the setting. The curtain rose to reveal the stage in cold blue flood. As this changed to rose the figures took on lifelikeness and the dancers moved into their measures.

Green and purple shades were used during this and when the figures resumed their original position the blue was restored, after which the picture was screened.

The prologue staged at the New Garrick theatre, Minneapolis, Minn., was somewhat more expensive in that it employed eight persons, but like the Detroit feature it served its purpose excellently, introducing "Twin Beds," the First National attraction starring Mr. and Mrs. Carter DeHaven.

The pliability of the interpretative dance is its strong point. By intelligent direction it can be made to express whatever moods may be required for a given attraction. By the proper use of stage setting and lighting this effect can be emphasized.

As regards expense, also, this type of prologue is at once economical and desirable, a happy combination. Practically every city has its schools where classic dancing is taught, and enthusiastic students provide a source of material which should not be overlooked by the exhibitor who does not see fit to pay the prices charged by professionals. In this type of work the amateur compares with the professional more favorably than in any other.

EXPLOITATION and presentation were kept in balance for the "Kismet" engagement at the Grand theatre, Columbus, O., where Will D. Harris, exhibitor extraordinary, contributed valuable additions to the showmanship history of this much-exploited attraction. The above photographs show the prologue company in ensemble. The description of the prologue is valuable as revealing the simplest and most adaptable presentation yet devised for the production.

Stage Stars Attend "Kismet" Screenings During Record Run at Grand, Columbus, O.

Will D. Harris, whose skillful management of the Grand theatre at Columbus, O., has gained him a position in the front rank of American showmen, contributes the most recent report of a record-breaking "Kismet" engagement.

His treatment of the Robertson-Cole production starring Otis Skinner contains points of interest to all advertisers and suggestions that will be applied by other exhibitors screening the attraction.

The record for Monday business was exceeded during the "Kismet" run by $200.

Mr. Harris opened his campaign for "Kismet" several weeks before the opening day of the run. He first employed lobby cards of special design to give general notice of the coming attraction.

Three weeks before the showing he opened his newspaper campaign, carrying for two weeks three-inch advertisements in his characteristic style. This space was doubled for the third week, which closed with two full-page displays, one in color and the other in black and white, the former of which has been adopted by Robertson-Cole for national use.

For the proper presentation of the picture a special stage setting was prepared, showing a scene in Bagdad, and nine persons were rehearsed for work in the prologue.

The curtain ascended to reveal the setting in the glow of dawn, with "Haji," the beggar, seated in the middle distance. As the light increased a gong sounded and a troupe of harem dancing girls came upon the stage, the theme song of the picture, "Kismet," being used as accompaniment. As they assumed natural positions a Turkish woman appeared and sang "Allah's Holiday," after which the beggar came on and followed his chant, "Alms for the love of Allah."

But it is interesting to add that special midnight performances were given for Ed Wynn and the members of "Ed Wynn's Carnival," then appearing in Columbus, and for Chic Sale and his associates as well.

Mme. Schumann-Heink, unknown to Mr. Harris, stood in line for an hour awaiting a chance to purchase a ticket. When her presence was discovered she was promptly escorted to a position of vantage within the auditorium. Her comment upon the picture was of such a nature as to have the best possible effect upon publication.

Mr. Harris, whose enthusiasm in advertising is exceeded only by his ability, surpassed former efforts in behalf of "Kismet." The business experienced during the run was in keeping with the work done in its behalf.

Another link has been added to the chain of the picture's success. Another contribution has been made to the already remarkable story of its exploitation and presentation by exhibitors.

That story promises to become a dominant chapter in the book of theatre development.

Mr. Harris' presentation impresses as the most readily adaptable that has been used for "Kismet" to date. In its simplicity lies promise of wide adoption.

The talent required should be obtainable in the majority of American cities. Dramatic clubs and dancing academies should be appealed to for support, and it is more than probable that almost no expense will be met with in staging the feature.

Novelty and Title Appeal
In “Passion” Advertising

“Passion,” established a record at the Capitol theatre, New York. Good presentation was used, with exploitation in keeping. But both good presentation and good exploitation are characteristic of the Capitol.

The lobby display presented here, that of the Broadway theatre, Charlotte, N. C., represents more authentically the type of advertising that will be done for the feature throughout its American theatre circulation. The display provides its own description.

That it is powerful in drawing power is obvious. The reasons for this power are more interesting than the fact itself. They are the strong points of the feature as an advertising attraction.

In the first place the title is essentially “alive.” It attracts attention. Prominently displayed in front of any theatre, in any newspaper, on any street exploitation device that may be used, it will excite comment that cannot have effect other than that of building business.

In the second place, the investigation prompted by the title reveals to potential patrons that the picture is of foreign make, of German production, and that Pola Negri, a star of whom the man in the street knows nothing but of whom much may be said in advertising copy, is the featured player. There’s novelty in that combination of circumstances.

That novelty, with the punch of the title, are the points that American exhibitors will emphasize in advertising the attraction. They are points that should produce business in keeping with that experienced during the Capitol engagement.

Twin Sisters from Seattle Exchange in Exploitation Coup

The humorously inclined will find their material for pointed paragraphs in the exploitation coup scored by the Seattle, Wash., exchange of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and the Misses Frances and Carmel Murphy, employees of that branch, in behalf of the Strand theatre showing of “Behold My Wife,” the George Melford special production. But there is more than humor in the event.

The photograph reproduced here shows the motor in which the twins, one “doing straight” and the other “redskin,” toured the city while the picture was in engagement.

The stunt is good. The twin element gives it added strength, but the Indian angle is the outstanding one and one that may be used where twin sisters are not obtainable.

The sight of the vehicle with its strangely assorted occupants is reported as having had distinctly beneficial effect upon the ticket sale during the run. It may be added for the benefit of those who believe that Indians in full regalia are more plentiful than traffic policemen West of the Mississippi River that Seattle pedestrians flocked about the car whenever it stopped at a corner and took in the not too obviously displayed information borne upon the card affixed to the automobile.

That’s the question inspired by the vehicle. That’s a good question to set up.

Twin employees of the Seattle exchange of the Famous Players-Lasky Corp. participated in a novel and effective street stunt for “Behold My Wife,” recently exhibited at the Strand theatre, Seattle, Wash.
"Over the Hill" Gains National Fame by Mail

POST CARDS FOR VISITORS IN NEW YORK CARRY NEWS OF FILM TO ALL PARTS OF THE COUNTRY—OUT-OF-TOWN MOTION PICTURE ENTHUSIASTS ACTIVE AS ENGAGEMENT ENTERS FOURTH MONTH

Patrons Sign Printed Card

When "Over the Hill," the Fox Special production now entering the fourth month of its exclusive showing at the Lyric theatre, New York, goes to the exhibitors of the nation it will benefit by the national publicity being given it through a device which has practical qualities.

Out-of-town visitors to the Lyric are being given picture post cards provided especially for the occasion upon which appear scenes from the play and, upon the reverse side, suitable messages for the home folks.

One of the cards reads, "We are here enjoying 'Over the Hill' highly. The acting in it is marvelous. It is simply wonderful and you must be sure to see it. Wish you were here."

Though not many exhibitors have opportunity to use the stunt exactly as handled at the Lyric, it offers unusual advantages for the protracted run of any attraction exclusive in the territory. The cards may be distributed upon the opening night of the engagement to be signed and directed by patrons and later collected and mailed by the theatre.

Four of the post cards used at the Lyric are reproduced herewith. They serve as models for exhibitors who wish to make the experiment locally.
"Son of Tarzan" Showing Proves Free Show Theory

Free matinees for the purpose of introducing serials to the largest possible patronage have been reported from various sections of the country. In each instance this department has gone on record as advocating that method of inaugurating the chapter play.

The wisdom of the stunt is now demonstrated beyond question. An exhibitor has reported its success as indicated in the attendance record of the second episode of the serial concerned.

When J. Howard Lichtenstein, managing director of the Sedler theatre, East Pittsburgh, Pa., screened the first episode of "The Son of Tarzan," the David P. Howells serial, he invited all the youngsters in the neighborhood to a free matinee. The photograph shows the number that responded to his invitation.

The important point of the event is revealed in Mr. Lichtenstein's statement that the second episode of the serial, for which no free exhibition was given, scored bigger business than the first.

There's the "proof of the pudding." The children who saw the first episode, in connection with which several comedies were also screened, undoubtedly talked about the event enthusiastically during the ensuing week. The unfortunates who did not attend the free matinee were duly regaled with colorful accounts of what transpired, and the serial was undoubtedly praised as the best ever.

Of course all those who saw the first episode saw the second also if possible, and children work hard to make such things possible. And with them they brought others. And others who had heard of the serial came alone.

Undoubtedly many parents were also influenced to become followers of this particular chapter play. And through the voluminous and widespread discussion which was aroused the following experienced natural growth.

The psychology of the stunt is correct.

The wonder is not that it succeeds as well as it does but that more exhibitors do not employ it than have done so in the past.

Mr. Lichtenstein, who was formerly manager of exploitation for Selznick Pictures in the Pittsburgh territory, deserves thanks for demonstrating beyond possibility of doubt the efficacy of the free matinee as an introduction for the serial. His evidence will undoubtedly be weighed by exhibitors throughout the nation and many tests will follow.

They should prove uniformly successful.

"Love" Tag Day Is Exploitation For Glaum Film

An immense promotion propaganda for "Love," the Louise Glaum special being published nationally by Associated Producers, which promises to have the support of the Hearst newspapers throughout the United States as well as the cooperation of the Newspaper Enterprise Association, was launched by J. Parker Read Jr., the producer, through Sig Schlager.

A series of "Louise Glaum Tag Days" are the basis for the promotion. Five hundred thousand Louise Glaum tags are being distributed to Associated Producers exchanges under the direction of F. B. Warren, general manager of distribution. These tags will be disseminated in downtown districts the day previous to first run—and subsequent—showings of "Love" by clubwomen, society buds and schoolfolk to aid local charity or, in such communities where the "Community Chest" or other charity is arranged for. The tags will merely be distributed—that is, people will be "tagged"—the suggestion embodied in the heart-enclosed portrait of Miss Glaum underlined with the star's name and the line—"In the Name of 'LOVE'"—being inescapable and therefore constituting an ace of an exploitation stunt.

Jack Smith of the New York American Christmas Fund pledged his cooperation and proceeds of the tag day or days held in New York went to the American Christmas Fund, making a New York first run of "Love" distinctly valuable from an exploitation angle to the Broadway exhibitor.
Comic Opera Characters Participate in Exploitation of "Good References" Run

A live exploitation cast of five members.

The grand finale of a comic opera of yesteryear surpasses in no way as regards assortment of characters the exploitation automobile which appeared on New York streets during the run of "Good References," Constance Talmadge's First National attraction, at the 81st Street theatre.

The stunt is so well illustrated in accompanying photographs as to require little direct description, but the idea it represents is of greater consequence.

It is brilliant. Better, it is adaptable.

FRANK GERARD and Eddie Lewis, manager and exploitation manager respectively, deserve great credit for their originality and industry in creating the exploitation stunt pictured on this page. Nothing just like it has been done before, though it is safe to say that many things bearing marked similarity to it will be done in the future by exhibitors who recognize merit when they see it.

The automobile carried a convict, a vamp, a prison guard, a Broadway beauty and a bellboy. Surely the assortment is sufficiently unique to attract sharp attention anywhere in the world.

Appearing upon the streets of the city, and going through the pantomine which was enacted, it created voluminous comment. And when transferred to the front of the theatre at night it stopped passers-by like a conflagration.

The title is sufficient justification for the stunt. And the application is obvious.

Other American exhibitors will doubtless approximate the enterprise in connection with the picture. It is not necessary to employ so many characters where circumstances do not warrant the required expenditure. Yet it is advisable to use as many as possible, and it is interesting to speculate upon the results that would follow the use of more.

The idea is the big thing.

Many pictures are published weekly with titles that possess more promising exploitation angles than "Good References." Many attractions with less advertising opportunity in subject matter are placed upon the market every seven days.

The exhibitor who confines himself entirely to direct identification overlooks many possibilities.

And, in this case the characters are counterparts of those that appear in the picture. Yet the stunt would not lose in value were this not the case.

The "reverse English" treatment is comparatively new in exploitation. It has possibilities which will not be missed by men engaged in the work. These will be brought out and rapidly developed to a degree not comprehensible beforehand.

The present campaign is excellent for use as a model. After it may be patterned countless others of similar ground design and provocative of similar results.

A motley gathering of any sort attracts attention. And the characters taking part in practically any production include widely assorted types that may be arbitrarily grouped together for use in a stunt of this variety.

The method of exposing such a gathering to the public may be varied according to local requirements. The automobile is the obvious vehicle. An ox-drawn cart such as may be seen in the Ozark country would add another unique touch. In various sections of the country the locomotion may be arranged to get better results.

The incongruity is the essential thing. In that lies the chief merit of the trick.

The more unusual the attraction the more attention it will draw. And the progression proceeds with steady development of productivity.
Exhibitors operating theatres in cities of moderate size are prone to consider transient patronage of little importance. It is regarded as a thing of no great moment, odd business that will take care of itself.

Kenneth Sink, manager of the Wayne and National theatres, Greenville, O., thinks differently. And the card which he has caused to be affixed to the inside surface of every apartment door in the James Hotel shows the value he attaches to advertising calculated solely to draw transient patronage to his playhouses.

The card is reproduced herewith.

The cost of the cards and the privilege of posting them represents an expenditure no greater than that which would have been involved in placing a single announcement in the register carriage at the hotel desk.

The effect, obviously, is worth many times the effect which would have been obtained by such an advertisement.

In the hotel room the card has the advantage of being displayed alone and at a time when the reader is in the properly receptive mood.

No better device than this has been suggested for the purpose of appealing directly and exclusively to the transient patron. There can be no doubt of its efficiency and economy.

The two virtues are sufficient guarantee for any advertising medium.

The transient patronage, it may be pointed out, while not in the majority of cases essential to the support of the theatre is universally desirable. It represents what the gambler terms "velvet." And when it can be obtained by means so simple and practical as the present it is apparent that no exhibitor should neglect the opportunity to avail himself of its benefits.

Joseph Plunkett, managing director of the Strand Theatre, New York, recently staged a fireside quartette in novel manner as prologue for "The Truth About Husband," distributed by First National.

The photograph reproduced here-with shows the method used at the Strand in staging the feature, a grate fire effect obtained with the singers facing the auditorium.

A good many road quartettes would do well to copy the Strand method of staging. Though the quartette is popular it is in spite of rather than because of its stage appearance. The Plunkett idea is good.

By use of this type of presentation practically any picture can be proper-ly prepared for. In the library of available vocal selections can be found material to express any desired sentiment, to create any preferred mood.

The ability to write logical advertising copy is strikingly revealed in the special poster prepared in yellow and red and used by Al Harsten, owner of the Regun theatre, New York, for "The Leopard Woman," Louise Glauhn's J. Parker Read, Jr., production for Associated Producers. The reproduction presents the copy in original form.

No superfluous of words weakens the power of the poster by clouding the writer's meaning.

No extravagant phrases are introduced to detract from the forcefulness of the whole by raising a barrier of doubt as to its sincerity.

The crisp, concise lines stand out individually, each representing an idea, each advancing the thread of the appeal.

The ability to write copy like that is a priceless exhibitor's possession. The man who has it need concern himself little about the future. It is the kind of copy that insures him his share of whatever patronage exists.

Logic is its essential strength. Logic is the strength of any advertising. Where it is not, neither is there force or conviction. Seldom is there success.

An exhibitor recently went on record as saying that he wrote every advertisement just ten times as long as he wanted it, curtailing the copy by critical elimination until he had reduced it to the desired size and increased it to the desired effectiveness.

The basic principle of that process is right, though it requires time.
Western Exhibitors Face Keen Space Competition

By CHARLES R. ROEDIGER

Advertising Manager Rialto, Colonial, Strand, Victory and Colonial Theatres, Tacoma, Wash.

Advertise so that every star on every dollar expended will be made to twinkle!

This thought should be ever present in the mind of exhibitors and advertising managers.

Theatre managers have something to sell to the public the same as a merchant.

And upon the quality of their sales argument, and the frame in which they present it in the newspaper or other advertising mediums, depend to a large measure the amount of money they toddle off to the bank with the next day.

Large copy and plenty of white space do not guarantee the success of a motion picture for an exhibitor.

The ads must contain a punch—a healthy wallop—and be so constructed as to attract the attention of the public.

Newspapers in the West today carry big space. Page ads from department stores, clothing merchants, shoe stores, and half and quarter pages from dentists, tobacco firms and many other lines of business are by no means a novelty.

How to compete, and make our advertisements stand out above the others, is the question that confronts the exhibitor.

It's easy! The only thing necessary is to "jazz" up an ad.

Use plenty of rules and white space and art displays, and above all, copy that compels the attention of the vast army of newspaper readers.

Advertising that doesn't offer a sales talk is about as worthless as a handsomely equipped thrift emporium in a prohibition town. It isn't sufficient to merely advertise the name of the star, the name of the picture, and the theatre. An advertising man should take the stand, I believe, that probably a large number of picture fans didn't particularly like the last feature in which the star appeared, and that now is the chance to sell 'em on the current attraction. Then, too, maybe the fans are displeased with the star. Well, the way to get them is to offer some good sales talk in the ad and create a desire on their part to see this particular star and this particular feature.

Exhibitors who don't advertise are due for an early business demise.

One exhibitor—by the way, he's in Tacoma now, and is anxious to sell his theater—once said to me: "Well, the people know where the theatre is, and if they want to come, they can."

Bright remark, wasn't it?

Today this exhibitor has no patronage. True enough, the picture fans knew where his theatre was, but he didn't go after them to create a desire in their mind to partake of his picture menu. Hence, he's ready to sell out for a mess of pottage.

He fell before the onslaughts of the enterprising H. T. Moore, general manager of the Jensen-Von Herberg-Moore theatres in Tacoma, and one of the heaviest stockholders in the company.

Mr. Moore is a liberal buyer of space, contracts for good pictures and serves them up to the picture fans in such a manner as to make them like it.

In addition, Mr. Moore believes in theatre fronts. He has in the person of H. Wellington Woodin, assistant general manager of the Jensen-Von Herberg theatres, the Rialto, Colonial, Strand, Victory and Sunset, a master mind when it comes to building and designing fronts. Novelty fronts are Mr. Woodin's strong point, and you can depend upon them to bring home the bacon.

Fred W. Green, exploitation representative for Famous Players-Lasky at the Denver, Colo., exchange, co-operated with the "Denver Post" and the Princess, Rialto and Queen's theatres, presenting Paramount pictures, in duplicating the donation matinee stunt used just before Thanksgiving by A. G. Stolte, manager of the Des Moines theatre, Des Moines, Ia., the apples, oranges and other good things collected supplying Christmas cheer to 3,000 poor children of Denver.

Edward L. Hyman, managing director of the Strand, Brooklyn, N. Y., used orchestral and vocal Christmas music, notably "Come All Ye Faithful," "Silent Night" and Gounod's "Ave Maria," in his program for last week. The setting was so arranged that the singers were visible as though through a church window.

Ole Nelson, manager of the Majestic theatre, Grand Junction, Colo., maintains a standing invitation to all delegates to conventions held in the city. At a recent teachers' conference fifteen hundred attended the Majestic in a body, saw "The Jack Knife Man," King Vidor's First National attraction, and passed a resolution praising the management and the picture. A ten per cent increase in matinee business has been credited to that endorsement.

A ghost story contest was "sold" to the Seattle, Wash., "Star," by J. W. Rankin, exploitation representative of the Goldwyn exchange, which necessitated the printing of the synopsis of "Earthbound" in a front page box for the guidance of contestants.

Allen B. Newhall, manager of the Strand theatre, Lynn, Mass., conducted a literary contest in which a season's pass was offered as first prize. The co-operation of a prominent drug store was obtained by signifying that essays upon the title, "Why I Like to Visit the Strand," be left there, and a special window display was obtained. Two hundred contributed, the mayor and two newspaper men acted as judges, and the winning essay appeared in all Lynn newspapers.

DeMille Films Scene
In Plate Glass Set

When it was announced that Cecil B. DeMille would film one important episode of his fairyland vision of "Forbidden Fruit" in a stage setting built of glass the scoffers pointed out that it couldn't be done.

But Cecil DeMille didn't think so.

The objectors pointed out that it would be impossible to light such a set satisfactorily, that its cost would be prohibitive and that it just wasn't possible to build and film such a set.

But Cecil DeMille did this very thing.

The set was made in the famous studio tank at an enormous outlay. It required two days and the greater portion of one night to film this episode of the story, but it is declared that the results more than justify the time, money and labor expended.

Weeks of work, endless planning and tremendous expense were required in filming the scene, yet in the finished production the scene flashes across the screen in three minutes.

Unusual and Clever Cast Supporting Mary Pickford in Jan. 9 Publication

An unusual and clever cast of players will support Mary Pickford in her next United Artists' production, "The Love Light," which was announced for publication by Hiram Abrams, president of the corporation, on January 9. Entirely new faces will be introduced to fans for this production, which has its locale in Italy, Miss Pickford was so particular about the characters to be portrayed that she chose practically all of the principal members of her cast while abroad.

Bloomer in Lead
Raymond Bloomer, Miss Pickford's leading man, although he has played many roles in America, was obtained by Miss Pickford in France. Mr. Bloomer had just returned from playing an engagement in one of the leading theatres in Rome. Mr. Bloomer has appeared on the speaking stage in America in support of John Barrymore in "Richard the Third," and also appeared in "Fair and Warmer.

Fred Thompson is one of the two Americans appearing in the picture and will be remembered as the chaplain of the 143d Field Artillery, of which Miss Pickford was godmother.

De Briac in Cast
Jean De Briac, who plays Antonio Carlotti, was born in Paris, and for two years was leading man for Sarah Bernhardt. When obtained by Miss Pickford he had just finished an engagement with an Italian picture company, where he was seen as leading man with Rita Jolivet and F. Bertini.

Albert Prisco was born in Italy and has spent practically all his life on the stage. He has been in pictures for some time, but recently appeared on the stage with Louis Weller in "Discovering America," and with Blanche Bates and E. W. Corcoran in "The Deuce.

Mr. Prisco has written a number of scenarios and has translated a number of plays from the Italian and appeared in them as star. Jeannette Prisco, his wife, who is seen in this production, is of Russian descent and has had stage training.

Was Previously With Star
Evelyn Dumo, who plays the role of Maria, was brought up on the stage in Italy, and for a number of years was the best known Madonna type for artists in Italy. She appeared with Miss Pickford in "Poor Little Pepina." She also appeared with Norma Talmadge, Anita Stewart and Alice Brady.

Georges Rigas is another importation; for while he was engaged in Italy, he was born in Greece, where he was a member of his father's company, having played "Romeo and Juliet," "Redemption," and "Ghosts," in the Greek stage.

Edward N. Phillips, now known as "Phippiii," is the energetic young American who made himself up as an Italian and was clever enough to deceive both Miss Pickford and Miss Marion as to his nationality. Phillips appeared in "The Copperhead" with Lionel Barrymore and was also seen in "Seven Days Leave" and "The Wanderer."

Gordon Standing Author
Of Book of War Memoirs
Gordon H. Standing, who plays a prominent part in "The Foreigner," the screen version of the book by the same name written by Ralph Connor, is compiling a record of the work of the American medical corps unit attached to the Second Division, with which he served in France.

The tentative title of the book is "The Caduceus at the Front," so called from the insignia which the medical corps of the United States army wears. At the present time he is playing the leading male role in a Barrie playlet, "Half an Hour." He expects to return to screen work as soon as this engagement has been completed.
Packed House Sees
“The Parish Priest”

Picturization of Old Stage Success Is Screened at Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

Herman J. Garfield has returned from Wilkes-Barre, where his production of the famous old stage success, “The Parish Priest,” had its out-of-town try-out. Garfield brought to New York glowing accounts of the three-day showing. At the last performance more than 3,000 people crowded into a 2,500 capacity house.

While the picture version of Daniel L. Hart’s popular drama was not opened in Wilkes-Barre with any thought of the financial returns but was one of the stages of the preparation of the big picture for its New York premiere, all records for theatre attendance in the city were broken, it is declared, and the screen version of the play gives promise of even surpassing the stage version in drawing power.

It was with a view to trying out the elaborate music score by M. Winkler, and the atmosphere-producing effect of the unusual prologue, in addition to studying the effect of the different scenes upon an audience, that the out-of-town showing before people who had paid high prices for their seats was given.

Will Desmond, as the parish priest, scored a personal triumph. A telegram which he sent from Los Angeles to the audience was flashed upon the screen following each showing of the picture, and received a storm of applause.

Shallenberger Announces Arrow Will State Right Thirteen Romayne Films

W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Film Corporation, announces the company has arranged to distribute on the state rights market a series of thirteen Romayne comedies, now being produced at Culver City, Cal., in the studio of the Romayne company.

The first ten of these comedies have been produced and Charles Avery is at work on the eleventh, which will be entitled “Rhinestone and Robbers.” Following this will be “Daffy House.”

Are in Two Reels

These comedies are in two reels and are of the slapstick variety. One of the principal comedians in the series is Dot Farley, who has often been called the female Ben Turpin of the screen, due to the ability to cross her eyes at will, thus giving her a striking resemblance to this comedian.

The ten comedies already completed are “Hicksville,” “Beachnuts,” “Peaceful Valley,” “Keyhole Reporter,” “Stale Eggs and Sweethearts,” “The Villain Still Pursued Her,” “Shout in the Kitchen,” “Underground Romeo,” “Twenty Legs Under the Sea,” and “Sewerside.”

Author Cooperates On Baker Picture
Anna Q. Nilsson and Robert Frazer Have Leads in Production

Calvin Johnston, the Saturday Evening Post author, has arrived in New York to work with George D. Baker in the production of Mr. Johnston's story, "Temple Dusk," which Sawyer and Lewis are presenting as a special George D. Baker production.

The first thing that Mr. Johnston did upon arriving in New York from his home in Kansas City was to congratulate Mr. Baker upon his continuity of the story, which greatly elaborated upon the fiction version as published in short story form.

In "Temple Dusk" Mr. Baker has the most unusual story of his directorial career. The dramatic scope swings from a gambling house to a famous modiste shop, and from there it switches to a church on the lower East Side of New York.

Mr. Johnston has long been an admirer of the work of Anna Q. Nilsson and Robert Frazer, and after seeing them work in "Temple Dusk" he has decided to write a novel in which they will figure as the principal characters. After Mr. Baker has cut and assembled the film it will be tried out before a city audience, in order that its audience appeal may be correctly gauged.

An extensive advertising campaign has been laid out by Mr. Sawyer to aid the exhibitors in the showing of "Temple Dusk."

Lasky Adds Warehouses In Eastern Expansion At Long Island Studio

Two new warehouses for the storage of scenery and props are being built under the supervision of Arthur V. Smith, general manager of the Eastern studios of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, on the large plot of ground at the rear of the new Long Island studio.

The warehouses are one-story frame buildings covered with corrugated iron, 16 feet high and 25 by 50 feet, costing $8,000 each. They are located on the Sixth avenue side of the studio and are very accessible to the big stages.

Though the big studio provided ample, it was supposed, for the storage of a large quantity of scenery and props, the expansion of production activities which accompanied the opening of the studio necessitated the leasing of two floors of 60 by 125 feet each in a building across the street from the studio. This space will be retained in addition to the new warehouses.

Territories Sell Rapidly On "Madonnas and Men"

Following the recent announcement that the Allens had obtained the Canadian rights to the Jans special, "Madonnas and Men," which will be issued in the Dominion immediately following the special runs arranged for it in the legitimate theatres at 80 top, comes word that more than important territories have been disposed of.

F. Goldfarb of Climax Corporation signed a contract for Greater New York, George Jacobs of the Masterpiece Pictures, Inc., of Cleveland, for the State of Ohio, and northern New Jersey was bought by Jans Film Service, Inc.

King Sails for England to Inform Stoll Offices of Progress in U. S.
President of American Company Also Will Complete Arrangements for Bringing His Family Back to This Country

George King, president of Stoll Film Corporation of America, sailed for England Tuesday, December 14, to be gone a month. Mr. King's trip is partly for the purpose of describing in person to the officials of the Stoll Film Company, Ltd., the excellent progress made in the United States by the American corporation, the first publication of which, "Squandered Lives," will go to exhibitors on January 2.

There is also a domestic angle to Mr. King's visit. On November 10 he received a cable dispatch stating that on the day before there had been born to him a son and namesake. Mr. King also will complete arrangements for bringing back with him his family. Just before sailing he became a householder on Long Island, having purchased a residence in Bay Side.

Company Is American

"As president of the Stoll Film Corporation of America," said Mr. King before sailing, "I desire to address the exhibitors of the United States regarding the plans and policy of this company, the initial release of which will be available for showing January 2 next.

"In the first place I want to impress on exhibitors the fact that this company is just what its name implies—it is an American concern. A perusal of the personnel of its executives and its office force, of its properties and its salesmen, will suffice to convince even 'the man from Missouri' that this statement is exact."

Is International Organization

"The Stoll Film Corporation is arranging to distribute pictures produced by the Stoll international organization, subjects that have been and will be photographed wherever called for by the script.

"The head of the British Famous-Lasky Company remarked in the course of an address last week that in London there were only two large studios, of which one was owned by the company of which he is the chief. Answering an inquiry later as to whether the other was a Stoll studio he said it was.

Don't Catalogue Films

"The Famous Players is an international organization—just as is the Stoll. And to make a passing reference to another expression that is not new to the ears of American exhibitors, will subjects produced by the Famous Players in London and in India or on the Continent of Europe be catalogued in this country as 'foreign'?

"I submit that they should not be so catalogued. I submit that the motion picture is international, is universal, in its scope—that, like Benjamin Franklin, it is a citizen of the world. A screen story tense with humanity searches as deeply into the heart of the peasant woman of Russia as it does into the heart of the woman of Central Park West."

W ill Produce in U. S.

"Stoll pictures will be made wherever the author has seen fit to place the locale. Right now there are awaiting production several stories in the World Famous Authors' Series that have an American atmosphere. So we are looking for studio facilities in this country for the adequate making of these subjects."

World Director General Places Blame For Questionable Films on Producers

The current agitation regarding the blue laws and the so-called cleaning of the motion picture industry has brought to light a discussion of whether the exhibitor or the producer is to blame for the country-wide criticism.

That the exhibitor is in no way to blame and that he should not be condemned either by the newspapers or the public is the thought expressed by Alfred Walker, director-general of World Motion Picture Corporation. On the other hand, if there be any room for criticism the cause itself should be laid at the door of the producer of pictures, he declares.

Criticism Is Unreasonable

Mr. Walker holds that it is unreasonable that the exhibitor should bear the burden of the brunt of the now prevalent criticism. Mr. Walker calls attention to the fact that nearly 80 per cent of the picture showmen of the country book pictures and pay for them in advance, without seeing the productions until they are offered on their own screen to their patrons.

This condition has caused the exhibitor to force upon the public at various times, he contends, pictures which have not met with the approval of the public in general. Inasmuch as the theatre patron and the newspaper editor are closer to his local exhibitor than to the producer, all complaints are sent to the exhibitor first.

Producer Is Responsible

Mr. Walker contends that the producer alone can rectify all wrongs relative to questionable pictures. It is within his power to produce pictures that the public cannot criticise yet of such entertaining powers as to bring the exhibitor a maximum amount of revenue. Mr. Walker says that although the general outcry against the picture industry is unwarranted it is admitted that too many pictures with vulgar themes and questionable scenes have been offered to the exhibitors under the guise of spectacles and advanced art. The producer responsible for such productions is to be criticised in that he has prostituted one of the greatest dramatic mediums—the motion picture. He predicts a time when the members of the industry will take action against any such producer.

Predict Airship Will Become a Factor in Producing Exteriors

The results of Marshall Neilan's experiments with the dirigible used in the production of big scenes for his newest picture, "Bob Hampton of Placer," were viewed recently on the screen at the Neilan studio by a number of prominent producers. The effects obtained excite considerable enthusiasm and, according to reports, the "ship" will soon become an important factor in all exterior work.

Neilan is said to be the first producer to use an airship in taking scenes of action on the ground, from the sky, in connection with the filming of a photoplay. The aeroplane has been used in this way but has been found wanting where continuous action shots by the camera men above were required, as an aeroplane travels too rapidly. The blimp took the place of a movable camera platform, traveling in the air at will and saving many hours of work in erecting camera stands on natural heights where travel was difficult and in the building of gigantic platforms on level ground such as are necessary in the picturization of these scenes.

First Gertrude Olmstead Feature Is Now Completed

Gertrude Olmstead, the winner of the Middle West beauty contest held last summer by the Chicago Elks, is making good in motion pictures, it is reported at Universal City.

The Illinois school girl was engaged by Carl Laemmle to appear in a series of Universal pictures and eventually to be starred. "Tipped Off," the first picture in which she appears, recently was completed at Universal City and now is being distributed through the various Universal exchanges.

Morosco Approves 'Ideal' Cast Above An All Star

In these days of "all star" casts in film productions, Oliver Morosco, the theatrical chief who is entering the film industry on a $2,500,000 scale with Oliver Morosco Productions, Inc., believes that the solution of the "better pictures" problem will be in ideal casts rather than all star makeups.

"I have some very definite ideas regarding this," said Morosco recently. "Ofttimes actors are over-influenced in casting by the weight of names. I want to see a picture made with the 'ideal cast' idea regardless of whether the makeup is all star or half unknown.

"The Great Moment" New Title of Glyn Scenario

According to information received from the Coast, the title of the story Elmor Glyn is working on for Gloria Swanson, originally called "The Sheltered Daughter," has been changed to "The Great Moment.

Production of this picture for Paramount will be started as soon as Cecil B. DeMille completes his super star production of "The Affairs of Anatol," which is now well under way at Hollywood. Sam Wood is said to be slated to be the director.
American Gets "Ireland in Revolt" For Disposal to State Right Men

Production Was Made by Capt. Edwin F. Weigle, Chicago Newspaper Photographer—Film Meeting With Hearty Response

Negotiations have been closed whereby American Film Company has taken over "Ireland in Revolt," the film made by Capt. Edwin F. Weigle, Chicago Tribune photographer. The announcement was made by Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of American, who said that the energies of his entire organization would be directed toward disposition of the picture on the state right market.

Although Mr. Hutchinson did not make public any details concerning the progress thus far made in disposing of the films to the state righters, it is understood that the picture has met with a hearty response.

"Spends Months in Ireland"

The film was made by Captain Weigle, who, with his wife, spent four months in the north and south of this stormy part of the British Empire. The same dauntless courage which enabled Weigle to present the first motion picture of the world war, has again been displayed in this latest sensational exploit.

The pictures vividly portray the raids, riots, reprisals and destruction in general which are daily occurrences in Ireland. They are actual photographs of real events—in a word, Irish history in the making.

Shows True Conditions

Through "Ireland in Revolt," it is said, true conditions as they are in Ireland today are faithfully portrayed. There are actual views of the now famed "Mustard Pot" of Belfast, armored motor cars and barbed wire barricades. Evidences of havoc wrought by clashes between civilians and the Royal Irish constabulary, known as the "Black and Tans," are plainly visible, in the store windows boarded up along the main business streets, factories burned to the ground and the smoking ruins of homes.

Among the more important cities visited by Captain Weigle were Cork, Dublin, Belfast, Trim, Galway, Lisburn and Mallow. In a number of these places he had difficulty in establishing his neutrality and was the target of cobblestones thrown by civilians who aligned him with the constabulary.

The picture is having its premiere at the Rialto theatre, Chicago, and is said to be all that Capt Weigle claims for it.

Moreno's New Feature, "Three Sevens," Nears Completion in West

Antonio Moreno is nearing the end of production on "Three Sevens," his new feature, and the picture will be complete within another two weeks. Chester Bennett is the director.

The picture carries a thread of prison reform throughout, but is essentially a melodrama with a love story. The exteriors were taken at Florence, Ariz., where the governor of the state gave the Vitagraph players every privilege. Three hundred convicts were permitted to be turned loose outside the walls in a daring escape for the picture. Both Jean Calhoun and Beatrice Burnham have leading roles.

The rest of the supporting cast includes "Bull" Montana, who played such a terror inspiring gorilla in Marshall Neilan's "Go and Get It"; Emmett King, De Witt C. Jennings, Edwin J. Brady, Thomas Jefferson, Hector V. Sarno, Starke Patterson, Virginia Nightingale, Jeffer Web and others.

Use Prizma Color in Paramount Feature

Process Is Incorporated in Mae Murray Vehicle, "Gilded Lily"

For the first time in the history of Paramount picture making in the East, scenes made by the Prizma process in natural colors have been incorporated into a Paramount feature picture. This was for "The Gilded Lily," the first production made for Paramount by the combination of Mae Murray, star, and her husband, Director Robert Z. Leonard, which has just been completed at the Long Island City studio.

Director Leonard in explaining the reason for combining Prizma shots with the regular motion picture photography, said that "The Gilded Lily" lent itself especially to colored photography, for the opening of the picture and that by use of it the main theme of the story could be more convincingly and effectively introduced.

The colored shots were used only for the introduction to the picture itself. All of the work was done in the Long Island studio by a cameraman from the Prizma studio.

"The Gilded Lily" is an original story by Clara Beranger. It tells the story of a dancer in a New York club and gives Miss Murray unusual opportunities to display both her bionistic ability and her skill as a dancer.

The cast is composed of Lowell Sherman, Jason Robards, Charles Gerard, Leonora Ottinger and Mrs. Pauline Dempsey. Ernest Haller was the cameraman.

Universal Contends Chaney Has His Most Convincing Role in Dean Film

Lon Chaney, recognized as one of the screen’s greatest character actors, is said by Universal to have the most convincing role of his career in “Outside the Law,” the new Universal Jewel production starring Priscilla Dean. Universal officials unite in saying that Chaney has outdone himself in clever characterization. Chaney plays an underworld part entirely unlike any he has handled heretofore. It is not as a hopeless cripple, his remarkable role in “The Miracle Man,” or as a legless king of criminals, such as he played in “The Penalty.” In “Outside the Law,” Chaney is “Black Mike Silva,” accepted leader of San Francisco’s gangsters and other shady characters.

Creates Virile Role

In “Black Mike” Chaney has created the most virile and unscrupulous role of his many screen villainies, it is claimed. “Black Mike” is a malicious figure whose sole motive in life is revenge. He has no fear but one, that for his former chief, “Silent Madden,” who has turned straight. His fear is so compelling that he goes to every possible extreme to rid himself of it, by putting “Madden” and his clever daughter, “Silky Moll Madden,” out of the way. This latter character is played by Priscilla Dean.

Chaney is no cripple in “Outside the Law” but a powerful fighter, and a resourceful bad man. As the leader of his gang, he heads them in several lights that lack nothing in ferocity and fury.

Ability Reaches High Point

His best work comes when he is at his boldest. It is when “framed” by “Silky Moll” and her companion, “Dapper Bill,” that he is enabled to portray the fury of the trapped beast. Later, as the theme of an un-Christian and a terribl

The first picture of the series has been completed and will be released under the title of “Locinhvar of the Line.” “Single Handed Sam” will be second of the Holman Day's and “The Black Ace” is number three. The “Santschi features will be published on alternate weeks, commencing January 23. This arrangement does not merge the two series into one as each will be maintained distinctively as the “Tom Santschi Series and the Holman Day Series, respectively.

“Day of Cleaner Films Has Arrived”

George Beban Will Discuss This Subject During His Tour Of the Country With His Latest Production, “One Man In a Million”—Star, However, Will Not Preach to Public

The day for better and cleaner photo-plays has arrived. Public demonstration has more than proved this.

So claims no less an authority than George Beban, who is about to begin a coast-to-coast tour making personal appearances with his new picture, “One Man in a Million.” In the talk he will make from the stages of the biggest silent drama edifices, Beban will make a plea for the uplift of pictures and the curtailment of sex and vice productions.

Advance publicity on the sexless film question which Mr. Beban has started has also caused a stir throughout the country, it is said.

During the last few weeks he has received letters, telephone messages and has talked with persons who ask just what his motive is in so emphatically denouncing the problem play of today. A number of well-known film men have gone so far as to intimate that the cleaner and better pictures and general amusement presentations would suffice for the public's attractions but no one the general motion picture theatre public. To which Mr. Beban makes answer, “As a picture boss, I have the price in a man's pocket governed the measure of his intelligence.”

During the booking tour that Mr. Beban and Sol Lesser made, covering every important exchange center from Los Angeles to New York, the two Beban and Lesser latest film product for the benefit of local exhibitors who contemplated booking the dual attraction of the film and Beban's personal appearance.

In nearly every case, local censor representatives were present and Mr. Beban claims that in no instance was mention made of any suggestive or the possibility of any eliminations throughout the entire 6,500 feet of footage. And to further prove that a clean and wholesome love story will "get over" with the so-called "hard-boiled" exhibitors as well as with the fans, Beban states that he and Mr. Lesser arrived in New York City with a full 100 per cent booking record.

Mr. Beban wishes to announce that he is showman enough to govern his routine of talk and advance exploitation and publicity so as to erase all signs of so-called "preaching." But Mr. Beban says he has so arranged his talk that the "cleaner and better" pictures subject will be meshed in so that it will be "put over" with more force and effect than were the two together solely upon that vein.

A few catch lines of Beban's talk on the better picture movement are as follows: "I have never made a vice or sex photoplay and never will be a party to the making of one." "I aim to produce pictures that your son and your daughter—your sweetheart, mother and sister—can walk out of the theatre with their minds clean." "If the time should arrive when I am called upon to make problem plays, then I will quit making pictures at all!"

Mr. Beban commences a twenty-week personal tour with “One Man in a Million” the first of the year, opening at the Bransford theatre, Newark, and from there working westward to the Coast. This tour will take until early in May to consummate, after which the star will resume his work at his Hollywood studios.

While in New York Mr. Beban contracted for several stories which are now being revised into scenario form and which will be ready when he resumes productions.

Several Eastern stage producers have endeavored to obtain Mr. Beban's services for footlight productions for the coming season, but Mr. Beban stated that he had been won over, once and for all, to the clicking camera in the silent drama studios.

Tucker Brothers Circuit Shows Extended to Texas

Starting immediately Tucker Brothers Road Picture Shows, which have been exploited successfully in Oklahoma and Arkansas for the past forty weeks, will be circuitted into Texas and traverse the entire three states.

The road show plan is somewhat of a new idea, having been worked out on a one-picture plan before, but in so far as is known, never on such a large scale as what might be termed a road show circuit, the dates being booked for a number of weeks ahead and played consecutively. Advance agents go ahead and blaze the trail and the circuit stands for an indefinite period. A new show follows along each week piloted by an experienced road show manager. All road shows are played on a percentage basis with extraordinary advertising stunts and publicity aids necessary to put the attractions over.

Descendants of Noted Actors in New Picture

A notable "second generation" cast has been assembled by Whitman Bennett for "Jim, the Penman," the fourth Lionel Barrymore production for distribution by Associated First National Pictures, Inc. No less than four direct descendants of actors who were prominent a generation ago are included in the cast.

Lionel Barrymore, as is generally known, is a son of Maurice Barrymore. He will have the title role. Doris Rankin, who will portray the part of Nina Bronson, is the daughter of the illustrious Mackee Rankin. Arthur Rankin, who has been cast as Lord Drelincourt, is a grandson of the same actor and a son of a sister of Doris Rankin. Charles Coghlan is the last of the quartet member of families famous on the stage. He is a nephew of Charles Coghlan who for many years was one of the foremost American dramatic stars. He will have the part of Redwood the detective.

“Honeymoon Ranch” Sale Is Practically Complete

According to Bert Lubin, producer of "Honeymoon Ranch," the state rights market is in excellent shape, in so far as moderate priced productions are concerned.

Lubin reports that there are now but three open territories on his Western state rights feature, this despite the fact that it is just two and a half months since he first offered territory for sale.

The latest sale announced is the Indiana territory to Maurice Lesser Attractions of Indianapolis. Lubin expects to make a definite announcement regarding his second picture next week. This is tentatively entitled "Crossed Trails," and will be ready for issue soon.

Sherman Takes Larger Quarters for Expansion of Corporation's Activity

Anticipating the widening of its producing and distributing activities Sherman Productions Corporation has moved its New York office from the Longacre building to larger quarters in the Fitzgerald building at 1482 Broadway.

With all but a few of the territories in the United States and Canada disposed of, only a few details remain to be completed before the company will be ready to publish its initial attraction. "Man and Woman," written and directed by Charles A. Logue, probably will be the premiere Sherman production although another now in process of production may be selected, if it fulfills its present promises as a box office attraction.

Announcement Soon
"Man and Woman" is a big dramatic story of three beachcombers and a society girl and their adventures on an island in the South Seas. It presents a situation decidedly novel in character, and brimming with heart interest and suspense.

The publication dates for this picture, together with two others which are ready and two more in the making, will be announced soon after the first of the year.

M. E. Mazur, special representative for Sherman Productions Corporation in the East, has been placed in charge of the New York office during the absence of President Harry A. Sherman, who is in the middle west on a business trip.

More Franchises Granted

According to Mr. Mazur, Mr. Sherman will leave early in January for the West Coast, where he will obtain a studio for the exclusive production of Sherman pictures.

"The latest franchise to be granted," says Mr. Mazur, "is to Finkelstein & Rubin of Minneapolis, Minn., who are the largest and most influential independent distributing group in the Northwest, so you can see that Mr. Sherman is now only content with the leading five independent organizations in each territory to handle our productions. They control a string of theaters through the states of Minnesota, Wisconsin and North and South Dakota.

Handle Six States

"In New England, Boston Photoplays Company has secured exclusive distribution rights for all Sherman pictures. Fred B. Murphy, general manager of Boston Photoplays Company, will handle the Sherman productions in Maine, Massachusetts, Vermont, New Hampshire, Connecticut and Rhode Island. "Messrs. Richards & Flynn, one of the leading independent exchanges of Kansas City, Mo., have secured the franchise for Kansas and Missouri. In the middle west, Harry Weiss and Fred Aiken of Superior Screen Service, Inc., of Chicago, hold the exclusive rights for the release of all Sherman productions in the states of Indiana and Illinois.

Two Large Chicago Houses Play Torchy Pictures Same Week

According to Educational a greater exhibitor interest in Torchy comedies is being shown than in any other series on the market. The New York office declares that every week sees a number of important first runs added to the list showing the pictures made from the stories by Sewell Ford and starring Johnny Hines.

An unusual incident is reported from Chicago where Balaban and Katz's splendid Central Park theatre showed "Torchy in High" after it had already been shown in the downtown district. During the same week the Randolph theatre was showing "Torchy's Millions." It was a regular Educational comedy week in Chicago for the Riviera, the other Balaban and Katz house, had "A Honeymoon Hero," a Christie, and Barbee's Loop the latest Chester, "A Tray Full of Trouble."
Herald Holubar Film as a Sensation

"Man, Woman—Marriage" Is the Result of Many Months

By JACK NEVILLE

W hat is the biggest film sensation of the year? Those who have been fortunate enough to obtain a glimpse of Allen Holubar's production, "Man, Woman, Marriage," starring Miss Dorothy Phillips and Mr. Louis Phillips, are agreed that Holubar's only picture of 1921 will be awarded that honor by America's fans millions.

For years it has been generally conceded by those in close touch with picture production that Allen Holubar has the requirements of a master director and that the charming Dorothy Phillips will some day be acknowledged as the greatest dramatic actress of the screen. Holubar created and Miss Phillips interpreted the leading role of "The Heart of Humanity," thought by many to be the best war picture turned out while the world was ablaze. Their "The Right to Happiness" and "Once to Every Woman" did much to add to Holubar's reputation as a creative genius and Miss Phillips' career as a dramatic actress.

With these big successes to their credit and with the time auspicious for a tremendous picture production from some one of the young producers Holubar's disciples, declare "Man, Woman, Marriage" to be the sensation the film world has expected during the last several years.

"Man, Woman, Marriage." Holubar's one production of 1920, is the result of many months in actual shooting, two years in study for the completion of the story, several months consumed in editing and titling and an expenditure of $400,000. "Man, Woman, Marriage" is a cinematomographic innovation. It is the work of a great creative genius and master director and the collaboration of a star who must be acknowledged as a master director, interpreter of a role requiring an extremely wide range of acting and the utilization of a great amount of ability along emotional lines.

As the title would indicate "Man, Woman," "Marriage" deals with the relationship of man and woman. It does not skim over the sex problem, but digs deep beneath the surface where it lays bare the human soul. It does not preach the false doctrines of sex attraction with its accompanying superficialities, but attacks the problem from a hitherto overlooked source—sex antagonism.

The story does not advocate the cause of the emancipation of woman on the grounds that she has progressed to a point where she no longer need remain under the dominance of man. "Man, Woman, Marriage" most conclusively, entertainingly and elaborately proves that woman has always been the equal of man and that the most shameful page in the history of human race has been man's treatment of woman.

There is nothing of the "new woman" in this gripping story. The heroine never has a single instant harnesses her soul with a spirit of militancy against man's domination and cruel treatment. She remains firm throughout all trials and tribulations and attains her goal by means of the strongest weapon divinely forged—faith.

"Man, Woman, Marriage" is destined to do much toward revolutionizing the silent drama. With its exposition it will create a demand for worthwhile pictures—pictures which teach a powerful and human lesson in an entertaining and artistic manner. It is a death blow at superficial clap-trapery and the dawn of a new screen era.

Poor Grade of U. S. Films Exhibited in China, Says Consul

(Washington Bureau, Exhibitors Herald)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 28.—The type of American motion pictures now shown in China is very poor, according to Vice-Consul Price, reporting to the department of commerce from Foochow, and some of the films are very old, often dating back ten or twelve years. In addition, the majority of pictures gives an erroneous idea of American life and standards.

Users of films in Foochow are trying to get better films, it is declared, but thus far without success. What is true of Foochow is representative of the vast majority of places in China where motion pictures are exhibited to Chinese audiences, it is pointed out.

The report states that a good American film exchange, covering all the China coast, with headquarters at Shanghai, furnishing up-to-date films, would be a help instead of a hindrance to the advancement of a better understanding between East and West, would undoubtedly be successful financially. Films could be sent out by regular circuit by registered mail and under contractual arrangements, whereby the temporary lessee becomes responsible for the films in his possession.

Special Enlarges Its Production Schedule

With Federated Handling the Distribution, Concern Will Double Its Activities

A greatly increased production schedule for 1921 has been arranged by Special Pictures Corporation, following the turning of its distribution over to Federated Film Exchanges of America and the elimination of its own exchange system.

With the money that has been used in maintaining its own distribution organization Special Pictures will be enabled to more than double production activities at its studios in Hollywood.

Will Double Output

According to Louis W. Thompson, president of Special, the output of Comclassics will be doubled. Instead of publishing one every two weeks there will be one issue a week. Such well-known stars as Ford Sterling, Neely Edwards, Charlotte Merriam, Stanley Laurel and Eddie Baker will be seen in the Comclassics, of which Reggie Morris will continue as director-general.

Louise Fazenda will return from her nation-wide popularity tour early in 1921, and all will be in readiness for her to start production within a week after her return. An internationally known comedy director has been engaged to handle her two-reelers, which are to be sponsored by the A. L. Hart productions, the producing unit that has been responsible for the Chester Conklin comedies.

Will Start Expedition

"Dick" Burrul, creator of the Sunset Burrud series of scenes, will start on another expedition early in 1921, while the best part of the travel pictures obtained during his "Tia Juana, Mexico to Nome, Alaska" jaunt are yet to be published.

Two two-reel Western companies will be working at the Special Pictures studio, the Art Acord company of which S. M. Piercy is president, and the "Broncho Billy" company, with G. M. Anderson at its head.
Mayflower Now Preparing to Begin Work on Production of "Aphrodite"

One of the early features to be made by Mayflower Photoplay Corporation in 1921 will be "Aphrodite," according to General Manager John W. McKay, who stated that the film rights to this spectacle along with the screen privileges of several other big offerings had been obtained some time ago when Mayflower was assembling its production plans for 1921. Preparatory work in connection with the filming of this feature is under way, Mr. McKay states. Within a short time he expects to announce the leading members of the cast. The Mayflower manager also said that for the present he preferred not to say who will direct this classic.

Negotiates for Three Plants

Mr. McKay stated that the company producing "Aphrodite" would be divided into three units, each working separate and apart from the other in three different studios, but all under the supervision of the director-in-chief. The studios that Mayflower has negotiated for are the Paragon, Solax and Biograph.

"The reason for dividing up the work in making this picture," Mr. McKay explained, "is so that the utmost speed may be maintained. Because of the great number of sets required and the limited capacity of the eastern studios it is very necessary that this method be pursued."

Cleveland Prepares Script

The scenario for "Aphrodite" has been in process of preparation for the past two months by Val Cleveland, author of "The Scoffer," an Allan Dwan production which is credited by the press with being one of the most powerful pictures of the year. It is expected that the script will be finished and ready for the director by January 1.

It is predicted by Mr. McKay that "Aphrodite" will be one of the sensations of 1921. The production will be lavish and stupendous, and no expense will be spared in procuring talent or in building sets. The Mayflower general manager intimated that this picture might be the only one, other than those already contracted for with Tucker and Walsh, that the company would finance next year. Present plans are to spend half a million dollars in the preparation of this offering.

Paramount "Magic Week" Brings Excellent Results At Boston Headquarters

"Magic Week" did magic business for the Boston exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, it is reported. The exchange, under the direction of Harry G. Ballance, district manager for Paramount’s New England territory as well as acting branch manager for the Boston exchange, staged a week’s drive recently. It was christened "Magic Week" because of the effect it was expected to have in counteracting rumors of business depression and in the stimulation of record sales for Paramount pictures especially.

The week offered an easily adaptable remedy for the so-called pre-holiday slump, disproving the antiquated theory that business around Christmas and Thanksgiving or other holidays must necessarily be dull for exchanges. The Boston exchange did a business of more than $40,000 for the week, compared with an average weekly business of about $30,000. The record for the week exceeded the record that the exchange established during Paramount Week last September.

Emerson and Loos Take Company Into Mexico for Scenes

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 28.—A special train carried John Emerson and Anita Loos, with the entire company with which they are making “Wife Insur- ance,” their first special production. They will make scenes at Tijuana and the surrounding country in the Kingdom of Bunkonia, which is the locale in their new satire upon romantic melodrama.

Victor Fleming, who made “The Mollycoddle” and “When the Clouds Roll By” for Douglas Fairbanks, will direct the picture. Agents in Mexico and San Diego have for the last week been rounding up the personnel of two armies. One of these armies is composed of Mexicans, while the other is negro.

The party includes Basil Sydney, the noted Irish actor, who came from Lon- don to play the leading part; May Col- lins, ingénue in the stage success, “The Outrageous Mrs. Palmer” last season; Frank Lador, Roy Atwell, Olive Valerie, M. S. Epstein, business manager for Joseph M. Schenck, and James A. Creel- man of the Emerson-Loos organization.

“The Devil” With Arliss Will Have World Premiere at Strand Jan. 16

Elaborate Prologue Is Being Prepared by Plunkett and Moe Mark—Picture Booked by Other Large Theatres Throughout the Country

Associated Exhibitors announce that “The Devil,” starring George Arliss, to be distributed by Pathé Exchange, has been booked by Moe Mark for a pre-release showing at the Strand theatre in Cincinnati, and that he also has closed contracts insuring presentation of the picture in several other houses in which the management are associated.

The world premiere of the picture will take place at the Strand theatre beginning January 16 and plans have been completed by Joseph Plunkett, the managing director, for its presentation on a magnificent scale.

Rehearse Elaborate Prologue

One of the most elaborate prologues ever arranged for the Strand has been put into rehearsal and a special exploitation and advertising campaign is being prepared.

“It is not the policy of the Strand theatre to indulge in extravagant claims for any picture before it has been shown to the public, but we have had its appeal registered at the box office,” said Mr. Mark, in signing the contract, “but in the case of “The Devil,” I want to say that I regard this picture as the finest photo-dramatic triumph of the year. Associated Exhibitors have succeeded in getting one of the very best productions of dramatic entertainment which it has been my privilege to see this season. I am absolutely certain that it will be one of the biggest public favorites. I am glad to congratulate the Associated Exhibitors on this exceptionally fine production.”

Plunkett Is Enthusiastic

Mr. Mark is giving his personal attention to the forthcoming presentation at the Strand.

Mr. Plunkett is equally enthusiastic, and promises the New York public a great surprise and a real treat in the prologue and musical introduction and accompanying to the picture. He is of the belief that the photoplay will equal, if not eclipse, the tremendous success that the picture has enjoyed one of the longest runs in theatrical history.

“The Devil” was first shown in Budapest and then in Vienna and created a sensation. The following season it was shown in the theatres in every capitol in Europe. It created as big a sensation when it reached this country and after its long run in two theatres on Broadway it was shown in all the principal cities throughout the country.

Exhibitors Endorse It

The most satisfactory feature of the Associated Exhibitors production, from the standpoint of all who have seen the picture, is that the producers, Harry Leonhardt and Andrew Callaghan, were able to get Mr. Arliss to consent to perpetuate his masterful interpretation of the character of Dr. Muller.

The measure of the result is to be seen not alone in the action of Mr. Mark in seeking the picture just as soon as it was completed, but in the enthusiastic endorsement with which the picture has received from the other big exhibitors who have seen it.

In addition to the Strand showing, special arrangements are being made for exceptional presentation of the picture at Shea’s Hippodrome at Buffalo, at the Kansas City theatres of Sam Harding, at J. H. Cooper’s magnificent new house in Oklahoma City and at a theatre to be selected by Mr. Lubin in Cincinnati.

Negotiations are under way for its exhibition in several other leading theatres and in several cities long runs are planned for the picture. It will go from the Strand theatre in New York to the Strand in Brooklyn.

Cast Virtually All Star

The Stevens version of the play was the farcical delineation of the character, but Mr. Arliss presented the bantering, cynical devil. He was the well-groomed, well-mannered drawing room character, with his discreet smile and his clever, crafty suggestions which made him plausible and fascinating. It is this attractive, magnetic character that James Young, director of the picture, has put upon the screen.

The cast is virtually an all-star one, including Sylvia Breamer, Lucy Cotton, Edmond Lowe, Roland Bottomley and Mrs. Arliss.

Lasky Executives Attend Opening of Atlanta Playhouse

ATLANTA, GA.—A party of Famous Players-Lasky executives attended the opening on Monday, December 13, of the Howard theatre, S. A. Lynch’s new house in Atlanta.

The formal opening ceremonies included addresses by Governor Hugh Dorsey, Mayor Key and other prominent Atlanta men, all of whom paid tribute to the enterprise of S. A. Lynch and Troup Howard, the Southern financier, for whom the theatre was named and who was largely instrumental in its financing. The Howard theatre, costing more than a million dollars is one of the best edifices of its kind in the South. It seats 2,700 people and its interior, decorated after the Italian Renaissance period is richly beautiful. The opening attraction was Wallace Reid in “Always Audacious.”

Besides the Paramount executives and numerous other prominent film men of the South, the entire sales force of Southern Enterprises, Inc., the Paramount distributors in that territory, was present.

Those from New York representing Paramount were H. D. H. Connick, chairman of the finance committee; Al Lichtman, general manager of the policy; S. R. Kent, general sales manager; R. W. Saunders, comptroller; Lee Counsellman, representing President Adolph Zukor; Ralph Kohn, assistant secretary, and Jerome Beatty, director of publicity and advertising.

Every facility for the presentation of such a story is tendered the producer by a group of prominent prison authorities. Whether Mr. Neilan will accept the invitation or not remains to be seen.

C. Sharpe Minor, premiere organist, has been engaged by the Mission theatre to succeed Jesse Crawford, whose eastern contract prevented him from remaining longer at this Los Angeles playhouse.

Mary Miles Minter, who has completed the circus story "The Little Clown," by Avery Hopwood, is enjoying a much-needed rest. Miss Minter has worked continuously since the first of September and has richly earned a vacation.

The cast includes Seena Owen, E. K. Lincoln, Henry Seder and others.

Two pretty and most promising ingenues, Helen Howard and Margery Prevoist have been cast for parts in the Metro all-star production of "What's the Matter With Mary?" Philip E. Rosen, who is directing the picture, is charmed with the work of these two girls and predicts a brilliant future for both of them.

Production of "The Millionaire Kid," which was delayed when its star, Gladys Walton and Astrae Short, her leading man, were injured in a glider held at Universal City. Harry Harris is directing the picture, the story for which was originally written by J. C. Hawks for Mary Pickford.

Hampton Del Ruth is now engaged in writing an original story at the Mayer studio, through special arrangement by Louis B. Mayer. This picture will be filmed for Associated First National distribution, either as an all-star production, or as a starring vehicle for Anita Stewart. It is said that the theme is of melodramatic nature, surcharged with heart interest touches and many sensational scenes.

Word was received here that "Lavender and Old Lace," the first production of the Renko Film Company, is to be distributed by Ernest Shipman and associates. H. J. Reynolds, president of the concern, will remain in New York for some time personally directing the exploitation campaign.

Edwin L. Hollywood

Metro has engaged Forrest Stanley, matinee idol and hero of many picture plays, to play opposite May Allison in "Big Game," her newest production. Dallas M. Fitzgerald has started filming this story of the far northwest woods at the Metro studio.

All writing records have been broken by Arthur Somers Roche, the latest acquisition of Metro's colony of famous writers, by producing a complete comedy drama in one week. The picture will be filmed in the near future and May Allison will be starred in it.

Bayard Veiller, Metro's chief of production, has selected Al J. Kelly, formerly a Metro assistant, director to direct Viola Dana in "Home Stuff," an original story by Agnes Johnstone and Frank Dazey.

STARVING CHILDREN

THE HON. FRANKLIN K. LANE
Proven Friend of the Motion Picture Industry, Is TREASURER OF THE HOOVER MOVEMENT

From the fullness of his knowledge, resulting from important service abroad during the late World War, Mr. Hoover is passing on to the American public the grave necessity of stretching out a helping hand to innocent sufferers from the Holocaust of Hate.

He pleads in the name of charity first. Three million, five hundred lives will be snuffed out before another harvest is garnered unless aid is rushed. Ten Dollars will save a life!

The movement is of almost equal importance because of its relation to international affairs. Starving millions on one side of the Atlantic mean disordered millions on the other.

Think of this as a charity of necessity!

THIS BIG PROJECT DEMANDS YOUR SERIOUS ATTENTION

The Motion Picture Industry is essentially "of the people"—or of the masses. Figuring only in the most practical and sordid way, it would be good business for the motion picture industry to spend Ten Dollars to save the life of any child. The per capita expenditure for motion pictures these days is a lot higher than Ten Dollars in seventy years, the normal lifetime.

In a higher plane, what industry owes more to the people—and to the children? It's the genuine heart-tug between motion pictures and the people that has resulted in the tremendous development of our business. We're the people's dearest friend—it's their right to come to us for help.

And from still another angle—and you motion picture folks everywhere ought to give this a lot of thought:—The time is at hand when the motion picture industry ought to welcome any opportunity to prove its tremendous strength, either for public welfare or for its own protection.

Gardiner and Arrow
Close Big Contract
Syndicate Gets "Before the White Man Came" for 14 States

What is said to be one of the largest contracts ever closed for a single picture in the independent field has been negotiated between Gardiner Syndicate and Arrow Film Corporation for that company's special all-Indian feature "Before the White Man Came."

To Road Show Picture

Gardiner Syndicate has obtained the distribution rights for this production for Missouri, Kansas, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, New Mexico, California, Arizona, Nevada, Louisiana, Mississippi, West Virginia, Western Pennsylvania, Greater New York and Northern New Jersey.

Gardiner states that it is its intention to put out road companies with this picture in each of the territories accompanied by an all-Indian band of twenty pieces and a full carload of exploitation help, scenery, lobby display, etc.

Attraction is Profitable

The syndicate has been handling this picture in the upper New York territory for some time past and states that it is one of the most profitable attractions that they have ever had. It is said to be the only feature production ever made which is enacted entirely by Indians, no white man or woman appearing in the cast.

The story is one of the chapters in the history of the Crow nation, and is a faithful picturization of the picturesque lives led by the original Americans before the white man came. It contains a strong love story. And, in addition, has a distinct value as an educational and historical document.

Popular Cast Supports Mae Marsh
In Film Marking Return to Screen

Several of the Actors Have been Starred in Their Own Right Many Times—Prominent in "The Little 'Fraid Lady" is Marshall

The cast chosen by Robertson-Cole to support Mae Marsh in "The Little 'Fraid Lady," which is based on the Marjorie Benton Cooke novel, "The Girl Who Lived in the Woods," and the production by which Miss Marsh has returned to the screen after an absence of two years is a distinguished one.

It contains several actors who have been starred in their own right, and who now lend their finished work to support "the whim girl of the screen," as Miss Marsh is designated in the press book which Robertson-Cole has issued to aid the exploitation of this picture.

Marshall in Cast

Pre-eminent in the cast is Tully Marshall, well known character actor. Mr. Marshall, a member of the older school of acting, won his way to legitimate recognition through a long career of one-night stands and stock engagements, during which he supported such notables as John McCullough, Joseph Jefferson, Fanny Davenport, Clara Morris and Lotta Crabtree.

Also in the cast is Gretchen Hartman, who has behind her all the traditions of acting, having been the daughter of an actress, made her debut at 7, and started at 9 to play juvenile roles in Shakespearean repertoire. Miss Hartman has been a star, and has supported many actors.

Meredith in Lead

Another actor in support is Charles Meredith, who is the leading man. Mr. Meredith graduated to screen acting from the narrower circle of the Washington Square players and Oliver Morosco's companies.

Kathleen Kirkman, who has been seen in many pictures of note, is another member of the cast. She has the part of Mrs. Helen Barrett, who is the mother of Bobby Barrett, a child whose affection for the leading character in "The Little 'Fraid Lady" is revealed by following the latter into all sorts of adventures.

Herbert Prior, who has a leading role, is a graduate of Oxford, who was on the stage fifteen years, leaving it to act for the old Biograph company.

Nephew in Support

George Bertholom Jr., the nephew of Miss Marsh, a child of 5, also is seen in "The Little 'Fraid Lady," as well as Jacques III, a bull dog which formerly was in vaudeville.

This group of actors move before a broad and diversified background in working out the story of "The Little 'Fraid Lady." All the way from the North Woods to Greenwich Village, runs the course of the story, which has to do with the adventures of a girl who runs away from the city to live in the wilds of the North woods.

Robertson-Cole, in publishing "The Little 'Fraid Lady," feels that it is a production which affords the exhibitor a splendid opportunity to draw a maximum business for several reasons.

HE'S A "GOOD LITTLE SCOUT"

Lila Lee Is a Pleasing Combination of Eager, Enthusiastic Youth and Capable, Clever Woman Who Is a Joy to Meet, Declares Doris Clare

By DORIS CLAIRE

"GOOD LITTLE SCOUT."

After all is said and done and remembered about Lila Lee, the youthful Paramount star, who recently visited Chicago, that is the predominant impression.

A delicious combination of eager, enthusiastic youth and capable, clever woman, this "little girl" screen celebrity is a joy to meet. There is genuine friendliness in the little hand that gives you a straight-from-the-shoulder grip in welcome. There is an honest frankness in her conversation that charms. There is a witchery about her naive security in the world's magic that demands as much admiration as the poise and lack of self-consciousness with which experience has tempered her graces.

SHE is 16 years old. The matter of age is one of apparent disturbance to her, and she worries a bit as she explains that in giving her age she usually plans it at 18. She exercises the logic that this number of years will satisfy the majority. Those who would have her 16, might accede her another two years. Those who know her to be 20, might make a concession of two years, she believes.

She is essentially youthful in appearance without being "kiddish." She has an enviable robust health and vigor, well rounded, sturdy form, boyishly bobbed brown hair and clear skin and shining brown eyes. Her hands, which, by the way, are the ones appearing in the majority of features where cutins show hands alone, are noticeably beautiful and she wore no rings nor adornments of any sort on occasion of her visit with the Exhibitors Herald scribe.

It was a highly interesting study in contrasts. One minute presented Lila Lee, a little girl brimming with excitement at the prospect of leaving for New York the following morning. She could "hardly wait" to be on her way! The next minute there was Lila Lee, the professional who is in a concentrated, serious consideration of her job—past, present and future. Then there was girlish little Miss Lee again, expressing pleasure in having so many pretty and kind people. Then there was temperamental, mature person, railing at someone who had offended her sense of justice in business deal of the morning, trying to soothe her own ruffled feathers.

She has ambitions, of course, and they are set toward the heavy in screen drama, with Norma Talmadge her love star. She was recently enthusiastic over her own appraisal of Miss Talmadge and longs to duplicate her success in vehicles similar to those in which Miss Talmadge plays.

She aspires to the feature of the sort of "Midsummer Madness," declaring its making her happiest, yet most exciting experience. It was rather by accident, she explained, that she was cast in the part of the young wife of Conrad Nagel, for she was used in an advertisement in place of a star whose type did not permit the response to the part sought by the director. What her next feature will be, she declares, a matter of ignorance to herself and the rest of the world. Nothing definite is in immediate prospect, she says. Meanwhile she is off on the hard to New York to acquire a supply of gowns that shall meet her needs for some time, as she does not expect to pass this way again in a long while.

Her Chicago visit was a part of her first vacation in two years and a half, she said. She was in the city for a week, spending much of the time with her parents, who live here, but making her headquarters at Hotel Sherman. She was accompanied by her sister, Peggy Lee.

PIONEER FILM MAN PLAYS WITH SESSUE HAYAKAWA

Charles West, one of the pioneer actors of pictures, but still a young leading man, has been added to the cast of Sessue Hayakawa’s latest feature which he is now filming under the direction of Colin Campbell.

West was for a while with the old Biograph Company and played with Mary Pickford in the "olden days" when the Biograph first opened East Coast studios. The other unknown players in the cast supporting the Japanese star are Tsuru Aoki (Mrs. Hayakawa), Myrtle Stedman and Henry Herbert.

Celebrated Will Issue Special Short Reels To Concentrate Effort

On Saturday, December 18, Celebrated Players Film Corporation of Chicago began the distribution of the short reel subjects of the Special Pictures Corporation. The local Special Pictures exchange has been closed.

The move was made, according to Louis W. Thompson, president of the Special Pictures, to better facilitate the distribution of Special pictures and in the belief that there are too many exchange systems in the business now, resulting in lost motion, duplication of effort and added cost to the exhibitor. The subjects that Celebrated will distribute under this new arrangement are: The Chester Conklin comedies, Ford Sterling comedies, Comicclassics, with Neely Edwards and Louise Fazenda. There will be four a month or one comedy a week.

EVERYBODY "KNOWS THE HALLROOM BOYS"
Dorothy Farnum Is Bennett Scenarioist
Transfer Is Made by Special Arrangement With Joseph M. Schenck

Dorothy Farnum has been obtained as scenario writer for the Whitman Bennett productions for publication through Associated First National Pictures, Inc., by a special arrangement between Mr. Bennett and Joseph M. Schenck, who has Miss Farnum under contract.

Last Fall, after Miss Farnum had completed the script for "Good References," which was produced starring Constance Talmadge, arrangements were made whereby Miss Farnum took over the work of preparing the continuity for "The Great Adventure" and "Jim, the Penman," two Whitman Bennett productions starring Lionel Barrymore.

Mr. Bennett's desire to have her prepare the continuity for "Salvation Nell," which will be the second Whitman Bennett production for distribution by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., made it mandatory that she be relieved of her work on the Schenck productions if she was to do the work for the Bennett productions. The arrangement was then made which resulted in her transfer to the Whitman Bennett studio in Yonkers.

"Salvation Nell" will be the most pretentious production that has been planned by Mr. Bennett up to date. Miss Farnum has advanced enough on the script, so that the date of beginning production has been set for January 17.

Mammoth Picturization of Parrish Story Being Completed By Neilan
Reports Declare That More Than 2,000 Persons Appear in Film, Which Is Said to Be the Biggest Ever Attempted by Producer

News of the production of a mammoth film in which more than 2,000 persons appear and which has been going on quietly for the last four months, is disclosed in the initial announcement concerning this film, issued by Marshall Neilan.

Work on this film has been in progress simultaneously with the production of "Dinny" and "Not a Drum Was Heard."

Story by Parrish

The production, which is nearing completion under Mr. Neilan's personal direction, presents a visualization of "Bob Hampton of Placer," by Randall Parrish, whose many popular books have placed him among the foremost writers of western stories.

Laid in Montana and Wyoming in 1876 shortly after the close of the Civil War when the Indian uprisings startled the entire country, this subject offers Mr. Neilan the biggest production he has ever attempted to portray on the screen.

Custer Fight Reproduced

One of the great dramatic features of the story which serves as a spectacular climax, is the famous last stand of General Custer against the Sioux. In planning the reproduction of this episode, it was Mr. Neilan's ambition to stage a screen version of the famous massacre so that it would stand out at all times as a genuine accomplishment in motion pictures and serve as a striking tribute to the American frontiersmen. Scouts were sent to all parts of the west to obtain data involving locations and photographic tests and months of advance preparations were made before a single scene had been shot.

Arrangements for the engagement and handling of thousands of persons to, on and from distant locations and plans for the transportation of several carloads of technical apparatus in addition to thousands of uniforms, supplies, horses, ammunition, immense generators for night photography and other paraphernalia took much time and labor, especially in view of the unpopulated plains and mountain locations with difficult approaches.

Balloon Is Used

The use of a dirigible blimp in photographing the big scenes for this picture proved a great help in overcoming the problem of obtaining the desired effects for the screen in wild country.

All in all, the ambitions of Mr. Neilan were more than realized, according to those who have already seen the results on the screen. It is said that some of the most beautiful views ever photographed by a motion picture camera are included in the prairie, mountain and river reproductions included in these scenes.

Prominent Players in Cast

Another feature of the exceptional merits of this picture, it is pointed out, is the cast. James Kirkwood, in the title role; Wesley "Freckles" Barry in a part specially written into the scenario; Marjorie Daw, Pat O'Malley and Tom Gallery are among the prominent players, each a star in his or her own right, who portray the characters of the story. Marion Fairfax worked for months on the script. Ben Carre was technical director, and at the cameras are David Kesson, Jacques Bizeul, Victor Milner, Lyman Broening and William Horwitz.

The picture will be distributed by Associated First National soon after the first of the year.

Pennsylvania Men Will Build Big York Theatre

YORK, PA.—Jacob and Isaac Silverman, of Altoona, and Nathan Apell, of this city, have acquired valuable downtown properties for the erection of a theatre and arcade, representing an investment of close to $500,000.

The theatre will have exits on George street, Philadelphia street and Cherry alley.

Marshall Neilan recently scoured the city of Los Angeles for a freckle-faced partner to appear opposite Wesley Barry in a scene. Here's the result. There are 579 freckles in the bunch. Count 'em.
Bessie Love Stories Will Exploit Picture

Star’s “Good Night” Tales Are To Be Published to Advertise New Film

Bessie Love may be about to forsake children's roles in pictures, but she appears to be in no peril of losing her hold on the affections of the little folks. It is reported that her "good-night" stories, published in book form, are to be included in the exploitation of "Penny of Tophill Trail," the Western picture in which she is now engaged.

"Penny" will follow "Bonnie May" and "The Midlanders." The former is soon to be published by Federated, under the contract entered into with that organization by Andrew J. Callaghan Productions, Inc., and Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation. Information from Hollywood is to the effect that the production of "Penny of Tophill Trail" is progressing satisfactorily, and that, directed by Arthur Berthold and with such screen favorites as Wheeler Oakman, Patricia Palmer and Ray Cannon in important roles, this picture promises to maintain the very high standard set by the two which it is to follow.

Despite the pressing demands of production, Miss Love never permits any interference with her Friday evening "at homes'" to the kiddies in the neighborhood of her Laurel Canyon house. At these functions the little guests are regaled with taffy or chocolates, while their hostess reads to them chapters from her own delightful stories. Just as grownups are in the habit of calling Bessie Love "the Princess Charming," the kiddies have named her "Lady Bountiful."

A number of adults have been privileged to see some of the stories and it is in response to the demand from them, as well as the enthusiasm of the children, that it has been decided to print the tales in book form. The stories are declared to be charming romances, cleverly told.

Longer Runs the Thing
American Managers Say

American is realizing its aim of longer runs, according to branch managers' reports on the achievements in the larger cities. Reports from New York, St. Louis, San Francisco, Dallas and other points based on contracts signed for the latest specials, P. G. Wodehouse's "Their Mutual Child," "The Blue Moon," from David Anderson's novel of the same name; Margarita Fisher in "The Gamers," and Helen Jerome Eddy and Charles Clary in "A Light Woman," show that American's faith in the continued and cumulative drawing power of its productions in each neighborhood is justified.

Open Shelbyville Theatre

SHELBYVILLE, ILL.—The new motion picture theatre recently completed on the lot west of the Shelby County State bank was opened to the public on December 16. It was built at a cost of $40,000.

Pollard Goes to Baumer

Harry Pollard, who directed Madge Kennedy in "The Danger Game," and has made many features for American, Universal and Triangle, has been engaged by Baumer Films, Inc., producers of educational and industrial films, to supervise the production of several feature single reels.

Exhibitors Supply Company Installs Type-S Machines in Ascher House

Ascher Brothers' Portage Park theatre, Chicago, which opened on December 11, through the untiring efforts of George Mock, the expert Ascher projectionist, has one of the most complete equipped projection rooms in the Middle West. Exhibitors Supply Company, Middle Western representatives of Precision Machine Company, through one of its dealers, Mid-West Theatre Supply Company, equipped the theatre with two Type-S Projectors. These were considered by Mr. Mock to be the best machine to us to get a good clear picture in a throw of 132 feet.

Arc-Controls Installed

Realizing that the public has been educated up to the point of expecting constant and brilliant illumination on the screen, two Peerless Automatic Arc-Controls were installed—one for each machine. A large room, very well ventilated, houses the projectors; and one of the things that strikes the visitor upon entering is the clean, ship-shape appearance of this important unit of the theatre. Everything has been arranged and so located that the operator can give the finest projection with the least difficulty.

Room Is Fireproof

The projection room has bad special attention in respect to fire risk. It is positively fireproof. The openings are equipped with fireproof drop shutters. No detail as to the temporary storage of films has been neglected.

The Princess and Phoenix theatres at La Porte, Indiana, in order to meet the demand of the theatregoing public for projection on the screen of a clear, distinct, clean-cut picture, have installed Simplex Type-S Projection machines. According to Mr. Joseph Duffy, Chicago branch manager of Exhibitors Supply Company, this makes La Porte 100 per cent on Simplex machines.

George Hamilton to State Right
Pictures for Various Producers

Pioneer Showman Now Has Three Films to Place
On the Market—Will Sell Twenty-Six
Subjects During the Year

George H. Hamilton, one of the oldest showmen in the picture business, who was responsible for the selling of "The Son of Tarzan" for David P. Howells, has started in business for himself with offices at 729 Seventh avenue, New York.

Because of the rapid manner in which he disposed of the states rights for "The Son of Tarzan," selling the entire United States in a period of six weeks, the owners of the three pictures which he is now handling induced him to handle their product.

Handles Curwood Film

The three pictures for which he has taken over the distribution, offering them on the states rights market, are:
"Kazan," by James Oliver Curwood, starring Jane Novak; "The Mask," by Eugene Hornblow, starring Helda Nova,
Jack Holt and Mickey Moore, child actor, and a five-reel comedy, "Hey Rube."

Those who have seen the Curwood picture state that it is the greatest story that has ever appeared on the screen from the pen of this well-known writer.
Kazan is a savage and ferocious dog sired by a wolf, who hates men with all the hatred of his savage forbear. The first kindness he ever received in his life came from the hands of a woman and he becomes her staunch friend and protector, finally saving her from worse than death.

Produced by Selig

The scene is laid in the far north and is an absorbing and thrilling story of red-blooded men and women. The picture was produced by Col. William N. Selig and directed by Bertram Bracken.

"The Mask" is an exciting society drama replete with action from start to finish. The scene is laid in California and the diamond field of South Africa.
One of the big smashing scenes is a passenger liner blown up at sea. The star is beautiful Helda Nova, and she is ably supported by Jack Holt in a dual role that calls for the utmost in acting.

"Hey Rube" is a five-reel comedy in which a circus train is wrecked in a country village. There are more than 500 animals in the picture, including lions, tigers, leopards, elephants, bears, monkeys and all the rest of the animals that constitute a regular circus menagerie.
When this crowd of wild animals breaks loose in a country village there are all sorts and kinds of amusing complications to mention.

Mr. Hamilton expects to handle a total of twenty-six pictures a year on the state right market. He will deal direct with the producer, obtaining full and complete selling rights to the pictures which he will handle. His unusual record as a showman of many years' standing is a surety that he will handle nothing but box office winners. Mr. Hamilton expects to have the entire country sold on these three pictures in less than one month's time.

"The Purple Riders" Is
Story of Old Frontier

Designed to be a great classic of the West that was and made by men who lived in that same West in that day,
"The Purple Riders," Vitagraph's new Western serial, is scheduled for issue shortly after the new year.

Mr. Ryan plays the lead in the new chapter play and is directing it. Associated with him are some of the wildest riders and ropers the West can offer, it is said.

Elinor Field appears opposite Ryan.
Joseph Rickson personifies "The Black Shadow." Ernest Shields' work is well known in Vitagraph serials and he has an important part in this production. Albert E. Smith and Cleveland Moffett wrote the story. Seven episodes have been seen at Vitagraph's Eastern executive offices.

"Wing Toy," which stars Shirley Mason
"The Cheater Reformed," in which William Russell has the leading role.

Tis a genuine pleasure indeed to send reciprocal greetings for a merry Christmas and well wishes for a Happy and Prosperous New Year to those of our friends whose cards with expressions of holiday sentiment came as a snowfall to form drifts upon our desk. Ours was a white Christmas, truly a white Christmas that was all the more beautiful because of the spirit that made it so, and as waves through the drifts was a matter of unalloyed delight.

Over at the Friars Club, where he makes his headquarters whenever he reaches New York, David Horsey is telling the story of the sale at auction of his Los Angeles studios and effects. The sale was held a month ago, but since the story hasn't appeared in print, so far as we know, we shall tell it now. The pioneer producer's lease on the ground having expired he was left with choosing the alternative of retaining ownership in the buildings and equipment, or removing everything from the site, or selling out and letting the buyers do the moving. He decided upon the latter course—a sale at auction. The Horseplay set was a large one, occupying two square city blocks. On it were two stages, with dressing rooms, business offices, laboratory, each fully equipped with necessary appurtenances. The sale was a success. Office fixtures, scenery, rugs, properties were among those figures. Stage and dressing room equipment was gobbled up by ready buyers who did not think of hemming and hawing over it. The lumber and steel, of which the stages and dressing rooms were constructed, went quickly under the auctioneer’s hammer. They fought for it, the producer said, “and the fact that they paid me double what I paid didn’t matter. Except for the laboratory, which I wanted to keep, the whole lot was cleared.

Even the concrete walks around the animal cages were bought up. Some bidder got them for $11. He made little ones out of big one- and carried them away. The stucco fence that faced the street on Main street sold for ten cents a foot. I don’t know what the buyer wanted with the fence, but he paid for it so I’m satisfied. The only remaining thing I own on the lot is the laboratory building, which I’m going to move myself. You see, I’m going to reuse some of my productions, the Cul-Comedies, the Crane Whirl Features and the Bostock Wild Animal pictures. And I guess I’ll be producing again.

After the first of the year Fred Schaller will leave for the Pacific Coast to take charge of Variety’s advertising business there. He has been connected with the same publication in New York for ten years.

"Exhibitors should never neglect their equipment," the equipment men say, "and the time to have a perfectly equipped house is right now, when there is so much talk of slow business. The exhibitor with the perfectly equipped house is bound to win out over the one with the neglected equipment for the reason that when competition is keen the public goes where it gets the best." Perhaps this logic is one of the reasons for the large number of orders now being placed with S. S. Cassard for Powers projectors. Anyways, as vice-president and sales manager of the Nichols Power Company, Mr. Cassard’s volume of orders for projectors is larger than ever.

An Kessel, of Kessel and Bauman, last Tuesday for the Coast. He will be gone five weeks.

Chet Withey and Constance Talmadge, with the supporting cast, have returned from Miami, where Mr. Withey made pictures, for a brief trip to Toronto. Their picture is now being cut and titled in the Talmadge studios. When the work is completed Mr. Withey will continue a Patter of Elasticity by Frederick and Fanny Hatton, the next National feature in which Constance Talmadge will be starred.

Virginia Withey, wife of Chet and creator of the captivating heroine of "Flying Pat," also returned from Florida in time to see her picture at the Rialto theatre. The picture was hailed as a "screaming comedy." Dorothy Gish does some clever acting in the leading role.

Lawrence A. Urbaich, who for the past four years has been associated with the Motion Picture News and His Exhibitors’ Trade Review, has been engaged by the Motion Picture Journal as advertising manager. "Larry" made his first entry into the motion picture industry in 1916 as assistant studio manager for the Solax Film Corporation. He then went to the Motion Picture News to get his first training in the advertising branch of the industry and when the Exhibitors Trade Review was founded he joined hands with their advertising staff to continue the good work. He now works for the advertisers. After three and one-half years of faithful service on the Review Mr. Urbaich left to control the producing fields. Things did not turn out as he expected and the new year finds him back again in the trade paper field.

Lucile L. Stewart and Jolla Swarzine Goosn have been added to the all-star cast now engaged in filming the Walsh-Feldling Production Corporation’s first feature, under personal direction of Thomas B. Walsh, at the Glendale Studios. The others include Montague Love, Barbara Castleton, Macey Harlam, Edwards Davis and Victor Gilbert.

A. H. Fischer, film producer and owner of the studios hearing his name at New Rochelle, sailed this week for Europe. He will be gone about a month.

Robert Schable vows he has been the victim of all the meanest joke there ever was. "A fellow returning from a studio on which he had been shooting some closeups of ‘Temple Dusk,’ a George Baker production in which he plays the heavy lead, to find a beautifully engraved flask awaiting him. No name was signed to a card reading: ‘merrie merrie, cheer!!’ What was in the beautiful flask? Lemonade! ‘The only thing to do now is to make the lemon aid’! sighs Bob.

Decatur: Crescent Added

To an Illinois Circuit

DECATUR, ILL.—The Crescent theatre, 1640 East William street, has been sold to Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Gillett who have taken possession. It was formerly owned by the late A. R. Stevens.

The Crescent is now one of three theatres in other towns and in the Spring plan to make extensive improvements to the local house. C. E. Morrow is the manager.
They're both Madge Kennedy. It is a scene from "The Girl with the Jazz Heart," her latest Goldwyn feature, in which she plays a dual role.

Bessie Barriscale, star of "The Broken Gate," a W. W. Hodkinson current production.

Alvin Wyckoff, director of photography at the Lasky studios, Los Angeles.

People Who Make Picture Plays Popular

ERLY reports indicate unprecedented activity on the part of American exhibitors in providing special programs for the Christmas Holiday. And advertisements from all parts of the country indicate that more theaters will be the scene of Watch Parties on the night of December 31, 1920, than in any previous year.

The news is interesting as proof of the constantly advancing position of the theatre in national life.

The tendency is toward the institutional as opposed to the merely individual. The benefit that attaches to the increasingly marked estate is obvious.

When the public speaks and thinks of the theatre as on a par with the oldest established civic institutions the exhibitor has advanced accordingly.

"THE SONG OF THE SOUL" (Goldwyn) presents Vivian Martin in an exquisite role. Human story, deeply appealing and heartrending. The story of a wife's decision to remain blind that her husband's dread might not be realized when she sees his scarred face. Florida Everglades setting, highly colorful. An excellent investment.

"THE COAST OF OPPORTUNITY" (Hodkinson) is a story of the mining country of Mexico and the struggle of adversaries to keep a young American engineer, J. Warren Kerrigan, from claiming land containing valuable deposits. Atmosphere well caught. Interesting and entertaining.

"THE WRONG WOMAN" (Independent) is a society drama of melodramatic tinge starring Olive Tell that will meet general approval. Rapid of action, dramatic of sequence, absorbing and entertaining. The story of the love affairs of two sisters sought in marriage by the same man.

"THE LAND OF JAZZ" (Fox) offers Eileen Percy in a delightful role and a deliciously nonsensical vehicle that will relieve the most jaded fan. A riot of humorous situations, lively and highly entertaining. The romance of a pretty girl and a young doctor in an "insanitarium."

"WHITE YOUTH" (Universal) brings Edith Roberts in rather a weak vehicle, but redeemed by the good work and prettiness of the star. Effective atmosphere, set in the Louisiana country. Humorous touches and lively action.

"FIGHTING FATE" (Vitagraph) is a fifteen episode chapter play—a novelty in the serial line. Action kept exciting without exaggeration. New stunts for excitement, and locale largely in Mexico. A superior serial.

MR. WU" (Stoll) is a gripping five part drama taken from the stage success by H. M. Verner and Harold Owen. Maurice Elvey directed the screen version. Matheson Lang gives a powerful portrayal of a strong man seeking revenge for an injury done his daughter.

"THE PRICE OF SILENCE" (Sunrise) in which Peggy Hyland is the featured player is an adaptation of Augusta Evans' novel "At the Mercy of Tiberius." Miss Hyland gives a sympathetic portrayal of the much persecuted heroine and the support is good. The film is interesting although lacking in atmosphere.

"THE THIEF" (Fox) is a society drama packed with mystery and suspense, starring Pearl White in exceptional performance. She wears gorgeous clothes, a point to be stressed in exploitation. The story of a woman who steals from friends that she may dress to keep her husband's love, the one thing important to her. Should score heavily everywhere.

"HER FIRST ELOPEMENT" (Realart) gives Wanda Hawley opportunity to play a society girl wherein she qualifies capitaly. Fresh and wholesome and entertaining. Will be generally liked. The story of the frustrated scheme of an actress to marry money.

"THE ROOKIE'S RETURN" (Paramount) stars Douglas MacLean in a lively comedy drama of youthful frolicking. Ordinary of merit, but entertaining. Attractive setting. Deals with the plot by servants to claim a legacy entrusted to a returned soldier.

"THE EMPIRE OF DIAMONDS" (Pathé) is a typical French mystery feature with cast including both American and French actors. Scene in France. A story of the chase through Europe of diamond counterfeits by American dealers. Highly absorbing.

"SOMETHING DIFFERENT" (Reelart) adds another laurel to Constance Binney's wreath, presenting her in a Central American romance with locale effectively photographed in Cuba. Exciting and entertaining and thoroughly artistic.

"813" (Robertson-Cole) is an Arsene Lupin story of mystery and adventure, high class production of a highly exciting theme. It concerns an international plot against European power and is decidedly clever and of finished art.
CONSTANCE BINNEY IN SOMETHING DIFFERENT
(REALART)
A picture that will please every type of audience and delight the following of this clever young star. It has excellent exploitation possibilities in its Spanish atmosphere. It provides excitement and entertainment and is artistic in every way. Directed by R. William Neill.

Here is exceptional opportunity for exploitation of a feature certain to meet with the favor of every audience everywhere. It is not a "big" picture, in the sense of the spectacular, but it is romance and youth and liveliness of action that includes a rebellion in Central America. Constance Binney is rapidly growing in skill as a screen actress and has a following that is increasing correspondingly. In this feature she is a willful, very pretty American girl meeting with adventures in Central America. The scenes were shot in Cuba, and the settings are uncommonly artistic and highly interesting. The Spanish atmosphere that colors it suggests interesting and effective exploitation out of the beaten track. The title should have good box office value.

Wearied of the monotony of existence, a young heiress and sweetheart of a cousin intermittently proposing, Alicia Lee seeks "something different" in a visit to Rosa Vargas, a school friend in Central America. En route she learns that the latter's husband is hostile to the president and is suspected of being the leader of revolutionists. Informed that all Calderons were brutes, when she accidentally falls into the care of Don Mariano Calderon, leader of the republic's army, she is unable to see his real kindness and his worth until she has had an exciting and romantic term of imprisonment in his home, and falls in love with him. Once again back in Newport she meets him again, shorn of his power, and capitolizes to her love for him.

PEGGY HYLAND IN THE PRICE OF SILENCE
(SUNRISE PICTURES CORP.)
A six-reel drama based on Augusta J. Wilson's novel, "At the Mercy of Tiberius," with Peggy Hyland appearing as the heroine who demonstrates her willingness to sacrifice herself to save her brother, whom she believes to be guilty of the murder for which she is held. A generally acceptable offering.

"The Price of Silence" is an acceptable picture and will probably be found satisfactory entertainment by the majority of picturegoers. The plot is familiar, that of a girl maintaining stony silence in the face of a murder charge in order to protect a weak-charactered brother whom she believes to be the murderer, but through the introduction of a mystery element a bit of suspense is developed and the interest fairly well sustained throughout. Inconsistencies, mechanical twists and faulty titles rob the picture of some of its value. A surprise scene is used for the climax in order to substantiate the girl's innocence. This scene is the finding of an impression of the murdered man's figure on the window glass, the impress being made by the lightning which caused his death. Handled as it is, the scene is hardly convincing.

The story obtained its original title from the chief male figure, Lenox Dunbar, who, as district attorney, pursued the self-sacrificing heroine with the unmercifulness of the Roman. And as relentlessly as he had pursued her so he fought for her when he believed her innocent.

As for the acting, each member of the cast serves satisfactorily. Peggy Hyland plays the tortured heroine, with Tom Chatterton appearing opposite. Campbell Gyllen is the murdered Colonel. Fred Leroy Granville directed.

CHESTER PLAYERS IN
YOU'LL BE SURPRISED
A lively turtle—yes, there can be such a thing, this two-reeler proves—joins the group of clever juvenile and animal funmakers in this latest Chester comedy. It carries the same merit of the previous Chesters—"Four Times Foiled," a "Tray Full of Trouble" and others—and they have established enviable favor, meeting with the greatest enthusiasm everywhere.

The turtle springs the trick that caps the climax in this story, crawling beneath a wall and setting fire by means of a candle attached to his back to explosives within the fortress of the kidnappers of the baby. The baby is this time a different one from the little one who has been seen with the Chester players before, but he is clever. Snookey, the monkey, appears this time as a hobo and puts over more of his amazing tricks and comedy. Ida and the burro, the horse and the collie dog, provide other interesting touches. The Chester comedies are gold mines for the exhibitor and he who passes them up is missing one of the season's hits.
J. WARREN KERRIGAN IN THE COAST OF OPPORTUNITY
(HODKINSON)
The name of the star will carry the greatest weight in the advertising of this feature. A stirring story of Mexican copper mining, rapid of action, suspense well sustained and characterizations good. Atmosphere well caught. A Robert Brunton production directed by Ernest C. Warde.

A feature that holds excitement and interest well, although not reaching any uncommon heights, is offered in this latest feature of J. Warren Kerrigan's, valuable in large part because of his popularity. The whole is pictorially effective. Fritz Brunette and Flo Hollister play two feminine parts in able way. Eddy Hearu and William V. Mong are among others in the cast.

The story is that of Dick Bristow, an American mining engineer, who discovers a rich vein of copper in Mexican property apparently worthless. He obtains an option on it from Juleen Marr, an unprincipled railway owner. The property is owned by the latter's niece, Janet. Marr learns the land's value and attempts to obtain it through unscrupulous methods. The climax comes when Janet takes a hand and orders the uncle to go through with the deal when Bristow demands the purchase. Bristow also wins the love of Janet and all ends happily.

Eddie Barry in the role of an Oriental dancer, vampire and the hit of the boardwalk on a California beach. He assumes the role to earn money to get home to his sweetheart, the coi, having been rescued by a father whose patience and generosity have been exhausted. A pal in the same boat financially and sentimentally aids in the deception and the entertainment that the two stage is good for many a hearty roar of laughter. The picture is one of dash and spirit and should make a great hit wherever shown.

Two pretty girls play the parts of the sweethearts and others of the cast are as skilful as they.

WANDA HAWLEY IN HER FIRST ELOPEMENT
(REALART)
First-class comedy cleverly played and attractively presented. Fresh and wholesome and highly entertaining. Capital cast headed by a thoroughly attractive and skilful star. Should please generally.

Wanda Hawley has established a reputation for a certain sort of high-grade, attractive comedy that she well sustains in this latest of her features. It is of refreshing character, sprightly of plot, smooth and rapid of action and is excellently presented by a cast including other well-known screen actors, among them Herbert Standing, just returned to the screen after a long illness. Interesting examples of California's diversity of scenery are offered in artistic settings. The star wears pretty gowns, as do the other women of the cast, among them Nell Craig, who gives especially good support as Lotta St. Regis.

The plot concerns two families, both of whom strive to break the hold of a notorious actress on the younger men of the clan. Adrian Maitland seeks to save his younger brother from her wiles by kidnapping the actress and taking her to sea aboard his yacht. Christina Elliott, in sympathy for a young cousin who is infatuated with Lotta, decides to befriend her. Going to her cottage she meets Maitland, and, to reward him for a past indifference towards her, she allows him to believe her to be Lotta. He makes love to her on the yacht and discovers after several hours' voyage that he has the wrong lady. Complications pile up to make much fun, and the disentanglement is cleverly brought about with a novelty of working.

A SPECIAL CAST IN THE EMPIRE OF DIAMONDS
(PATHE)
A picture sumptuously set in France and in and about the Casino at Monte Carlo, worth stressing in advertising. Abounds with mystery and the dramatic, both are delicately and artistically presented. The cast includes both American and French actors. Directed by Leonce Perret.

A feature particularly refreshing of setting, for its scenes were made in France and the Moore screen plays thoughtfully caught by the camera. It should please universally because of the varied points of appeal that are embodied within it. Startled the dramatic force is strong and the mystery element good, there is a delicate artistry about the whole that will appeal to the discriminating.

The tale deals with diamond counters, and the effort of American dealers to trace them that their own reputation and business might be saved. Matthew Versigny, head of the American house, discovers that for years they have been buying and selling spurious diamonds. He goes to France to collect the fraud, and his search takes him to London, Paris, Nice, Monte Carlo, Mentone and other European places. He tries to corner the guilty man they spring a trap on him and place the blame of their illegal trade upon him with the aid of his sister and her fiance, Paul Bernac, a special agent of the French secret service. Versigny is cleared and the real villain caught and forced to confess.

Scenes that show capitably the Flower Carnival at Nice, an annual foreign event of note, are among the many beautiful shots that make the picture uncommonly good scenically.

JOHNNY HINES IN
The inimitable and agile Torchy, trying his best to run a particular portion of the universe and incidentally stirring up troubles for himself, appears in this fun picture. His smoothness disarms him from the situations that pile up about him, and the wedding of his friends, which is his first started romance, finally is brought about after a stream of interruptions.

Somebody steals—or is believed to have stolen—a diamond bracelet from among the bride's gifts. A detective is employed to find it. The bride's brother, who comes, rumor has it, from the penitentiary is kept out of the way by Torchy until the time comes for the ceremony. He is hailed by the bride as the chaplain at the prison and Torchy's machinations suffer temporary. The bracelet is discovered at last and all ends merrily. The Torchy comedies are first rate, wholesome, bright fun and should come with the general audience everywhere.
THE LAND OF JAZZ

(FOX)

Absurd nonsense that will refresh and entertain the most jaded of picture patrons. Distinctly novel of trend, highly imaginary. A riot of fun, lively and pleasant.

Directed by Jules Furthman.

Nonsense as delicious as that of Carroll's "Alice in Wonderland"—of the impossible, imaginative sort, highly exaggerated and highly humorous—is dispensed in this comedy-drama, which is refreshingly novel. It portrays excitement about a sanitarium on Nut Island, with Dr. Carruthers in charge.

His patients suffer from illusions, and the manner in which the insanity idea is handled should not give offense.

To persuade Dr. Carruthers to change his opinion about her friend, Nancy Lee (Ruth Stonehouse), who is his fiancé, and whom he believes unfaithful, Nim Dumbarton (Eileen Percy) makes her way to this "sanitarium" and poses as a patient. The excitement that this affords her has a climax in an intoxicating fling of dancing to jazz music indulged in by the various "freaks" of the place, and then the plot is seeking to rescue Nina. All ends, as it is carried from the first, in delightfully foolish vein, and in the mating of the Doctor and Nina.

Herbert Hayes makes a most likable Dr. Carruthers.

Titles are clever enough, and carry such humor as the words put into the mouths of those who imagine himself Jack, the Giant Killer, when he says: "I've heard the beans talk about you."

Scenes of Operating surround the shore scenes making especially effective setting.

(UNIVERSAL)

A romance of the Louisiana county interestingly set, moderately entertaining. The good work of the star is the biggest value. A humorous tinge. Excellent impersonations. Directed by Norman Dawn.

The patronage that is educated to the good screen work of Edith Roberts, who established herself strongly in favor with her skill in "An Adorable Savage," should be drawn by the use of her name in advertising this feature. It will altogether approve of the art she manifests in this new character of Alice Belmore, although it seems disappointed in the exaggerations of the story given her vehicle. The atmosphere of the French-Creole country of the South is well caught, and maintaining the festival on the Feast of St. Anne is especially interesting. Arthur Gregg plays the part of Burt Striker interestingly.

The story takes Alicia Belmore home from school in a convent to meet the man her grandfather has chosen for her to wed. This is in accordance with his insistence that she marry the aged friend as he dictates, she gives her heart to Burt Striker, a young man of the swamps who has at her disposal, a stall on his wine cellar door. An elopement planned by the two meets with interference of the father and would-be fiancé, but the wedding is finally effected and all is happily brought to an end.

The master crook of fiction, Arsene Lupin, in a play of mystery and adventure, delicate and subtle, cleverly twisted, thoroughly absorbing plot. Trick photography. Directed by Scott Sidney.

The cleverness of the characteristic Lupin mystery story has been caught by the camera with fidelity in this screen transcription of one of the well-known stories. The inability to anticipate a single move of Lupin's keeps the interest tense and the intelligence baffled to the very end of the feature. Clever trick photography adds a great deal to the feature. A delicately injected romance is another pleasant point of production. Wedgwood Nowell plays the lead easily and agreeably, Kathryn Adams is a beautiful feminine lead as Dolores Castlegate. The support is admirable.

In the story Robert Castlegate, the "Diamond King," returns to France from Africa. He schemes to give power to a certain prince by means of his great wealth, and make him a ruling force in Europe. The plans, outlined on paper, are concealed in a place known only to himself. Lupin begins a search for the papers in the interests of France. German agents are also looking for them. Castlegate is found murdered under circumstances convicting Lupin. Mysterious messages refute Lupin's guilt, but authorities do not recognize it until the real murderer is found at the story's end.

MIND YOUR BUSINESS

(EDUCATIONAL)

The popular newly wedded are burlesqued in this bright bit of fun. The one-reel comedy introduces first two young women friends, one married and one single. The latter scorns the former's complete faith in her husband, and the two hatch a plan to put him to test. The single friend makes a date to meet him in a cafe. Unknown to her he sends a friend and the fun is on. Misunderstandings come, of course, the married folks getting deep into difficulties with the wife's belief that her husband did fall victim to another's charms, and the trouble tangles until all is cleared and the single folks brought into one another's arms and happiness restored in the waltz of Helen Darling, Dorothy Devore and Eddie Baker supply the bulk of fun.

THE SONG OF THE SOUL

(GOLDFWYN)

An exquisite picture of high grade, certain to make vivi and unforgetable impression upon all who view it. One of the most worthwhile productions of the year. Star beautiful, story human and appealing, a tinge of humor and exciting climaxes. Directed by John W. Noble.

Vivian Martin in "The Song of the Soul" is one of the outstanding personalities of the season's picture. She is given a part with an appeal most forceful, that of a blind girl, and her natural sweetness and youthfulness contribute much to her charm in the role. The locale is that of the Florida Everglades, an interesting touch of educational value. Camera and art work are uncommonly excellent in every way. One of the rarest characterizations is given by Ricca Allen in the part of Jinny, and there is a baby who is completely captivating. The feature should be a strong drawing card. The story, adapted from William J. Locke's "An Old World Romance," is that of the meeting of Barbara Seaforth, the blind girl, and Jerry Wendover (Fritz Leiber) in the backwoods of the Florida swamp country. The latter res-and entertaining. Directed by Ivan Abramson.

A comedy-drama giving Douglas MacLean and Doris May opportunity for youthful rollicking well met. Wholesome and entertaining, but not out of the ordinary in any way. Rather new of plot, attractive of setting and well photographed. Directed by Jack Nelson for Thomas H. Ince.

The favorable reputation that this young and popular star established for his excellent performance in "32½ Hours Leave" is the most valuable point to be stressed in advertising this latest of his features. It is an event that better vehicles than this cannot be found for the star, for he has the ability, the looks, the pep and the popularity to put over features that carry more tremendous emotion than this one. However, there is nothing to be condemned about it except its comparatively small production which, it is uncertainly not be passed by. It will provide wholesome entertainment and a number of laughs. Its action proceeds with an agreeable rapidity and keeps the audience peppy through practically its whole length.

Douglas MacLean as the rookie comes back from war to find that his aunt has left instructions in her will that four servants be given legacies immediately if Mr. MacLean, the man she left everything, occurs within the year. He is reported dead, and when the discovery comes that he is alive, he evolves a plan to force their dismissal to hasten the gifts of the aunt, which were, in the event of the nephew's survival, to be given them when he leave. Meeting the father of Alicia, a girl whom he previously has met and loved, he persuades him, learning that a law to aid him with domestic difficulties. Dad's family believe him kidnapped. When he learns of the rookie's claim as his daughter's, he determines to bring them together. Another suitor, jealous of the girl's favor, interferes, and things move lively in effort to prevent the meeting. All ends happily with the reunion of the lovers and the return of Dad to the bosom of his family.

William Duncan in FIGHTING FATE
(VITAGRAPH)

A fifteen-episode chapter play presenting William Duncan and Edith Johnson in a serial that really is "different," according to the first three reels. A play acclaimed to contain no exaggerations and only logical action. A topnotch production. Directed by William Duncan.

The "logical chapter play" makes its bow to the screen with this late offering of Vitagraph, starring William Duncan and Edith Johnson. Three episodes were shown the trade and if their appeal is any criterion the whole will score a great hit. It is clever, logical drama, as it produces no unnecessary and are their aim to make each chapter a feature of its own kind, and lead the whole to a dream climax as cast as it.

The story deals with Kern Lambert, who, when wrongly suspected of murder, determines to prove his innocence and restore the family, for which he has been officially refused. He steals from them a map showing where the late Duncan's treasure is hidden in Mexico, and travels there with Josephine, posing as Judson Cross, a dead gangster. His special trick is to steal the gangster's picture and then the ranch. Kern follows by air and rescues her, and is again attacked. The gangsters, reaching Mexico, obtain the aid of Kern and his friends are imprisoned. Josephine succeeds in escaping. The escape of others of the party from prison brings a strong climax which is worked out with exciting and absorbing sequence to the conclusion.
MATHERSON LANG IN

(STOLL FILM CORP. OF AM.)

A gripping five-reel drama, starring Matheson Lang, the eminent English actor. "Mr. Wu" was originally a highly successful stage play, also starring Mr. Lang, written by H. M. Vernon and Harold Owen. The screen version was made under the stage direction of Maurice Elvey, chief of the Stoll directional staff, and Barry Bernard, art director.

Mr. Wu, or Wu, Li Chang, is the dominating power in Kowloon, China. Matheson Lang in this role renders a powerful portrayal of a strong man seeking revenge for the iniquity against his daughter, Nang Ping, by the young Englishman, Basil Gregory, son of Arthur Gregory, trader and financier. The closeups of Mr. Lang and the semi-closeups are excellent. Here is skillful histrionic ability taking the place of sumptuous scenery and crowds of people. To see the play of emotions sweep across Mr. Lang's expressive face is a treat, a rare treat, one that cannot fail to enthrall universal admiration by its very artlessness.

The lightings are for the most part good and the direction is adequate. Although the location is China, most of the people can be singled out as Anglo-Saxons, despite their Oriental garb. But this is not a defect. The acting of Mr. Lang so dominates the entire production that such a thing as an Anglo-Saxon attempting to be a Chinaman is a mere trifle.

Lillah McCarthy as Mrs. Gregory is also excellent. She is convincing and sincere as the mother of the erring son. Meggie Albanesi, as Nang Ping, daughter of Mr. Wu, does good work, and Teddy Arundel, as Arthur Gregory, does commendable work.

For the extremely particular, Mr. Wu may seem to be an exaggerated story of the conflict between a powerful Chinese house and the Anglo-Saxon house which has done wrong to the Chinese house. But to those chiefly interested in dramatic situations and artistic dramatic acting, this picture will be welcomed. All in all, "Mr. Wu" lends itself to unusual exploitation, partly due to the relationship of China to the rest of the world at this time, and is a good box office attraction.

Briefly, the story has to do with Wu Li Chang, an influential and wealthy Chinese merchant of Kowloon, and the slow but sinister schemes for revenge which he puts into motion against the Gregory family when he believes that young Gregory has outraged his only daughter. According to the custom of China, Wu puts a reward on death, thus exciting her sin. He puts the boy in prison.

Mrs. Gregory, alarmed by her son's all-night absence, seeks her husband's aid. She suspects Wu, having an inkling of her son's romance. Wu appears at Gregory's office, when summoned, smiling and inscrutable. Because he says he has been insulted by Gregory, he refuses to permit him to enter the house, saying Mrs. Gregory and her servant alone shall come that night, at which time he, Wu, will seek to find her son.

Mrs. Gregory is given a bottle of poison by her faithful maid. She pours it into a teacup when Wu disappears into the adjoining room. He, seeing her preparing the drink, seizes the cup with mock gallantry, demanding that he be permitted to drink from his guest's cup. The poison seizes him. He staggers around the room, swinging his sword at Mrs. Gregory. The sword strikes the gong, which is the signal for young Gregory to be freed. All the doors of Wu's house are opened and the Gregories, accompanied by the maid, rush out to safety. The next day they sail for home.

DeMille's Picture Is Called "Sermon"

Peoria Newspaper Writer Urges Attendance in Special Comment

"One of the best ways to combat any disposition on the part of hometown reformers to force anti-motion picture legislation is to play pictures of such merit and fine appeal as to demand the praise of even the most rabid reformer," says Dee Robinson, owner of the Madison and other theatres in Peoria, Ill. "I feel that in playing Cecil B. DeMille's Paramount production, 'Something to Think About,' I have done much to gain support from the best element in Peoria. And it is gratifying to say that, while playing such a fine picture of lofty sentiment, I also did a very splendid business, having a standout on the last day of a seven-day run."

Wins Special Comment

Illustrating how deep an impression "Something to Think About" made in his city, Mr. Robinson transmits a clipping from the Peoria Journal-Transcript, being the leading article under "Talk of the Town," by W. J. Leach, special writer. His comment is as follows:

"Peoria has not had a better sermon in many days than the one preached at the Madison theatre during the past week under the title, 'Something to Think About.' It is a moving picture play with a religious teaching in which all the cookies are on the very bottom shelf.

"Big religious truths have been put into plays before, but not often has the truth been put so simply. In such plays as Charles Rand Kennedy's 'Servant In the House' and Jerome K. Jerome's 'Passing of the Third Floor Back,' the author has gotten at big spiritual truths, but they have seemed a bit too poetical for the average man or woman. They savored a little of 'high brow' effort.

"Good for Church People

"In the picture play which has just been shown at the Madison the same great spiritual truths are applied in the simplest possible way to the solving of the commonest and more perplexing problems of everyday life. Had I known of this story a week ago, I should have been glad to advise all my friends in all the churches to take advantage of the show.

"Ministers could do their congregations a great service by keeping an eye out for these good things and informing their congregations when there is something so well worth while. It is a service young people especially need."

Seeing It Through, with ZaSn Pitts.—Just an average little program picture, but clean and a nice picture for Sunday. Not big.—O. R. Haus, Scenic theatre, Hastings, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

All of a Sudden Norma, with Bessie Barriscale.—This did not take well. Ending poor, I'd advise to leave it alone.—Mrs. James Webb, Cozy theatre, Union, Ore.—Small town patronage.

The Prodigal Priest, with William Desmond.—Very nice picture. Good comedy in it.—Alvin S. Frank, Jewel theatre, Lafayette, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Squaw, the Bride of the Lumberjacks, and The Heart of Juana, with Peter Michieletto.—Three fine Western subjects well produced. Good stories and a pleasing capable star. Made money on all three.—J. B. Stine, Gem theatre, Clinton, Ind.—General patronage.

Mints of Hell, with William Desmond.—Fair picture. Settings are certainly pretty. It's an outdoor picture that will please a majority of fans.—Alvin S. Frank, Jewel theatre, Lafayette, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Heart in Pawn, with Susse Haya-kawa.—The star good as usual. He and his wife do some wonderful acting. This is tragedy, so did not take well here.—Mrs. James Webb, Cozy theatre, Union, Ore.—Small town patronage.

The Heart of Juana, with a special cast. I didn't take it well because the story was queer.—Alvin S. Frank, Jewel theatre, Lafayette, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Selznick

Darling Mine, with Olive Thomas.—This is about the best Olive Thomas has produced. Business was, of course, great, as she had plenty of publicity just prior to our showing this picture.—John Hafner, Princess theatre, Donora, Pa.—Neighborhood patronage.

Out of the Storm, with Barbara Castleton. —I thought it was very good, but comments on it were not too favorable.—Alvin S. Frank, Jewel theatre, Lafayette, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Children of Destiny, with Edith Halor.—Pleased about 50 per cent. Too mushy for small town patronage.—Peter Krauth, Denon theatre, Denison, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Panthea, with Norma Talmadge.—This is the best reissue I ever played. Story has a low moral, but they all came.—Peter Krauth, Denison theatre, Durant, Okla.—General patronage.

A Pair of Silk Stockings, with Constance Talmadge.—Was a whirlwind. Everyone liked it. This star draws for me.—Peter Krauth, Denison theatre, Red Lake Falls, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Last of His People, with Mitchell Lewis.—This is very good picture of the great Northwest. It holds attention to the very last.—Peter Krauth, Denison theatre, Denison, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Death Dance, with Alice Brady.—Was good picture. Well liked by all.

CONWAY THEARLE
As he appears in "The Road to Ambition," a Selznick picture.

Marys, O.—General patronage.

The New York Idea, with Alice Brady.—Pleased, but our patrons do not like Brady as well as other Realart stars.—Hardin Enterprise Company, Odeon theatre, Hardin, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Luck of the Irish, an Allan Dwon production.—A picture with a punch. Will please any audience.—Crystal theatre, Burlington, Wis.—General patronage.

Oh Lady, Lady! with Bebe Daniels.—A good picture.—Herman Blomke, Opera House, Springfield, Minn.—Home patronage.

The New York Idea, with Alice Brady.—A pretty picture, that's all. No good for small town patronage.—Peter Krauth, Denison theatre, Denison, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Mystery of the Yellow Room, with a special cast.—A picture with a touch of crime to please most people. Requires close attention to get anything out of it.—Hardin Enterprise Company, Odeon theatre, Hardin, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Sweet Lavender, with Mary Miles Minter.—A good little star in a fair picture. It made a hit with the ladies.—Herman Blomke, Opera House, Springfield, Minn.—Home patronage.

Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Roberson, with whom is Miss Leah Seawright and Miss Talitha Webb, have returned from a trip to New York, where they attended the premiere of "Dancing Pawns", the latest production of Proctor's Inc. Mr. Roberson, who is the managing director of the company, has been absent from Asheville for the past three months, and his return is welcome news to the city's theatre goers. The production has received favorable reviews in New York, and it is expected to do well in Asheville, where the company has a loyal following.
EXHIBITORS

IRENE RICH

Apparign opposite Charles Clary in the cast-Can Film Co. production—Sunset Jones.

THE MARK OF ZORRO, with Douglas Fairbanks.—A regular knockout. The best he has done. Costume angle did not hurt it. Snowstorm killed second day.—W. H. Mart, Strand theatre, Grinnell, la.

THE MOLLYCADDLE, with Douglas Fairbanks.—Brought good business and pleased most all of them. Not Fairbanks best, but satisfactory.—Guster Carland, Victoria theatre, Frankfort, Mich.

Down on the Farm, with a special cast.—My patrons didn't like it all, the little folks, but had a good house.—Edward Lindsey, Lindsey theatre, Industry, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Down on the Farm, with a special cast.—My patrons didn't like it at all. Booked for two days, pulled it off after first day.—W. H. Mart, Strand theatre, Grinnell, la.

Down on the Farm, with a special cast.—Have played many two-reel Mack Sennett's that were better.—Custer Carland, Victoria theatre, Frankfort, Mich.

THE GILDED DREAM, with Carmel Myers.—Big business. People liked return of this star. Did good in Blue Birds.

W. G. Sturgiss, Imperial theatre, Toronto, Ont.—Neighborhood patronage.

In Folly's Trail, with Carmel Myers.—Good picture to fair Sunday business.—J. B. Stine, Gem theatre, Clinton, Ind.—General patronage.

The Red Lane, with Frank Mayo.—A fine human interest story that pleased my patrons. Will go over big in small towns.—B. C. Bacon, Star theatre, Viroqua, Wis.—Neighborhood patronage.

Ticket's in, with Frank Mayo.—This is an exceptional picture in which Frank Mayo shines. The race horse scene is especially good. If you want action as well as real entertaining book it.—I. T. Hicker, Star theatre, Des Moines, la.—Transient patronage.

Once to Every Woman, with Dorothy Phillips.—A wonderful picture for a large town and people educated to this sort of thing, but not a picture to make a reputation for a small town exhibitor. Made money on it, but not what I should have made.—W. C. Whitt, Home theatre, Anderson, Cal.

Blue Streak McCoy, with Harry Carey.—Harry Carey always makes good. This is not Carey's best, but the people think he is all right.—Herman Bloomke, Opera House, Springfield, Minn.—Home patronage.

Blue Streak McCoy, with Harry Carey.—This was a cracker jack Western with our favorite Carey. Broke all of my records, give us more like this.—I. T. Hicker, Star theatre, Des Moines, la.—Transient patronage.

Under Crimson Skies, with Elmo Lincoln.—A picture that should have gone big in my town, but didn't. Lost another second day than it made the first. Picture is a thriller, but a good one.—J. B. Stine, Gem theatre, Clinton, Ind.—General patronage.

Wanted at Headquarters, with a special cast.—Extra good business. Please wonderfully, account Canadian North-west Police Story.—W. G. Sturgiss, Imperial theatre, Toronto, Ont.—Neighborhood patronage.

Locked Lips, with Tsuru Aoki.—One of the poorest pictures we have seen. A few more like this and we would close up. No more Universal programs for us. Business very poor.—Pfeiffer Brothers, Opera House, Kenton, O.—General patronage.

The Brute Breaker, with Frank Mayo.—Lots of action.—George E. Taylor, Idle Hour theatre, Dunlap, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

Blue Streak McCoy, with Harry Carey. A fair picture, but I do not think it up to the standard of Carey's pictures. Had a full house. Everybody seemed to be satisfied.—Spalding Brothers, Gem theatre, Taylorville, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Human Stuff, with Harry Carey.—The same old story. Carey always pleasing for us.—Mrs. James Webb, Cozy theatre, Union, Ore.—Small town patronage.

Fixed By George (Universal), with business. Patrons liked it very much.—Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran.—Good W. G. Sturgiss, Imperial theatre, Toronto, Ont.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Red Lane, with Frank Mayo.—Good outdoor story. Full of pep and action.—Played with full house by business.—J. B. Stine, Gem theatre, Clinton, Ind.—General patronage.

Fixed By George, with Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran.—Good program picture. Comedy is fair in spots.—Herman Bloomke, Opera House, Springfield, Minn.—Home patronage.

Gun Fighting Gentlemen, with Harry Carey.—This is a splendid production, and will pack them in. Thought it better than Overland Red.—Mrs. James Webb, Cozy theatre, Union, Ore.—Small town patronage.

Everything But the Truth, La La Luville and Once a Plumber, with Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran.—First one failed to draw. Second did slightly better. Third one drew fair business. But they're real comedies. You've read some knockers on them, but if your patrons are human they'll like them.—J. B. Stine, Gem theatre, Clinton, Ind.—General patronage.

Forbidden, with Mildred Harris Chapman.—Title might be misleading. Picture very good and work of star and cast cannot be improved upon. Never fail to draw with Mildred. Wish we had more like her.—P. G. Thiel, Orpheum theatre, Mantitowoc, Wis.—General patronage.

The Sundown Trail, with Monroe Salvisbury.—Very fine. Sell-back week will help a lot.—A. L. Hepp, Idylhour theatre, Greeley, Neb.

The Adorable Savage, with Edith Roberts.—Biggest drawing card Edith Roberts has made. Played to Sunday business and packed 100 per cent. You can't go wrong on this one.—J. B. Stine, Gem theatre, Clinton, Ind.—General patronage.

Bullet Proof, with Harry Carey. —Extra good business. Carey big favorite here.—W. G. Sturgiss, Imperial theatre, Toronto, Ont.—Neighborhood patronage.

Vitagraph

The Purple Cipher, with Earle Williams—A mystery that holds attention and pleased.—Peter Krauth, Denison theatre, Denison, la.—Neighborhood Patronage.

The General Girl, with Corinne Griffin.—A dandy picture. First reel is especially novel and excellent throughout. Everybody pleased. Title is good drawing card.—C. H. Cannon, Gem theatre, Kouts, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

—T. C. Burr, Orpheum theatre, Lancaster, Wis.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Courage of Marge O'Done, with a special cast.—A-I. Big business. First class. Play it up big. It will satisfy everybody.—Homer Thompson, Ruby theatre, Three Forks, Mont.

The Purple Cipher, with Earle Williams.—As cleverly arranged a mystery story as The Thirteenth Chair, and you can advertise and boost this one.—T. M. Davidge, Queen theatre, Durant, Okla.—General patronage.

The Island of Regeneration, with Antonio Moreno.—Very poor.—L. M. Kuhns, Gibson theatre, Gibson, N. M.—Mining camp patronage.

Specials

Honeymoon Ranch (Lubin), with a special cast.—Placed to standing room three days here. Strong posters pulled in crowds. Allene Ray pleasing as star. Picture very well received. Best Western show here for long time. Patrons asked for others like it. Full of action and suspense and the kind that draws crowds back to see more of the same kind. Allene Ray looks like a sure bet as publicity she is getting as Fame and Fortune winner is adding to her popula-ty.—E. M. McDavitt, Key theatre, Houston, Tex.

Up In Mary's Attic (Fine Arts), special cast.—It will have all the balled-headed that it is standing up in order to get in. It is a box office winner.—T. M. Davidge, The Queen theatre, Durant, Okla.—General patronage.

The Unknown Ranger (Aywon), with Rex Ray.—Poor.—O. R. Nation, Grand theatre, Davis, Calif.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Sacred Flame (Schomer), with Emily Stevens.—This is one of the best I have ever run. Pleased everyone.—J. A. Wright, Lone Star theatre, Ovalo, Tex.—Small town patronage.

The Chamber Mystery (Arrow), with a special cast.—Many good laughs in this one. Patrons said the best show in five years. Kept the audience in an uproar from beginning to end.—W. F. Baker, Boone Way theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky.—Neighborhood patronage.

When Arizona Won (Arrow), with Shorty Hamilton.—This is splendid. A touch of war. A good Western and some society.—Mrs. James Webb, Cozy theatre, Union, Ore.—Small town patronage.

Eyes of Youth (Equity), with Clara Kimball Young.—I liked it, but it showed to poor crowds, and opinion was divided.—Alvin S. Frank, Jewel theatre, Lafayette, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Sky Fire (Pinnacle), with Neal Hart.—Not as good as expected, too slow and draggy. Consider this a class B picture.—G. W. Johnson, Mystic theatre, Marmarth, N. D.

For the Soul of Rafael (Equity), with Clara Kimball Young.—This picture shows that a lot of money has been spent on it, but Young is dead. She will not draw any more.—T. M. Davidge, Queen theatre, Durant, Okla.—General patronage.

The Blindness of Youth (Garson), with all-star cast.—This is just a fair picture. Did not hear any favorable comments.—J. A. Wright, Lone Star theatre, Ovalo, Tex.—Small town patronage.

Serials

The Flaming Disk (Universal), with Elmo Lincoln.—Very good serial. You cannot go wrong on this one. Elmo Lincoln a big drawing power.—E. M. Storey, Overland theatre, Chicago, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Lost City (Warner Bros.), with Juanita Hansen.—I run this serial on Saturdays and get a packed house on each episode. My patrons all like the fighting Irishman in this serial.—J. A. Wright, Lone Star theatre, Ovalo, Tex.—Small town patronage.

Bride 13 (Fox), with a special cast.—Too gruesome and too much objectionable connection in connection with it. People refused to allow children. Came out after several episodes has been shown.—Auditorium theatre, Carleton, Neb.—Small town patronage.

Hidden Dangers (Vitagraph), with Joe Ryan and Jean Paige.—A very impossible story, but it seems to be holding up good. Business good.—A. H. Schurr, Grand theatre, St. Marys, O.—General patronage.

Hidden Dangers (Vitagraph), with a special cast.—Not worthy of the name Vitagraph. I am on the 5th episode and now wish I had never seen the first episode and looking forward to the last of it. It is without doubt a foolish production, to say the least of it.—L. C. Gelbird, Gem theatre, Springdale, Ark.

The Lion Man (Universal), with Jack Perrin.—On the 10th episode. Full of ginger and attendance picking up.—E. Pierce, Theatourm theatre, Portland, Ind.—General patronage.

Ruth of the Rockies (Pathé), with Ruth Roland.—Am on second episode. It is starting out real interesting.—W. Waltz, Star theatre, Lake City, Ia.—General patronage.

The Whirlwind (Republic), with a special cast. This does not draw for us. Have run 12 episodes. Had to put on another serial to hold them. Lay off this.—Spalding Bros., Gem theatre, Taylor-vilte, 111.—Neighborhood patronage.

Daredevil Jack (Pathé), with Jack Dempsey.—Am on the thirteenth epissode and it has dwindled down to less than expenses. Dempsey may be all right between the ropes, but not as the screen star, although he is said to be going strong where they appreciate good things. Hurrah for Jack—J. C. Jenkins, Auditorium theatre, Neill, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

FIGHTING FATE (Vitagraph), with William Duncan.—Just contracted for FIGHTING FATE, Bill Duncan's new serial, after screening the first two episodes. Consider it first-class in production, story and thrills. The bear and mule fight is a scream in episode 1. 1 am running two serials on Wednesday and this makes a second for Saturday night.—Harry Thred, Scenic theatre, Holstein, 1a.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Veiled Mystery (Vitagraph), with Antonio Moreno.—On seventh episode, Moreno has a better chance in spite of money conditions. Is pleasing all.—George E.
Taylor, Idle Hour theatre, Dunlap, 1a.—
Neighborhood patronage.

Bride 13 (Fox), with a special cast.
Poor serial after the censors here got through cutting. About twelve hundred feet in each chapter.—E. M. Storey, Overland theatre, Chicago, 111.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Veiled Mystery (Vitagraph) with Antonio Moreno.—Holding up great and pleasing everyone. Stores close in time to allow clerks to see last show.
Note Vitagraph putting Moreno in features which is good move, as Tony is too good a star to be in serials.—Harry Threde, Scenic theatre, Holstein, 1a.—Neighborhood
patronage.

Daredevil Jack (Pathé), with Jack Dempsey.—Am on my 15th episode and will say I never saw a serial hold up as strong as this one. If you get off with the right foot here you won't have any trouble.—G. M. McClain, Star the-aatre, Barry, Ill.—Small town patronage.

The Veiled Mystery (Vitagraph), with Antonio Moreno.—Very fine serial. Good, clean picture. Have played seven epis-isodes and interest increases. Vitagraph is a sure bet.—C. H. Cannon, Gem the-aatre, Koutz, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

Short Subjects

Up in Betty's Bedroom (Special).—
This comedy proved to be distinct from anything being made now. They are excessively clever comedies and subtitles are pleasingly humorous.—T. M.
Davidge, Queen theatre, Durant, Ok. —
General patronage.

An Eastern Westerner (Pathé), with Harold Lloyd.—Good Lloyd comedy.
Helped get the people in here.—E. M.
Cowles, Orpheum theatre, Pelican Rapids, Md.—Neighborhood patronage.

Betty Marie's Roundup (Pathé), with Marie Osborne.—The best of the three comedies. Sunshine Sammy is a good actor. The people sure did laugh at this picture.—R. O. Baker, Baker's Electric there, McCune, Kan.—Small town patronage.

One Week and Convict 13 (Metro), with Buster Keaton.—First a riot. Second not so good, but better than other so-called high class comedies. If booking again would use Convict 13 first.—O.

R. Nation, Grand theatre, Davis, Cal.—
Neighborhood patronage.

The Garage (Paramount), with Roscoe Arbuckle.—Here's a real comedy. Put Arbuckle comedies to pull up Hidden
Dangers serial and they are life savers.
This is the best one yet.—C. D. McConnell, Grand theatre, Prattville, Ala.—
Neighborhood patronage.

One Week (Metro), with Buster Keaton.—Certainly is good. Buster is all there.—Alvin S, Frank, Jewel theatre, Lafayette, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Fox Sunshine Comedies, with a special cast.—They sure please the people.
Can't be beat. Clean and entertaining.
A. J. Staggel, Opera House, Fayette, Iowa.

Bear Skin Beauties (Universal), with a special cast. Good comedy that has pull if you display photos.—O. E. Pierce, Theatorium theatre, Portland, Ind.—
General patronage.

The Grocery Clerk (Vitagraph), with Larry Semon.—Positively the very best comedy that we ever run. You can boost it to the sky and it will hold up with any program.—A. H. Schurr, Grand thatre, St. Marys, 0.—General patronage.

Toonerville Trolley (First National),
with a special cast.—A good two-reel picture. Not slapstick. Had many compliments on it.—W. Waltz, Star theatre, Lake City, 1a.—General patronage.

His Royal Symes (Pathé), with Harold Lloyd.—All the Lloyds are fine.
You can't beat Lloyd.—Alvin S. Frank, Jewel theatre, Lafayette, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Hobo of Pizen City (Pathé), with special cast.—Why do they make these?
There is no excuse for them. Absolutely the worst Westerns I ever played.
T. M. Davidge, Queen theatre, Durant, Okla.—General patronage.

Father's Close Shave (Christie), with Johnny Ray.—Not much good.—R. O.
Baker, Baker's Electric theatre, McCune,
Kan.—Small town patronage.

Father's Close Shave (Christie), with Johnny Ray.—Great disappointment.
Thankful that I have but one more of these to play.—O. R. Nation, Grand theatre, Davis, Cal.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Grocery Clerk (Vitagraph), with Larry Semon.—Best Semon I have yet played.—Alvin S, Frank, Jewel theatre, Lafayette, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Everybody was so busy last week chasing out to buy Christmas cards to answer those received from people they didn’t expect to write that Chicago’s film trade was more rialto than usual.

Clyde Eckhardt, manager of the Fox film exchange, was overcome with emotion last week when one of his advertising employees presented him with a box of Wrigley’s juicy fruit gum.

Speaking of Fox, the Chicago office will occupy the new building at 901-92-94 within a week or ten days and everyone is aglow with excitement.

To celebrate Christmas, Eckhardt called all the salesmen off the road December 23, giving them two days for Christmas shopping before the holiday. Dave MacBeth, the Shakespearean cashier, went to New York for the holidays and Jack Lorenz, of the office force, beat it for St. Paul.

District Manager Wolsberg, Local Manager Block and Exploitation Expert Door of the Paramount, received highly valued Christmas presents in the form of desk sets made at Great Lakes from aero plane parts. The cards bore the compliments of Lt. Commander E. E. Wilson.

All employees of the Famous Players exchange here were made happy by Christmas bonuses—that is all except two. These unfortunate individuals are regarded by the Chicago office as being from the home office, and by the home office as being attached to the Chicago office. It’s a long, sad story.

James H. Costou gave himself a Christmas present by adding the New Regent theatre, 69th and Halsted, to his string of south side houses which includes the Drexel, Lexington, Imperial and Harvard.

And Lila Lee, Paramount star, played “Sante” to several exhibitors by making personal appearances and attracting record houses. Among the theatres down state who benefited are the Decatur Bijou, Peoria Madison, and Rock Island Majestic.

J. F. Dittman, well-known Freepost theatre owner, selected Christmas day as an appropriate occasion to announce to his patrons that he will build a new 500-seat house there.

Richard Fox, who covers Indiana for Blackstone Pictures, booked Mary Miles Minter and William Russell features from a score of houses for the holidays.

Peter Kitchos, well-known west side exhibitor, was struck by a taxi last a few days ago. At St. Ann’s hospital it was found that he had sustained a broken leg.

Eddie Brichetto has been made Indiana salesman for Stoll films, and E. C. Davies has been shifted to Illinois, where he will confine his efforts to the key cities.

Walter Seymour, district manager for Hodkinson, who has been out of town for weeks, arrived back in Chicago just in time to spend Christmas.

Joe Lyon, who resigned the Chicago management of the American Film Company to join the Hodkinson sales force, is burning things up on the new job.

R. E. Neils, formerly of Cincinnati, is the new Chicago manager for American and has started auspiciously making an enviable record in his first few days.

L. A. Rozelle, assistant manager of Robinson-Cole, reports that “Kismet” has been booked in practically every key city in his territory and the exhibitors booking it are planning record exploitation stunts.

Sid Goldman, the guiding genius for Associated Producers, will be in his permanent offices within a short time. In his temporary quarters, he has been smashing sales record and when he gets all set with steam heat—watch him.

Morris Klein, president of Blackstone Pictures, is clearing up his work so that he can get to New York a few days after the first of the year to purchase pictures.

Mayer, of Superior Screen Service, has found a novel means of keeping the pan- handles out of the office. He polished up his “cruelty to animals” star and pinned it on his vest. All the weary willies wander right by now.

The boys at the Pathe office, together with the clerks, raised a pool of $33 on

Gertrude Olmstead

The winner of a Chicago $10,000 beauty contest, who has completed "Tipped Off," her initial Universal picture, is in two reels. Hoot Gibson is the male lead.

Friday, called up the Tribune Goodfellows editor and sent four baskets of good things to worthy families. The boys delivered the baskets personally and left a whole year full of good cheer behind.

Ben Peabell is just exuding the Christmas spirit these days. Stoll pictures are going over fine, but what tickles Ben most is the fact that he has booked "Squandered Lives" in at the State-Lake theatre, against still competition, five other big pictures having tried to nose the Stoll feature out.

E. F. Tarbell was the happy recipient of a beautiful watch fob on Christmas, the gift of the employees of the Vitagraph office.

W. L. Hill up at Universal is preparing a mammoth advertising campaign for "Outside the Law" the new Friscoella Dean feature. Folks who ride the L. C. and read the papers are going to see a lot of Hill’s stuff.

The next meeting of the Motion Picture Press Club will be held at the Stratford Hotel on January 7, at which time an interesting session is promised.

Harry C. Moir, operating the Rose, Alcazar and Boston theatres, presented all of the employees with life insurance policies as Christmas gifts.
SHOTS AND MISSES

By Mac

Edwin Silverman, manager of the Select exchange tells us three new representatives have been added to the local sales, E. W. Johnson, formerly of the Universal, will cover the north side, L. Y. Crump, the popular ex-Pathe expert on the south side, and Ben Weissenbach, erstwhile Associated purveyor to watch affairs on the west side. Giving the personnel a careless "onset over," they all look to smash records of all sorts.

Didya notice that snappy book-mark that Charlie Ryan, manager of the Garfield theatre is dealing out to his patrons for Xmas week. Looks like "Chick" is getting them lined up for some big features for the coming year. You know, the kind that have been read by seven hundred million in book form before Los Angeles started to work on them.

Cecil Maberry, manager of the local Goldwyn exchange, packed the ol' grip for a trip to Kansas City enroute to his home at Sayre, Okla. Be careful, Cecil, to pick out one of those "tame" bronchos after the Yuletide feast. You'll enjoy your ride with more comfort.

Del Goodman of the local United Artists exchange pulls a pippin this week. It seems that Chas. Smith (an ol' vet in the game) and the intrepid at., 1921, have the pleasure of a conference with Del, who he claimed to know well, but forgot his moniker. After a brief chat, manager Smith of the Grove theatre, Elgin, dismissed the intrepid Goodman with, "Sorry we can't use your stuff, but say where can I look those new Fairbanks and Pickford features?" Latest reports state that Del came to several hours later. Looked like a close call with the Elgin state hospital nearby, at that.

B. T. PHILPS of the Unity Photoplays screened the Fritzie Ridgway and Thunderbolt Jack productions at the Manhattan theatre for the benefit of his company's many Hoosier clients. For a spell it looked as though Philips would have to wire Manager FRANK FLANDERS for assistance to help him gather in the contracts. Fair enough, "B. T."

Rumors have been heard heretofore that Lee Woodway of the Select exchange is taking up a course in bacteria medica so it looks like Lee will soon carry the prefix "Doctor." Here's hoping he will practice in Chicago. Madison and Clark streets would make a good "location," and we have been assured by Irv Mack that he can make any number of prescriptions printed at a moment's notice.

FRANK YOUNG, one of Goldwyn's busiest sales representatives, was caught the other eve lugging home an entire railroad system for junior Young to ruin the hardwood floors of the Young domicile during the Yuletide week. Why not buy M. K. T. or C. & GT. West. Stocks might go up some day, besides, you will have happy neighbors and save the rugs and hardwood floors.

With the deomairn L. A. BALLARD returning to United Artists, after a brief stopover with the Stoll Films, looks like that recent "rumor" with regard to Crex Smith, manager of the United Artists exchange resigning that someone guessed wrong. We knew all the time that Crex just couldn't tolerate the Windy City.

Yes, we know that Jack Miller of the Palaisence theatre is married, but that's no reason the youngster managing the Park theatre needs call him Daddy. To get this straight for all time, the new manager is a recent importation from York State, b'gosh, and he is Jack's baby brother. Welcome to our city, Miller junior!

Director Is Enthusiastic About New Arrow Feature

Word has been received by Arrow Film Corporation from Dramafilms that Will Bradley, the director of "The Tame Cat," has just returned from Charleston, S. C., where he shot the final scenes on this production, which is now being cut and titled and will be ready for early publication.

Bradley states that he believes this will be one of the most remarkable productions seen in some time, as it is an unusual story which affords an opportunity for remarkable photographic effects and good character delineation.

Opened on December 27
ANSONIA, CONN.—The new Capitol theatre, which was built by J. J. Hoffman, opened its doors December 27. The theatre has been under construction for the last year and its cost runs close to $300,000.

"In the Days of St. Patrick"

A SIX-REEL CLASSIC OF IRISH CHURCH HISTORY

Supervised by the REV. W. McSweeney, of Dublin

Approved by Cardinal Logue, Primate of Ireland, and Archbishop Gilman, of Tuam, leading a pilgrimage to Croagh Patrick Mountain, in County Mayo.

For Catholic Churches, Schools, Colleges and Societies

It is strictly a religious production of the life of Ireland's patron Saint. It is authoritative. It is not a propaganda play and has absolutely nothing of a political nature in it. It is one of the greatest Irish stories ever produced on the screen. Seeing this picture of other days will encourage the Irish people to hold up in their present trials.

Fifteen to Twenty Million Catholics Is Your Field

Every family will be waiting to see this masterpiece of Ireland's own patron Saint.

Optimists on America

The members of Associated Producers predict for the new year tremendous prosperity in all lines of business, including the motion picture theatres, despite necessary readjustment of industry and standards of living.

Those who would seek at this time to "talk a depression into being" are fools and the enemies of this, the greatest and most prosperous country the world has ever known.

"Believe Me, Sidney!"

Mr. Sidney Goldman,
306 South Pabst Av.,
Chicago, Ill.

My dear Sidney:

Just a few words in regard to the way in which I have put over the Maurice Tourneur production, "The Last of the Mohicans".

First allow me to thank you for writing our Superintendent of schools here and for sending me a copy of your letter to him. That gave me a "lead off" and if you don't think I took advantage of it you should have seen my business on the opening yesterday. Also allow me to thank you for sending me the print three days in advance so that I could get an advance showing.

When the print arrived I got busy and phoned the leaders of the following: The Ministerial Alliance, Women's Club, I.W.O.A., I.W.O.A. Schools, City Officials, Board of Education, Public Library and St. Victor's College. They all responded at the private showing and when the picture had finished I eagerly handed them the enclosed card which I had printed for the occasion. Within twenty four hours they all had returned their cards with "THE LAST OF THE MOHICANS" written on it. That was all I needed - I went from there! Heavy on the newspapers, my screen and lobby. The results were wonderful.

Friendly competitors told me to lay off of "Last of the Mohicans", in fact I was skeptical myself but I knew from criticisms that the production was there and also know if I could get the folks interested in the education of the community boys, that the picture would please and believe me, Sidney, that's the answer! It did please them and it pleased the kids that crave "LINCH PITCHERS" too.

Show this letter to exhibitors and they can use the same ideas and clean up the same as I have. Much success to you.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Abrams:

I have just returned to my office from a screening of Douglas Fairbanks' new picture "The Mark of Zorro", and I cannot refrain from telling you that I think it is really the most wonderful picture he has made.

We believe the picture is so big that we have decided to play this feature in our theatres a full week instead of our usual policy which has always been to play everything three or four days.

It took a picture like the "Mark of Zorro" to do it.

Best wishes and kindest regards.

I'd Book CONWAY TEARLE "THE ROAD OF AMBITION"

Because I know that Conway Tearle is a corking good actor and has a whale of a following among the folks who attend my theatre.

Because I know that "THE ROAD OF AMBITION" has a story which will strike home in any community. It has an unusual breadth of appeal. There is inspiration for the man who works with his hands. There is real satisfaction for those who know the modern society atmosphere and all too often see it completely lost on the photoplay screen.

Because It is my belief that "THE ROAD OF AMBITION" has in it those balanced elements of interest which will make it appeal with equal strength to both men and women—and there are not many pictures that do this.

Because I am convinced that Conway Tearle's work in this production brings to the screen a type of motion picture hero that is just a little different—and just a little more pleasing—than any I have seen in a Coon's age.

"All! First National pictures are top notchers. All franchise holders know that they do not have to bid for the service next season after establishing the product in his house."—THAT'S ANOTHER REASON WHY

There'll be a Franchise everywhere.

THIS is a picture of the screen's most delightful comedienne, Miss Constance Talmadge, reproduced from a still from her newest picture, "Mamma's Affair." We think it is the most ravishingly beautiful, the most fascinating and enticing picture of this winsome screen star. It speaks for the photoplay. The picture is a Joseph M. Schenck production, adapted by John Emerson and Anita Loos from the famous stage success by Rachael Barton Butler and directed by Victor Fleming. It is a First National Attraction.
Admission Prices

By MARTIN J. QUIGLEY

THE next few months will see considerable discussion of the subject of admission prices. There will be some misinformed and timid theatre men who will be inclined to view the schedule of admission charges that has been put into effect during the past three years as equivalent in its own sphere to thirty-five cent sugar and twenty-four dollar shoes.

In any consideration of current automobile prices the public mind will not turn back to what the motor car manufacturer received when he was making one and two cylinder cars. The one and two cylinder car would not be wanted today at any price. This situation strikes very close to the real truth of the exhibitor's admission price problem.

Theatre admission prices—referring only to the motion picture theatre—have not been inflated. The exhibitor did not leap upon a public accustomed on every side to being robbed during recent abnormal times and levy an excessive tribute. Admission prices have merely kept pace with the public's demand for better and more costly motion picture entertainment. The one cylinder motion picture is not wanted by the public today at any price and it neither wants nor expects current picture values at nickelodeon prices.

In certain instances the public may feel that admission prices have increased merely in sympathy with commodity prices and consequently with commodity prices dropping theatre prices will follow the same course. It is very pertinent to the exhibitor's interest as well as being his duty to the industry at large to conduct a campaign of education and enlightenment to correct this impression.

It does not require an expert in economics to understand that regardless of any readjustment taking place in the general commercial structure of the country motion pictures that cost one hundred thousand dollars to produce cannot be sold to the public at prices which obtained when the average picture cost from twenty to twenty-five thousand dollars to produce. And this fact is the crux of the entire situation: The huge increase in production costs is attributable in the main to the public's demand for better pictures which obviously cost more money to make.

For example: Some time ago the public was content with stories which could be purchased from hack writers for a few hundred dollars. Today, in order to meet the public's demand, the entire world is combed for the best brains in the writing profession and internationally famous authors are set to the task of writing for the screen. This is the industry's answer to the demand for better stories. Certainly the public does not expect the industry to be purely philanthropic in its efforts to answer this demand.

SETTIONS must be constructed today with absolute fidelity to the real. When stories require it journeys of hundreds of miles must be made to locations where genuinely applicable backgrounds may be obtained. Players who in other days were sufficiently strong to carry productions as stars now find places in the cast, adding immeasurably to the total effectiveness of productions and also adding greatly to the cost.

An indispensable element in the production of a good picture is time—and a lot of it. And time means expense. Curtail on this expense and the chance of producing a great picture is minimized. Practically without exception there has been a period of time expended in the making of great pictures that is hardly understandable by anyone unfamiliar with the intricacies of the art.

Your public should know these facts. Do not permit them to become inclined, through ignorance of the truth, toward an attitude which would tend to rob them of acceptable screen entertainment.
Fred B. Warren, general manager of distribution of Associated Producers, Inc., is planning upon returning to Los Angeles within a short time.

George H. Davis who has disposed of practically all of his territory for "Isabel" is contemplating returning to the West Coast, where he will remain for several months.

Hunt Stromberg, exploitation chief of Thomas H. Ince, is expected in Chicago this week where he will stage a special exploitation stunt for "Lying Lips," a forthcoming Associated Producers feature.

John C. Ragland, general manager of Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation, is back in Los Angeles spending the holidays at Louisville, Ky.

W. C. Hermann, special representative of Universal Film Mfg. Company, has just completed a three months tour of the "Big U" exchange and returned to the home office.

A. H. Woods viewed D. W. Griffith's "Way Down East" from the rear of the house at his Woods theatre on New Years day. He spent Dec. 31 and Jan 1 in Chicago.

Rex Ingram is expected to arrive in New York this week with the first print of Metro's big production of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse."

Bere Daniels, the Realart star, spent her Christmas holidays at her old home in Dallas, Texas. Old time friends in the Texan city arranged several parties in her honor. Her next picture will be an adaptation of a Saturday Evening Post story by Nina Wilcox Putnam.

Joe Hopf, who is one of the big men in the film business in the Central West, expects to open his Fort Armstrong theater at Rock Island, Ill., early this month. The house seats 1,700 and in its decorative scheme carries out the Indian traditions.

Victor Herbert has been prevailed upon to write the music for Mack Sennett's Broadway revue.

Dorothy Dalton, the Paramount star, has returned to Los Angeles. Miss Dalton has been away from sunny California for over two years.

Everything is all set for the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce ball to be held in the Astor Hotel, New York, Jan. 5. More than 1000 tickets had been disposed of on Saturday.

Hobart Bosworth to properly celebrate the Christmas season took unto himself a wife. The Thomas H. Ince star was wedded to Mrs. Cecile Pericival, at San Diego. She was formerly connected with the research department of the Ince studios.

Mrs. Tod Browning, wife of the Universal director, was stricken seriously ill a few days before Christmas and Mr. Browning was unable to come East with the print of "Outside the Law" the Universal-Jewel production.

Thomas Buchanan who recently resigned as associate editor of Goldwyn Pictures at Culver City, has joined the Jesse Lasky forces where he would be associated with Frank E. Woods.

After three weeks spent on the Western Front supervising "Wife Insurance" their initial special feature which Victor Fleming is directing, John Emerson, Anita Loos, and James Creelman, their special publicity representative returned to New York.

Waterson R. Rothacker left Jan 3 for New York where he expects to remain for a week.

That A. P. story sent out from New York stating that the "fewer and better pictures movement had thrown 50,000 actors out of work and closed down all the big studios in the country," caused no end of trouble for the producers. Stories like that do immeasurable injury to the industry and to state that the producers have cut down their working forces fifty per cent is ridiculous upon its face. All of the big companies were mentioned in the news item.

Sylvia Breakner has signed a contract to appear in Rulaiay productions under director general Lloyd R. Carleton. She has been appearing in Sidney A. Franklin features.

W. W. Hordokin completed a tour of the exchanges in the Central West and returned to New York last week.

Julius Laemmle, the thirteen-year-old son and heir of the president of Universal Film Mfg. Company, spent his holidays in Chicago. At the Universal exchange he discussed pictures and the different phases of the business like a veteran. A chip off the old block.

The Jacksonville, Florida, Chamber of Commerce has taken over ten thousand feet of film in and around that city which it will use to advertise the city and surrounding country.

M. E. Mazur, special representative of Sherman Productions Corporation, has been promoted to treasurer of that company.

Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky, was registered at the Blackstone Hotel, Chicago, two days last week.

Vera Gordon, who played the mother in "Humoresque," entertained the inmates of Sing Sing prison on New Year's Day. Virginia Valli and Edith Stockton aided her with the program.

George Perry, vice-president of Perry Plays, Inc., has signed Robert Z. Leonard to direct the first production for that company. It will be started about January 10.

Mary Miles Minter is in the east enjoying a brief vacation. On her return to Los Angeles, she will make plans for an elaborate home to be built on property which she recently purchased in Laughlin Park.

That's the way to write it.

Try it on your woodstock, remington, underwood or dixiana.

They're putting stripes on the street cars in Chicago, but the stranglers would rather see the traction officials in stripes.

That $10 presidential inauguration won't make a very big hit with the bootleggers.

Those congressmen who want to further burden the film business with a lot of taxes, probably think because it is the silent drama it won't say a word.

The "ax" of tax certainly hit the business in the neck. It has ripped all the feathers out of the moose that laid the golden eggs, they want its wishbone and drumsticks.

By the way, I wonder if that new picture of Marshall Neilan's "Not a Drum Was Heard" is propaganda for the Blue Sunday boys.

If it refers to snare drums in our orchestra pits, I'm sure it is.

Those birds are certainly going to make it pleasant for us, are they not. You said it. They are not.

On the level, how'd you like to have a Blue Inspector wake you up out of a nice slumber on a Sunday morn and trot you off to church, just because the Sunday previous you had walked through the park without your blue glasses.

Stick to Your Stick, Babe.

Babe Ruth says he's going to get 100 home runs this season. Last year he dropped $57,000 in the picture business and he got 24 home runs. He probably figures that if he devotes his whole time to b.b. he can double last year's record.

If Congress is going to build any more ships they ought to limit the profiteers to one-half of one per cent.

Spoo Perfects Stereoscopic Camera After Years of Study
Depth in Pictures Is Actually Made Visible Upon the Screen by Process Developed by Producer of Essanay Films and P. John Berggren
Marks Sensational Advance in Photography

By MARTIN J. QUIGLEY

Stereoscopic photography is a reality.
George K. Spoo, president of the Essanay Film Mfg. Co., signalizes the opening of the new year with an announcement that marks a sensational advance in photography.

Undaunted by the declarations of scientists that stereoscopic photography is an impossibility, Mr. Spoo steadfastly pursued a series of experiments over a period of eight years, finally achieving success just before the close of last year.

Directly responsible for the invention which represents the one step of mechanical progress which has been made since the motion picture was developed to its present stage of perfection is P. John Berggren, a native of Sweden, who has been intensively engaged in study and experimentation looking to the discovery of stereoscopic photography for twelve years.

Financed by Mr. Spoo and working under his supervision at the Essanay laboratories in Chicago, Mr. Berggren has been engaged for four years in the series of experiments which have just culminated in success.

The story of the successful production of stereoscopic photography—which is too long for the limits of this article—is one of absorbing interest.

The idea and the feasibility of its attainment was first conceived by Mr. Spoo eight years ago. Mr. Berggren has been working on the new system of photography for twelve years. About four years ago Mr. Spoo determined to abandon all other motion picture activities and centralize his interest upon the development of stereoscopic photography which he believed would revolutionize the motion picture, adding immeasurably to the public's interest in pictures and to the industry's profit.

Various Principals Are Tried
At that time Mr. Spoo had widespread interests in motion pictures which he immediately put in the process of liquidation, finally entirely suspending production and distribution in order that he might give his undivided attention to hastening the successful issue of the experiments which had already been begun.

Various principles upon which it was hoped to achieve stereoscopic photography were tried, carried through to the final stage and then abandoned. The latest experiment which worked out successfully was based on the original idea entertained by Mr. Spoo eight years ago.

The additional cost of the new process as compared with the cost of plain photography is very small, representing only a small additional expense on the positive prints.

The stereoscopic feature of the Spoo-Berggren development is not merely comparative; the third dimension—depth—is actually made visible upon the screen. In fact, the method now being employed emphasizes the stereoscopic feature beyond that of natural vision.

What Spoo and Berggren have achieved, plainly stated, is as follows:

Up to the present time photography, motion or still, has been flat, consisting only of length and breadth. Occasionally in very fine photography upon the screen an impression of stereopsis is suggested through lighting and composition but the resulting picture is not actually stereoscopic and only gives a stereoscopic impression in a very minor degree.

The Spoo-Berggren process attains a natural vision picture. That is, the picture upon the screen is not one which has been robbed of its natural characteristic of depth but is a true reestablishment of the original view just as it would be seen by the human eye.

The ordinary camera, photographing only with a single lens or eye, can only fix upon the negative an image as viewed with a single human eye which is not stereoscopic because the stereopsis which is attained in human vision is based on the optical arrangement by which the eyes being set apart focus upon an object from different angles.

Two Images Are Obtained
The Spoo-Berggren camera has two lenses which for the purpose of this description may be compared with the two eyes of an individual. Two images from slightly different angles are photographed. When such a picture is correctly projected it reestablishes upon the screen an image exactly as seen by human vision and the difference from the usual flat picture may be compared with the difference between a street scene that is painted on a canvas drop and a street scene that is actually built.

Mr. Spoo explains that the ordinary camera may be equipped for the making of binocular vision pictures by the adding of a compact attachment. This applies similarly to the projector which may also be readily equipped for stereoscopic projection.

The Spoo-Berggren announcement represents the attainment of one of the two things necessary for the reestablishment upon the screen of natural vision exactly as seen by the human eyes. The one thing

Objects on Screen Assume Natural Forms and Outlines

The writer believing that the trade will be chiefly interested in being acquainted with what the natural vision pictures actually look like upon the screen will attempt a description of what is seen rather than a technical explanation of the system which is provided for elsewhere in this issue.

Through the courtesy of Mr. Spoor a private demonstration of the natural vision pictures was given at the Essanay laboratories on Monday, January 3. In addition to Mr. Spoor, Mr. Berggren, the inventor, Blair Coan and the writer were present.

Natural Lighting Used

The views projected consisted of miscellaneous shots made recently at various points about Chicago. In each instance the scene reproduced was one photographed at a distance from eighty to 100 feet from the camera. No attempt at artificial lighting of any of the scenes had been made and only the natural illumination of typical Fall days in Chicago with overcast skies was availed of.

The character of photography projected upon the screen under the Spoor-Berggren system was decidedly different and better in every respect than any ever viewed previously. The first impression registered with the observer is that the scene is beautifully lighted and that the definition is perfect. Immediately objects in the scene, animate or inanimate assume natural form, outline and solidity and stand out as if in relief upon the screen.

A distance view appears radically different than one is accustomed to in flat photography. Looking ahead over a roadway, for instance, the road does not shoot upwards in the picture, but merely takes a gradual incline at the start and then stretches out in exact re-establishment of such a view in reality.

An outstanding characteristic of the Spoor-Berggren natural vision pictures is that they forcibly convey a suggestion of the effect of a fine oil painting in which the artist has been able to so arrange his lights and shadows that the objects stand out with great fidelity to the reality. The picture upon the screen retains its correct proportions and definition regardless of what position in front of the screen it may be viewed from. The picture is plainly and clearly visible from a position three feet away from the screen and three feet to the right or left.

There is a noticeable absence of eye-strain which is accounted for by the scientific principle upon which the new system is based.

In any consideration of the entertainment value and general interest to the public of the pictures produced under the Spoor-Berggren system they naturally fall into comparison, photographically, with such shots as are visible, for instance, in D. W. Griffith’s, “Way Down East” which, it will be generally admitted, compare favorably with the best photography that has yet been projected in theatres.

Despite the obviously careful and intelligent attention to lighting and composition that very apparently has been expended to obtain the screen result in the Griffith picture, it is at a decided disadvantage, photographically, when compared with the casual results that Mr. Spoor is able to demonstrate with the new system. This, we believe, suggests very forcibly what may be conservatively expected in the way of photographic advancement from the new system.

Great Advances Offered

It is to be noted that the stereoscopic feature of the natural vision picture is not gained through the loss of any of the qualities attained in the best flat photography. In fact, the stereoscopic feature is but one phase of the general photographic improvement obtained under the new system.

Aside from its scientific significance, the new system, in a practical test, demonstrates beyond question that it is a development that offers great advances for screen photography. Its appeal and interest to the public is practically beyond question and it should make for the motion picture substantial artistic progress, meanwhile contributing in a very certain manner to widening the scope and influence of screen entertainment.
Fire Destroys Lieber Block in Indianapolis
Loss to Building Placed at $160,000. Film Vaults Not Destroyed
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)
INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Jan. 4.—Fire, which started on the third floor of the building occupied by H. Lieber Company, 24 West Washington Street, and extended to the fourth floor resulting in $160,000 damage, nearly destroyed the property of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., for which H. Lieber holds the Indiana franchise.

Discovered in Morning
The fire was discovered early in the morning of Wednesday, December 29. It was brought under control before it reached the film vault on the fourth floor. Furniture and advertising matter of the exchange were destroyed but records of orders were merely scorched and were readily copied. The H. Lieber Company are art dealers. In order to preserve plans adopted some time ago the First National exchange is being moved to the old Rauh building in West New York Street. It is a two-story building formerly occupied by General Film Company and has a brick and concrete film vault.

All Orders Are Filled
Floyd Brown, manager, says the fire has not prevented the exchange from filling all orders on schedule time. Immediately following the fire he accepted an offer of office and storage space from the local branch of Famous Player-Lasky Corporation.

Police Bar Sunday Charity Concert in Atlanta House
Action Is Assailed by Clergy and Public—Prohibitory Steps Not Taken by City Officials Until Day Prior to Affair at Howard Theatre
(Staff Correspondent, Exhibitors Herald)
ATLANTA, Ga., Jan. 4.—Atlanta is still roiled over the action of Mayor James L. Key and Chief of Police Beavers in prohibiting the charity concert which was to be held at the Howard theatre on Sunday, December 19, under the auspices of the Associated Charities.

This concert in the past has been an annual function here, conducted for the purpose of receiving donations for ten especially deserving cases, which are labeled “the ten opportunities” by the Associated Charities, or for the general Christmas fund.

Function Generally Held at Atlanta Theatre
The entertainment usually consists of some dramatic reading, or a musical program, and is given in either the Atlanta theatre, a legitimate house, or the Auditorium. But this year, the beautiful new Howard theatre had only been open a week, and thousands of people had attempted to view it during its first week had been turned away for lack of room.

The head of the charitable organization knew that to hold their annual entertainment in the Howard would double the work and they would work in every way, to the advantage of the poor and needy who would benefit by the donations.

Turner Howard, and his brother, C. B. Howard, of the Howard theatre, gladly offered the theatre free of any charge, the big thirty-five film concert orchestra, and the two star soloists who are features of the Howard’s program. Enrico Laide, conductor of the orchestra, arranged a program of high-class music, some sacred music, and Miss Alma Doris and Herbert Waterous, soloists, prepared special numbers.

Is Widely Advertised
Slides were used in all the local theatres advising people that the Howard had been loaned to the Associated Charities, and that the big concert orchestra and two star soloists would be a part of a musical program of a high order of merit.

John A. Manget, prominent Atlanta citizen, who during the war served as head of a committee on Fair Prices, took the matter up with the chief of police late Saturday afternoon.—after advertising had been displayed all over the city for the entire week, and when it was too late for the charitable organization to find some other place to give the concert.—Mr. Manget’s letter to Chief of Police Beavers follows:

Letter Sent to Chief
Dear Sir:
The Howard theatre is advertised to be open Sunday afternoon for charity. No matter how good the cause to which they propose to donate the money raised, this is positively against the city ordinance, introduced by Councilman W. F. Buchanan, and passed by council in 1917.

The passage of this ordinance was after a long hard fight had been made to close half a dozen theatres in this city that operated on Sunday, under the guise of charity.

It developed that charity received only a very small per cent of the receipts from most of these entertainments, and the good people of Atlanta, through council, put a stop to Sunday shows.

“The proposition and argument for opening the Howard theatre tomorrow is identical with the case of the other theatres which were closed by the ordinance referred to.”

“I call on you and urgently request that you forbid the opening of the Howard Theatre in violation of the city law.”

Major Issues Statement
A copy of this letter was also sent to Mayor James L. Key and Atlanta, who made the following statement to the press, Saturday night.

“My attention has been called to the opening of the Howard theatre, tomorrow, Sunday, and also my attention has been called to the Sunday closing law of 1917, and it is my opinion that the opening of this

Saxe and Grauman Lease Three Theatres in Chicago From Moir

It is understood that the rental of each of the theatres taken over by Saxe & Grauman will be $30,000 a year. The length of the lease on the theatres was not announced. Neither has it been announced whether a new policy will be adopted in the operation of the houses.
Natural Vision Invention Is Explained by Inventor

P. John Berggren Gives Statement
To "Exhibitors Herald" on System
Which May Revolutionize Pictures

At the request of Exhibitors Herald, P. John Berggren, inventor of the system of natural vision photography, has given in plain language the following brief explanation of the invention:

Natural vision photography is the mechanical reproduction of the human system of vision.

To accomplish this the objects must be viewed or photographed at a parallax. The ordinary parallax used in viewing objects being the interpupillary distance. In reproductions upon the film for a greater distance the parallax should be increased according to a certain relation between the distance between the two lenses and the distance of the object from the camera.

For that reason the camera is equipped with an adjustable parallax to compensate for the difference between a close-up and a distant view. If an object should be photographed under an unproportional parallax the image would not be a true picture of the object as seen by a person with two eyes, which is the fundamental principle for the use of this instrument.

In viewing farther away objects an increased parallax will give a stronger stereoscopic effect than seen in natural vision, something similar to the experience of looking through a binocular.

This photographic system has for its foundation the combination of three sciences—elementary physics, of the optical system in photographing printing and projection; the physiologic features involved when seen by the eye on getting the two different images under corresponding angles into the eyes in relation to the photographic angle and finally the psychological judgment of the experience in the illusion.

This entire system is based on a new photographic principle. Up to the present time all photography has been a reproduction of a monocular view and consequently has been limited to two dimensions. To be able to reproduce the third dimension or a suggestion of depth a system of angular photography must be used. Angular photography gives a double perspective and also a double angular reflection of light of the objects photographed. To obtain these two different and separate images, erect them back and focus them both over a common photographic plane, it is necessary to use the new system of light ray selection which I have designed.

remaining to be developed is natural vision color. Of the two, binocular vision photography unquestionably means more to the public and consequently more to the industry. There may be some grounds for argument as to the value and desirability of color photography but none as to the benefits of reproducing upon the screen objects as they are actually seen by the human eyes as to form, structure and position.

Mr. Spoor, who is accustomed to success and progress, having amassed a considerable fortune and built up one of the largest producing and distributing organizations, which was set aside in order that he could devote all his time to assisting the inventor in bringing about natural vision pictures, is quietly jubilant over the invention.

He points out that it is the one radical departure since the original development of photography. As a contribution to the popularity and the commercial progress of the motion picture, he believes it is of overwhelming importance and that its influence will be very great upon the immediate future of the industry.

Mr. Spoor owns basic patents on the optical instruments and mechanical devices which produce the natural vision pictures.

He states that he has several plans under consideration for the commercial exploitation of the development but will make no decision or no announcement, for some time.

Get-Rich-Quick Pair
Face Jail Sentences
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Jan. 4.—Ernest ("Curley") Hodgett, formerly manager of the Midway theatre, and Claude Walker, former ticket-taker at the same theatre, have been bound over to the grand jury on a charge of embezzlement. The charge was preferred by the Central Amusement Company, owners of the theatre. Both of the men were arrested at their homes in New south, where they had gone to spend Christmas.

It is said the men pleaded guilty. They were released under $500 bond each. According to Hodgett, the embezzlement will not exceed $210. Detectives say the defendants operated a ticket-selling system, whereby some tickets alone for them were sold together with the regular tickets. It is said that each day they checked up they deducted for themselves the amount gained from the sale of their special tickets.

Joseph Stern Will

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEWARK, N. J., Jan. 4.—Joseph Stern, a member of the executive committee of the M. P. T. O. A., has announced plans to build two additional theatres. He will erect a 2,500-seat house on Orange street, Roseville section, Newark, N. J. It will be built on the stadium plan; will have a lobby entrance of 25 by 125 feet and an auditorium 100 by 185 feet.

Another theatre which Mr. Stern will build will be in Irvington, N. J., at Irvington center, Clinton and Springfield avenues. This theatre will be built on the stadium plan; also on the stadium plan will have a lobby 37 by 90 feet and an auditorium 95 by 176 feet. Mr. Stern is contemplating the erection of two more houses in this vicinity.

Chicago Police Chief Bars Crime Pictures

Chief of Police Fitzmorris of Chicago has issued instructions to the city's censorship board to issue no permits for pictures showing criminals at work.

"In three weeks ago to put the lid on all crime pictures," the chief stated. "It will make no difference whether the criminal shown is a hero or a villain. Even the showing of a policeman disguised as a burglar is taboo. The producers have been notified of my order and no subterfuges or excuses will avail them of permits for such pictures."

Three News Weeklies Will Be Merged by Educational

Short Subject Company Has Obtained the Product of Gaumont, Another Concern and Kinograms to Be Issued Under The Latter Title

NEW YORK, Jan. 4.—Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., has acquired the product of three news weeklies for merger into one reel for semi-weekly publication. This agreement includes the acquisition of the forces making the Kinograms and Gaumont Weekly publications, whose product will be combined in the first news reel to be available in theatres on January 30. One month later another weekly News product will be incorporated in the new offering.

Will Retain All Cameramen of Three Concerns

Every cameraman employed by these three organizations and every important employee will be retained. The product of these three entire staffs will be available for the selections desired by Educational in its issue. According to the plans announced the offering to exhibitors will represent the very cream of news service and a selection of product that is now possible only to the theatre who contracts for several services and makes his own choice of scenes.

"Kinograms" will be retained as the name of the semi-weekly service, since it has established such a high standard of quality and does not conflict with the name of any other producer. At the same time exhibitors will be reminded through the subtitles that these news pictures represent the standard of Educational in recording the events of the day. The pictures will be subject to the same rigid rule of the production board which passes on other publications through Educational exchanges.

40 Staffs Maintained

It is announced that cameramen are to be retained in forty of the principal centers of the world, especially including the countries from which prominent news events come. In addition to these staffs will be kept at various pivotal points so that photographers may be dispatched to any scene of special news incident without disturbing the normal routine. Still further, contracts have been signed which will give the new Kinograms cameramen exclusive pictures of several important expeditions and scheduled news features.

Coincident with the announcement of Educational's acquisition of these pictures came the news that contracts had been signed with the entire U. B. O-Keith circuit for the showing of Kinograms in every theatre on the circuit. This will not prevent, however, the general publication of the pictures to all theatres and the wire announcements of the new service are reported to have brought Educational numerous requests for the services from scores of theatres in every principal city of the country.

Other Propositions Offered

"We have taken over these three news service products," said E. W. Hammons, president of Educational, "because we believe that it furnished us an opportunity to put the Educational standard into this field. We will have the product that has been heretofore released through three different companies and representing the work of unquestionably the greatest combination of cameramen that has ever been presented to the exhibitors. Various propositions to acquire news services have been presented to us before, but we have hesitated to simply enter this field with a competing series of pictures and to give the exhibitor just one more that he would have to buy to include in his selection of the very best news pictures of the day. With these three products there is little occasion for the exhibitor to go outside this single reel, twice weekly to be sure that he is covering every important event that his patrons want to see on the screen."

BABY SHOW YIELDS
BIG RETURNS

(From Staff Correspondent.)

COMMERCE, Ga., Jan. 4.—Any man is brave who stages a baby show—with prizes and everything—and who has the courage brazenly to say that one woman's infant is more attractive than another woman's. For it's a well-known fact—so well known as to be platitudeous—that every woman believes her own baby has at least ten points in advantage of every other baby on earth.

But Manager Arnette Aiken of the Colonial theatre here is entitled to credit not only for his bravery in staging such a show, but for his ingenuity in robbing it of any sting whatever to the disgruntled parents who did not win!

He announced that a beautiful silver loving cup, the actual cost of which was $55, handsomely engraved, would be given to the most beautiful baby in Commerce; and two smaller prizes would be given to the next two prettiest.

He arranged a coupon system, whereby each ticket bought entitled the holder to one vote; a book of tickets, for the entire two weeks of the contest, admitting two people to each day's show, carried a corresponding number of votes.

He had a photographer come down from Atlanta for the pictures. When a mother wished to enter her baby in the contest, she filled out a blank, giving the baby's name, age and weight, and mentioning an hour at which the baby might be photographed. The photographer got the pictures and slides were made of each baby so that at every performance the slides, by numbers, were run and people in the house might vote as they liked.

On the last day of the contest he announced that he had obtained "A Twilight Baby" as one of the feature pictures, and that the final votes would be counted and the prizes awarded. The house was packed, and the S. R. O. sign had to be dusted off and hung outside the box office. Three men from a neighboring town had been persuaded to come over and count the votes, and one of them—a minister—announced the prize winners.

There was considerable excitement when the lucky babies were brought to the stage to receive their prizes.

But the effects of the contest were felt for several days after, as the prize winning babies gave theatre parties to thank their friends for working for them, and then the babies who didn't win prizes, not to be outdone, gave parties as well for those who worked for them, even if they didn't win!

And perhaps the part that Mr. Aiken likes best about the whole thing is that, though the baby show was a very expensive one, for his theatre, it has been a good business producer, in terms of the warmth of friendlyliness with half of the children in town, and all the solid, substantial business people got so thoroughly interested in the baby show that they formed a habit of going to the theatre, which habit Mr. Aiken wisely makes permanent by running the best pictures available.

Exploitation like this is a good investment and pays big returns over and over again.

First National's De Luxe Films Rated as "Big Five" "Passion", Chaplin's "The Kid", Holubar's "Man-Woman-Marriage" and Other Specials Are Included in First Group

NEW YORK, Jan. 3.—Conjecture as to the identity of the "Big Five Productions" was dissolved at a dinner tendered tonight to the members of the trade press at the Hotel Astor.

Announcement was made that the advertising appearing recently in the trade journals was sponsored by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., as a teaser campaign on a group of pictures believed by J. D. Williams, general manager of the company, to so overshadow the general run of screen output as to merit special attention.

First Group of "Big Five" Series Announced

The first series of "Big Five Productions" will include such de luxe pictures as "Passion," Charlie Chaplin's "The Kid"; the Albert A. Kaufman-Alen Holubar nine-reel drama eternal "Man, Woman, Marriage," starring Dorothy Phillips; R. A. Walsh's masterpiece, "The Oath," and the Louis B. Mayer special "Sowing the Wind," featuring Anita Stewart.

The teaser campaign conducted by First National proved a great success, for despite conjectures no one guessed the identity of the "Big Five." First National was in receipt of hundreds of inquiries asking for information, but none was given. The trade paper offices also had many queries in their mail.

Meets With Success

This campaign, which created no little stir in film circles from Coast to Coast, was the pet idea of J. D. Williams. That it has met with immediate success is indicated in the surprise occasioned by the divulgence of the identity of the "Big Five."

An important meeting of First National officials is scheduled for January 10 and 11 at the Congress hotel in Chicago for the purpose of deciding on methods of distribution for the "Big Five" pictures. Representative exhibitors from all over the country have been invited to attend. At this time the productions in the first group will be shown.

It was announced at the meeting tonight that one of the results of the teaser campaign was the receipt of hundreds of applications for positions. None of these were opened by Frank Hughes of J. B. Muller Advertising Agency, through which First National conducted its campaign.

Announcement also was made at the dinner that Lesley Mason, former editor of the Exhibitors Trade Review, has joined First National as an observer and field scout for pictures of the magnitude of "Passion" and others included in the first group. He also will edit and title and write special publicity articles. However, his work will be primarily to look out for prodigious productions.

Will Complete Contract

First National's "Big Five" announcement is the first definite information concerning the disposition of Chaplin's "The Kid." Although the special has been generally accepted as a First National publication, it was uncertain up to this announcement just what disposition would be made of it.

With disposal of "The Kid" and Chaplin's return to the Coast the way is cleared for the completion of the remaining four of the series of eight two-reel comedies called for under Chaplin's First National contract. The comedian is now working on his fifth subject.

While the precise terms on which "The Kid" was obtained are not forthcoming, they are understood to constitute a record transaction. First National's statement relative to the publication of the picture is of special interest to exhibitors generally and particularly to those holding contracts for the original eight. "The Kid" being a special and entirely distinct from the original eight short subjects, First National states that it is not obligated to issue it under the same terms as apply to the short comedies.

Give First Consideration

It has been decided by the board of directors, however, that to afford every benefit possible to those exhibitors who hold contracts for the original eight to give such theatre men the first consideration in determining conditions of publication. For other exhibitors the Chaplin special will be available as one of the "Big Five" grouped together for exhibition under the special "season plan" now announced, or it may be booked separately on rental terms corresponding to the determined exhibition value the special will call for.

The revised and recut print of "The Kid" is expected in New York this week. The remaining four pictures of the original eight will be produced at the Chaplin Studios in Los Angeles. While Chaplin leased his plant to the Carter DeHavens some months ago, he reserved the right to resume work on his own productions at any time during the term of lease. The studio, however, is commodious enough to permit both companies to work simultaneously.

Attending the dinner tonight were Lesley Mason, C. L. Yearles, Earl Hudson and Horace Judge, all of First National; William A. Johnston, Motion Picture News; C. S. Sewell, Moving Picture World; Charles R. Boynton and M. W. Sohn, the latter the new editor of Exhibitors Trade Review; Joseph Dannenburg and Jack Allcote, Wid's; Frank J. Hughes, J. B. Muller Advertising Agency; O. E. Anderson, New York

Fox Scores Again With "Blind Wives"

Absorbing Story Presented With a Wealth of Detail That Makes for Good Entertainment.
Estelle Taylor and Marc McDermott Head the Well-Chosen Cast. Charles J. Brabin Directed It.

William Fox's latest special production is "Blind Wives." The picture is an adaptation by Charles J. Brabin, who also directed, of Edward Knoblock's stage play, "My Lady's Dress."

The story's theme is brought out in a foreword from Ruskin, who says that as long as there are not enough blankets in the world for the naked, there should be no face. The treatment accorded the theme is episodic, and in the same form as that followed by the same producer in "While New York Sleeps." It gives the picture a tone of novelty for, as it stands, it tells five stories in one. Estelle Taylor, Marc McDermott and Harry Sothern, who appeared in "While New York Sleeps," have the principal roles in "Blind Wives."

The main story, on which all the episodes rest, deals with a woman who, as the subtitle says, clothes herself not to live but lives for clothes. At Jacqueline's she runs up outrageously high bills and though her wardrobe is bulging with clothes she declares she hasn't a gown she can wear at the Horse Show! Her husband cuts off her account at Jacqueline's and rather than go without a new dress she allows another man to buy one for her. This leads to an effective dramatic scene when, in the midst of a quarrel with her husband, the gown arrives. The husband utters Ruskin's statement and shows his wife what her craving for clothes means in the lives of others. She lies out of the situation by saying she bought the gown before the cancellation was given, but the ordeal unnerves her and she takes a tablet to produce sleep. She wants to appear at her best at the Horse Show. But her husband's words have made an impression upon her and in her sleep she visualizes the tragedies brought about in the lives of the workers who slave to supply the selfish wants of those such as herself.

Then follows four distinct and separate episodes, each one telling, like a complete short story, a tragedy that is closely knit to the theme of the main movement. The motivating figures in these tragedies are a little hunch-backed flower girl who makes the flowers for the dresses; a trapper who supplies the sable furs; a weaver whose loom furnishes the fine silk, and the mannequin who parades the models.

Of the four the story of the weaver is the most effective, fact, it is a classic in itself. The character of the drunken weaver, who makes the bottle his bride after he has lost to another the girl he loves, is a fine, human study. Beneath a mask of jollity he is heartbroken. The natives of the French village consider him bad; in fact when the good priest tells him he will come to no good end the villagers howl gaily: "Not come, father; I have already gone." He is on probation to the silk buyer, yet when he finds that the girl he loves has worked in place of her cough-racked and dying husband and has turned out a crude piece of silk, which means greater deprivation, he slyly substitutes his own perfect product. The buyer pronounces the piece he himself offers as worth only quarter pay. The girl attempts to speak but the drunkard compels silence. And then, when the buyer speaks the dreaded words to him "No more orders from me," the drunkard accepts the verdict with outward sang froid. But out in the tree-lined back yard of the house he lets them hear him and his steps pointed in the direction of the unknown beyond, he buries his head in his arm and sobs. What a tragedy is born that my lady may have her dress! With Marc McDermott, as the drunkard, and Estelle Taylor, as the wife, contributing nothing short of perfection in delineations, the episode strikes a deep, vibrant cord.

The episode of the flower girl who sacrifices her luxurious hair so that her sister can be married; that of the trapper, Ivan Ivanovitch, a dreamer, sensitive and fine, who finds his wife, a woman of the earth, in the arms of his foreman when he returned unexpectedly from a hunting trip; and the episode of the mannequin, who is given into the hands of a brutish employer who refuses to allow her to leave her work to see her mother before death because in refusing to accept the attentions of an influential buyer she had lost him a customer. These episodes while individually holding a modicum of interest are overshadowed by the one referred to in the preceding paragraph.

The mannequin episode, has one outstanding dramatic moment, that wherein the mannequin's mother is shown dying and the physician and the switchboard operator make frantic efforts to reach the mannequin over the telephone. Judicious cutting of the film at this point has been most effective.

Then, having visualized these episodes in her sleep, the wife awakens to realize the truth of her husband's arguments and when the home wrecker phones to ask her about her dress she tells him that she has sent it back to Jacqueline's. The finale shows her in a cozy corner of the house with her husband in lieu of a visit to the Horse Show.

Taking the picture as a whole, some interesting material is presented and while it is not presented flawlessly, the defects are never glaring. The production is ambitious and in the sequence on which the opening and the closing of the story is told the settings are most pretentious. They are of the interior of Jacqueline's. In the main story a fashion show is staged.

By contrast, the locales of the other episodes are switched from Jacqueline's to the tenement section of New York, thence to the snow-bound wastes of Russia, then to what seems to be a village in France, and back to Jacqueline's again.

The novelty of presentation, the appeal in the theme, the luxuriousness of production, and the dramatic strength of the weaver episode, with fair dramatic worth in the other episodes makes "Blind Wives" a pleasing picture.

English Film Official Guest
At Laemmle Dinner in N. Y.

Banquet Attended by Prominent Men in Industry.
Business Associates of Universal Chief and Employees of Company

Arthur Clozenberg, managing director of Film Booking Offices, Ltd., of London, was officially welcomed into the ranks of the Universal organization recently at a dinner given in the Waldorf-Astoria, New York City, by Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Film Manufacturing Company. Mr. Clozenberg, whose corporation is the British distributor of the Universal product, came to this country to get acquainted with Universal executives, methods and management.

The dinner was attended by prominent film men, editors of the trade press, business associates of Mr. Laemmle, and by half a hundred Universal department heads, executives and employees. The affair was a "hands-across-the-sea" tribute to Mr. Clozenberg and his associates of the F. B. O. who entertained Mr. Laemmle royally during his visit to London last summer.

Expresses Admiration for Universal Organization

The feature of the evening was a short talk by the guest of honor, in which he expressed his admiration of the Universal organization built up by Mr. Laemmle, and the appreciation the F. B. O. officials feel for the Universal chief, and for George E. Kann, Universal's export manager, who visited England prior to Mr. Laemmle, to negotiate the preliminaries of the big F. B. O.-Universal tieup.

Mr. Clozenberg was greeted with great applause when he announced that long extended investigations on the part of the F. B. O. organization had proved that there is no more popular brand of film shown in England than Universal pictures.

Mr. Laemmle Talks

With a view of cementing closer relationship between the Universal organization in America, and the F. B. O. organization in Great Britain, Mr. Clozenberg announced that he would pay the entire expenses of any Universal representative Mr. Laemmle chooses to send to England on a pleasure trip. The tour will include all the points of interest in Great Britain, and possibly a visit to the Continent. It is understood that Universal will accept the offer and award the plum to one of its prize salesmen.

Mr. Laemmle recounted to his employees and friends present at the dinner the surprise he received at the hands of the British organization when he arrived in London. Where he found an elaborate banquet awaiting him, and his astonishment at the progressiveness of the F. B. O., which he likened to an American film organization in its alertness and systematic methods.

H. Cochran, vice president of Universal, voiced the sentiments of the Universal executives in appreciation of the genial personality of the guest from across the ocean.

Gulick Is Toastmaster

Paul Gulick, publicity director of Universal, whose reputation as a toastmaster gained added weight during the evening, called upon E. H. Goldstein, Universal's general manager, to tell the visiting Englishman something about the Universal organization.

Among other things, he said that in the distributing field alone, in the United States, Universal has forty-four separate branches, with forty-four branch managers, 300 salesmen and 1,200 other employees. These figures, he made plain, do not include the Universal home office force, nor the production staff and employees at Universal City. He told how Universal's Fort Lee factory runs at an output of more than two million feet of film each week. He added that Universal's weekly payroll amounts to more than $155,000.

Interesting Talks Given

Interesting talks also were given by Harry M. Berman, general manager of exchanges, Mr. Kann, and Harry Reichenbach. Among those present were Messrs William A. Johnston, James Beecroft, New York manager for the Exhibitors Herald; Joe Dunnenberg, P. D. Cochran, exploitation manager for Universal; Edward Moffat, advertising manager; Vernon R. Carrick, of Fairmount Feature Film Company of Philadelphia; Louis and Oscar Jacobs of Century Film Corporation; J. N. Landauer, and Alvin Mayer of Photo Repro Company.

Among the Universal executives and employees also present were John Ohr, controller; John Ward, Charles Rosenweig of the Big "U" exchange and his two associates, George D. Uffner and W. C. Herrmann; Sam Sedran, Universal purchasing agent; Joe Mayer, special exploitation representative; Ben Grimm, F. W. Tallbert, Henry Clay Bate, Paul E. Perez, Harry Zehner, George Brown, George Perkins, L. I. Kutinsky, Robert F. Roden, Sidney Singerman, J. A. Levinson, Bert North, Irving Stockman, Phil Hodes and Alexander Kroll.
SIR GILBERT PARKER
and HIS STUDIO ACTIVITY

Famous English Author Works Daily at Hollywood Studios of Famous Players-Lasky

ONE of the significant developments of the past year has been the attraction to screen writing of a number of world-famous authors. Conspicuous among these is Sir Gilbert Parker, who has been residing for several months at the Beverly Hills Hotel, Beverly Hills, Cal., while he has been working daily at the Hollywood studios of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Sir Gilbert's writings have had a very great vogue in the United States, Canada, England and Australia for the past twenty years. He has come to be known to millions of readers as one of the outstanding figures in the sphere of verse, romantic fiction. In addition to his reputation and prominence as an author Sir Gilbert has exerted wide influence in parliamentary and administrative circles in England for many years.

Among his best known literary works which have met with tremendous popularity are 'The Right of Way,' 'The Weavers,' and 'The Judgment House.' He has produced a large number of short stories for magazine publication which have had an enthusiastic following. * * *

Many of Sir Gilbert's stories have been produced upon the stage and as long as twenty years ago he worked in collaboration with the leading dramatists of England in connection with the production of these stories.

Of especial interest in connection with his motion picture work is the fact that the subject matter of the greater number of his stories affords excellent picture material; he has written stuff of a character fiction, general experience and demonstrated ability better qualified them for significant screen work than Sir Gilbert Parker.

The matter of picturizing the works of celebrated authors is in no way a recent development but has been frequently attempted for many years. In many of these instances the producer and director have either worked independently of the author or have had only half-hearted assistance. Usually the author has been unable to offer any constructive help, being unfamiliar with the technique and the peculiar requirements of picture making.

Again, there has been a sort of a coincidence on the part of certain authors who have apparently approached screen writing reluctantly evidencing a manner that suggested that they felt they were doing a motion picture a decided honor by recognizing it. These efforts have been uniformly unsuccessful and the results in practically every instance may be attributed to the fact that the authors were not sufficiently impressed with the mission they were undertaking to equip themselves with the technical knowledge necessary to insure the successful translation of their fiction to the screen.

Nothing of this attitude is evidenced by Sir Gilbert. In a recent conversation he said: 'I am out here studying.' Elaborating his attitude he made it very plain that he has approached the work of writing for motion pictures in a thoroughly serious manner with full realization that he is confronted with the task of mastering a new medium of expression.

Sir Gilbert has been spending several hours daily at the Lasky studio, studying production methods and meanwhile preparing an original story which will be produced under his personal supervision.

Constance Talmadge, Dorothy Gish marry
At Double Ceremony
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, Jan. 4.—Constance Talmadge and Dorothy Gish became brides in a double wedding before Justice of the Peace Albert S. Mead, at Greenwich, Conn., on Sunday, December 26. Miss Talmadge is now Mrs. John Pialoglou and Miss Gish is Mrs. James Renton. The two film stars acted as each other's attendants.

The double wedding came as a complete surprise to friends. It was to have been kept secret, but news of the ceremony leaked out.

Mr. Pialoglou is a wealthy tobacco importer with offices here. Mr. Renton is an actor now playing in 'Spanish Love' at the Maxine Elliott theatre. He supported Miss Gish in 'Flying Fat,' the screen star's latest production. During the war he served as a captain in the Royal Flying Corps. He is a Canadian.

Offers Screen to Aid
Boy Scout Movement
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, Jan. 4.—J. Walter Brandt, president of the New York Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, was one of the speakers at the last weekly meeting of the Association of Motion Picture Advertisers, offered Daniel Carter Beard, chief master of the National Scout Commission, another speaker, the use of the screens in New York theatres for advancing the Boy Scout movement.

Severally amendments to the A. M. P. A. constitution, dealing mostly with routine matters and the board of directors meetings, were adopted.
CONSISTENT progress is made by easy stages. The spectacular success is usually a "discovery." Suddenly revealed at the height of his power he assumes the aspects of the prodigy or genius, but his unrecorded past invariably includes struggles, defeats, readjustments of view and revisions of operating method which are altogether normal.

No man takes up the management of a theatre perfectly qualified to direct it unswervingly to instantaneous, sensational success.

Thought, study, correction of natural though false assumptions, elimination of wasteful policies and cultivation of productive methods, all are necessary.

Issues that confront all business men, and in addition to these the peculiar problems that the exhibitor alone faces, must be considered intelligently and disposed of.

Right basic principles are essential to a business policy which will produce lasting success and insure consistent progress.

Characteristic utterances indicative of more or less prevalent misapprehensions are set forth herewith, supplemental to those presented in a previous issue.

"I Get by Alone"
"I can't get this fellow's drift. Look at this ad he spends real good for. Tells the people he's a member of the state exhibitors' organization and the national body as well. Wonder what he expects to gain by it. It don't mean anything to the man that buys the tickets at the box office. Here he says the organization is dedicated to keeping the screen clean and the theatre up to standard. I don't need anybody to do that for me. I get by alone. My people know I'm responsible. Looks foolish to me."

"Where Do They Get That Stuff"
"Exhibitor-exchange co-operation my eye! What exchange ever gave anybody anything that he didn't have to pay for two or three times over? I don't want any roll top desk exploitation expert telling me how to run my show. I made money before anybody ever heard of one and I'll make money when they're all back in their old jobs trimming shoe store windows. Co-operation? Where do they get that stuff? It's hard enough to get along with exchanges when you fight 'em. I wouldn't take a chance on this co-operation idea. It looks phoney."

"The Town's Too Small"
"I know I'd kind o' like to have a theatre in a town where I could do some of the stunts I read about. I've got a lot of ideas that nobody has tried out yet, but they don't do me any good out here in the sticks. The business don't warrant trying them out. I can figure just about how many will be here to see every star I play, so I just figure bookings and advertising according to that. I've got 'Here Tonight' banners with every one of their names on them and I buy close enough to leave me my percentage. Yes, I'd like to try some of them things, but the town's too small."

"Jennie Cues the Pictures"
"An orchestra's alright if you're used to one and have got your audience educated up to expecting it. An organ's better, in my estimation, but not worth what they want for them. Now I get along nicely with a piano. Jennie cues the pictures, and that's what it takes. She's been with me for five years now and everybody can tell what's on the screen whether they're looking at it or not just by what she's playing. She's got the right idea, and people know her style. Yes, of course, I might get a little more business with an orchestra or organ, but it would take a long time to pay the first cost. As long as I've got somebody like Jennie to cue the pictures I'm going to stick to my way."

"Civic Pride's All Bunk"
"Here's a funny one. They want me to join the Rotary Club, the Chamber of Commerce and become a candidate for election to the City Council. Can you imagine that? Where would I get time to attend any of the meetings? And then, when I tell 'em that, they come back at me with a speech about civic pride and all that rot. They even say it'll be good for my business, that the town supports me and I ought to do my share in return. Yes, it does! They come to my show when they have to. Can't go anywhere else. They would if they could. 'Cause they don't like me. No, this civic pride's all bunk. I'll play a lone hand."

"Charity Don't Buy Film"
"They tell me a lot of exhibitors gave potato matinees and free shows just before Christmas to get things for the poor to eat. That's good—for the poor—but I don't see where the exhibitors got away with anything. I'll bet most of the kids that came and saw their shows for an apple or an orange would have come and paid the regular admission if they'd had to. I'm not knocking the idea. It's all right for those that can afford it. I can't. Charity don't buy film. I gave a check to an organized society, but I don't believe in mixing sentiment and business. They paid to see my show."

The character portrayed by Johnny Hines in the series of Torchy comedies distributed by Educational is readily adaptable to exploitation purposes. In many theatres the ushers are customarily uniformed in such manner as to effect with little difficulty a comment creating identification with the screen character, an ushers' prologue being one of the outstanding possibilities.

May Busch, as Princess Olga in "Foolish Wives," Erich Von Stroheim's Universal-Jewel production, a still which gives an idea of the material the picture provides for co-operative advertising or window displays featuring ladies' wear, an aegle which also suggests the style show type of presentation.

Mr. Wu," presented by the Stoll Film Corporation of America, contains the above scene, which gives pictorially all the data required by the exhibitor in the composition of his lobby display.

A scene from "The Deceiver," a forthcoming Arrow production, which may be approximated in stage setting for presentation purposes. A western prologue may be modeled after the synopsis and the three characters seen in the still used in the cast.
Albright's Original Showmanship Surpasses Previous "Kismet" Exhibitor Exploitation

All excited!
Here it is!
It's B-I-G!
1,440 sq. ft. compo board,
1,000 lin. ft. 1x2 lumber,
500 lin. ft. 1x3 lumber.
30 pieces 2x4x12 lumber,
6 lbs. brilliant gold bronze —were some of the material used in the construction of the biggest lobby display, I believe, to date—anywhere!

From sidewalk to topmost part,
22 ft.; width, 24 ft.; depth, 12 ft.
Quite some display!
Done in brilliant gold with the exception of the stone which was in natural color.
The title lettering, three feet in height, in white with a wide black outline—catch lines in pale green.
Lighted by night with big flood lights.
That's the "WORLD'S GREATEST FRONT"—but, not the extent of the exploitation!
"EXPLOITING EXPLOITATION"—for a moment, a week before the building of the front, Butte was interested in its construction. (See Building Plans that ran in papers.)

By shouting about the gigantic false front I, in a subtle maner, pressed the magnitude of the film production.
After the erection of the display it was photographed and again ran, as a follow up.

The frame was built a day before the walls were added, thus giving me a chance to let it soak in, and to tack up signs explaining to the inquisitive that this was the framework for the BIGGEST THEA-TRICAL DISPLAY EVER ERECTED.

By the time of the real opening of "Kismet" folks were as much curiozed over the front as they were the picture. But, way back in their minds was old Sy Colledgey hammer-ning away, ever telling them that this elaborate display was merely the re-fection of the genuine "Kismet."
Mention needn't be made of the screen advertising indulged in—nor the regular newspaper ads. You already know I'm strong for both.

All in all, the lobby display was gorgeous! Imagine the gratifying feeling that was mine while standing on the opposite side of the street. Everyone passing the theatre was compelled to enter my Mosque. No matter if they passed up the show or whether they didn't the effect was there, it looked as though they were going into the theatre. Their exit from the other end gave the impression of their leaving.

And, could I overlook the chance to advertise to those passing to and fro through my gilded palace?
Nay—so well decorated was the interior with convincing propaganda that it must have seemed as though
"fate," that which the poets call
"Kismet," demanded their viewing the performance.

ELABORATE LOBBY DISPLAY FOR LOCAL SHOWING OF "KISMET"

American Theater to Erect Huge False Front For Ots Skinner Film; Butte Learns How It's Done.
Stuffed Animal Display Big Factor in Comment Campaign

Comment, known to the trade as "word of mouth advertising," is at once the cheapest and most productive exploitation.

Though cheap, it is not easily obtainable at will.

Though productive, it cannot be accurately measured.

Experience has proved its value, however, to the satisfaction of all, and the exhibitor of today asks not what it will do, but how it can be created.

Here's one good way.

S. L. Knapp, of the firm of Knapp & Devereaux, operating the Loyalty theatre, International Falls, Minn., created widespread comment regarding "Nomads of the North," the First National Attraction, by constructing for the period of the engagement a lobby display which "caused talk." The same is reproduced herewith.

The forest was invaded for the hewn logs used as the groundwork and for the log cabin. Cotton was used with these to give the impression of snow, and pine trees completed the natural display.

To this was added an assortment of guns, hunting knives and powder horns and bear traps to carry the primitive suggestion.

Stuffed animals were then obtained from a local taxidermist and set into the display as naturally as possible to give the finishing touch.

"The exploitation packed in the crowds at the first show," said Mr. Knapp, "and then the picture did the rest. Word-of-mouth advertising kept them coming. We did the biggest business in history."

The work involved was obviously worth while. It is more than justified by the business reported. And it is work of a nature that every exhibitor will do well to emulate.

The materials used are within the reach of all.

Aschers' Merrill Cutout Display Is Effective Appeal

Ruts are dangerous. Truck drivers know it. Not all exhibitors do.

The cutout art has fallen into a rut and responsible exhibitors are for the most part ignoring the fact. Something ought to be done about it.

A few are doing it.

The lobby display made up of cutouts and used by Aschers' Merrill theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., is not of the "rut" variety. The reproduction shows the general effect gained. And it is not a hazardous statement to say that the box office record of the Goldwyn attraction, "The Revenge of Tarzan," showed the work involved worthy of the effort put forth.

Here the conventional treatment was discarded. The lobby frames may have been fitted out with single cutouts in the approved Ascher style, but the work was carried beyond that point. The bigger paper was used and a lobby mask was constructed that cannot have failed in its purpose.

There ought to be more work of this nature.

The conventional lobby frames should by no means be discontinued, nor the one and three sheet boards, but there is no excuse for limiting the work to these confines.

If a little paper is good advertising it follows that a lot of it is better.

Stock paper was used to advantage by Aschers' Merrill theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., on behalf of Goldwyn's "The Revenge of Tarzan," a picture well suited to lobby exploitation demands.
THE recently opened Branford theatre, Newark, N. J., contributed importantly to the archives of showmanship when "Passion," the First National attraction, was staged with a historical prologue which should serve with entire satisfaction exhibitors who use the production. A sextette made up to represent characters from the story gave dances and vocal numbers of the period represented. It is to every exhibitor's interest to familiarize himself with the details of the event set forth in the accompanying story, as the basic idea may be applied to many attractions.

Branford's Personification Presentation
Sympathetic Introduction for "Passion"

The Branford theatre, Newark, N. J., which opened recently with trade notables present, combined with its entry into American theatredom advance to the front rank of showmanship.

"Passion," the First National attraction, was the opening attraction, and the personification presentation staged by R. J. O'Crawley, manager of the theatre, offers exhibitors who use the picture many practical suggestions.

Advertising exhibitors will welcome the newcomer in the progressive theatre field. In the light of the initial program many distinctly worth while contributions to the archives of exploitation and presentation may be expected from this quarter.

The Branford prologue was staged without special scenery other than a great drop, a sheer surface, such a drop as every theatre should possess in view of its suitability for many forms of presentation.

Two juveniles, dressed in keeping with the period in which the play is laid, introduced the feature by parting the drop. Through the opening then came the vocalists and dancers impersonating characters in the play.

Poli Negri, the star of the picture, was impersonated by Ruth Kellogg Watts, soprano, Louis IV by Wilfred Glenn, baritone, Armond by Leon Mario, tenor, and a sextette of dancers completed the cast.

The musical numbers given were the Jewel Song from "Faust," "The Vision Fugitive" from "Herodiaté" and an aria from Massenet's "Manon."

Following the singing the sextette moved into the stately measures of the minuet and the picture followed immediately.

By this prologue the sharp transition from present day modernity to the period in which the action is laid was effected with grace and charm, the audience being subtly but thoroughly prepared for the opening scenes. In this manner much of the burden which commonly falls upon the early scenes of the period play was removed, highly entertaining diversion being supplied simultaneously.

In order that the opening night be so well attended as to insure the satisfactory scoring of the presentation field-page advertisements were used prior to the initial screening. In these the portrait of Poli Negri in character was given central position. All the work was done by a specially employed artist, no hand set copy being used.

A house organ of unusually artistic design was also used, and in this the only space given over to advertising other than that of the theatre was a page devoted to First National stars and attractions, this the back cover.

Mr. O'Crawley experienced highly satisfactory results with his initial presentation at the Branford. It is highly probable that his method will be adopted, at least in part, by other exhibitors throughout the country. The theatre opening is a doubly notable event because of this service rendered.

Still from "The Devil's Pass Key," the Universal production, were used in a layout for a four-color page in the "Nashville Tennessean," Nashville, Tenn., prior to the showing at the Elite theatre, which established a record for that playhouse.

Two thousand children, charges of the United Hebrew Charities, were guests of Hugo Riesenfeld at the Rivoli, New York, during Christmas week.

P. F. Schwie, manager of the Duluth theatre, Duluth, Minn., with the "Duluth Herald," gave a free matinee and gifts of candy, nuts and toys to the children of that city on Friday, December 24.
The best stage setting yet contrived for "Nomads of the North," the First National picturization of James Oliver Curwood's story.

"Nomads of the North," the film version of James Oliver Curwood's novel, is one of the comparatively few attractions which may be presented almost as forcibly by means of stage setting and lighting as by use of players.

The Empress theatre, Laramie, Wyo., recently demonstrated this generally important fact, the above illustration showing as well as may be shown without color the attractive and adaptable setting used.

Exhibitors who contemplate an exhibition of the picture should study it closely.

The variations possible with the Aurora Borealis used as the basis of the setting are practically unlimited. In no natural phenomenon are colors more beautifully combined. Human artifice can at best but approximate the original.

With such a setting as used at the Empress, therefore, the electrician is at liberty to employ color without restriction. If he is normal he should seize anxiously upon the opportunity to demonstrate his ability.

The result should be a still opening with impressively moderated musical accompaniment, the scene representing an arctic sunrise. The score should be carefully studied to mirror every change and gradation of color, culminating in a rousing introduction as the first scene of the picture is revealed.

The lighting should then be dimmed but the activity maintained through the body of the picture and up to the point where the forest fire which provides the punch of the play occurs.

At this juncture a rich commingling of reds and yellows may be applied effectively, with orchestral accompaniment and mechanical effects in sympathy.

The whole, when carefully rehearsed and brought into harmonious continuity, should provide for the picture as satisfactory a prologue as any that might be produced.

The yacht deck setting provided for "Good References" at the Kinema theatre, Los Angeles.
ONE of the best window displays in recent exploitation was arranged for the showing of "Humoresque," the Paramount production, at the Fuller theatre, Madison, Wis., by the Hook Bros., managers, co-operating with Oscar A. Doob, exploitation representative of the Paramount exchange at Chicago. Few productions in theatre history have attained the standing as exploitation successes that has been won by "Humoresque."

Paramount Exploitation Successes Given Strong Support by “Small Town” Showmen

Despite plentiful evidence to the effect that American theatremen have progressed as a body rather than by class or section, much is heard of the "small town exhibitor," much that is no more complimentary than justified. Consequently interesting are stories showing that showmen whose theatres are located in cities the size of which is popularly regarded as thus classifying them are in reality among the most enterprising and original advertisers in the country.

Theatre history of "What's Your Hurry?" and "Humoresque," two of the outstanding Paramount exploitation successes of 1920-21 reveals at least two such stories.

When "Humoresque" was shown at the Fuller theatre, Madison, Wis., several months after publication and after hundreds of reports had shown it an exploitation success, the Hook Brothers, managers, co-operating with Oscar A. Doob, Paramount exploitation representative for the territory, utilized window displays and other co-operative stunts on a plane with those used in behalf of the attraction in other sections of the country and in cities many times as large as Madison.

Thus one "small town exhibitor," Ezra Rhodes, manager of motion picture theatres in Elkhart and South Bend, Ind., added further to the fund of information proving that not all the "big stuff" is staged in the metropolises of the country when he evolved a distinct innovation in advertising the much-exploited "What's Your Hurry?" The illustration shows the truck with the revolving banner which traveled over 300 miles during the campaign, using 80 gallons of gasoline.

Mr. Rhodes estimates the additional business produced by this device at $500.

The point is obvious.

Ezra Rhodes, managing theatres in South Bend and Elkhart, Ind., added a novel contribution to "What's Your Hurry?" exploitation by use of a revolving banner.
W. R. Rowell Uses Novel Float In Gem Advertising

Novelty in any department of advertising is advisable. Where standard methods may be relied upon to produce certain results, methods novel in conception or execution may be depended upon to perform the required service as well or better.

Mr. Rowell states that the device "put The Branding Iron over." The statement is ample. Any device which puts any picture "over" is decidedly worth the time and money it takes to produce it and put it into operation.

The same time and money might have been devoted by Mr. Rowell to newspaper or billboard advertising, or to the type of exploitation which has been accorded this production in other cities. But it is doubtful if by any standard methods he could have obtained quite the same results that were netted. Not all of these results were mentioned in the communication which accompanied the photograph.

No mention was made, for instance, of the comments which undoubtedly were made relative to the originality of the man who sent the vehicle out upon the street. No estimate was hazarded as to the number of times the theatre name was mentioned by persons who saw the float.

These items are none the less important. Were it a demonstrated fact that the box office performance recorded would have been precisely the same had standard methods been used, it would still be true that the novel stunt employed was preferable because of the added comment which applied solely to the Gem theatre.

Joseph R. Denison, manager of the Family Theatre, Monroe, Mich., obtained a mailing list of four thousand names by a device which any exhibitor can employ as successfully. He began by conducting a popularity ballot between Norma and Constance Talmadge, booking a First National production of each for the week marking the close of the voting. Ballots were passed out at the door, and the announcement that the person whose vote for the winning contestant was first drawn from the box by a blindfolded person on the night of the counting would receive an autographed photograph of the star at his home address assured correct names and addresses.

An unusual street device used by W. R. Rowell, manager of the Gem theatre, El Dorado, Kans., in the interest of "The Branding Iron."

Blind Campaign for Serial Creates Wide Interest in Dunlap

The chief merit of variety in exploitation is the fact that it can be introduced by innumerable methods. Any attempt to accomplish the unique is worth while. When, as in the serial engagement recently advertised by George E. Taylor, manager of the Idle Hour theatre, Dunlap, la., novelty is introduced in every conceivable phase of the event, an exhibitor triumph is scored. Mr. Taylor's letter regarding the event follows:

"I know you are interested in advertising stunts so I will contribute mine. I ran 'The Silent Avenger,' a Vitagraph serial, in one week. First, I placed cards reading, 'Beware! The Silent Avenger Is Coming to Town,' on the pool halls in the night.

"They thought that the State Agents were warning them and believe me they kept clean shop for a few days.

"Then I had the janitors of the schools tack up one on each room entry and the kids' ideas were legion. Some thought that the board had spies watching their conduct. Others thought of airship bombarding squadrons. I, W. W.'s, German anarchists and everything imaginable.

"Then each night the city night watch placed two or three on store fronts. A Latter Day Saints' revival was on in the park and some thought they were warning the people to come to church.

"The City Clerk thought of I. W. W.'s and went to the mayor for extra police protection. The town was in an uproar the week before the date of playing. I mailed notices to everyone.

"I had in the local papers for two weeks before the opening just the words, 'The Silent Avenger.'"

"I opened with the Babe Ruth Slow Motion picture to get the ball fans, and believe me I packed them. I crammed them for a solid week and with my last episode of this serial, I started another, 'The Veiled Mystery,' and if I didn't get off on both feet no one ever did in starting a new serial, and of course my advertising bill on the second serial was nothing, for I did not let anyone know I was going to run it. The serial, while old, is a dandy, and my audience was thoroughly pleased. They even boast that they were the first to see a complete serial in a week."

"Kismet" Exploitation Becomes Standard
As Feature Adds to Box Office History

"Kismet," the Robertson-Cole special production featuring Otis Skinner, star of the famous stage play from which the picture was made, is reported from various sections of the country as establishing box office records with unusual regularity.

Coincident with the box office reports come accounts of "Kismet" exploitation which show general adherence to the standard set in the early history of the attraction.

A notable exception is duly recorded on a preceding page, but the consideration of the moment is none the less important.

REPORT from the Seattle, Wash., branch of Robertson-Cole is to the effect that Clemmer & James, after selecting "Kismet" as the opening attraction of their new Winter Garden theatre, contemplate holding it over for a third week. "Wonderful business" is the characterization given the box office performance for the first part of the engagement.

At San Francisco, Cal., where the picture is about to be given its premiere, special showings have been accorded the press and voluminous pre-publication publicity has been obtained.

characteristic touches, as this enterprising management may always be depended upon to do, but in the main the same principles were observed.

A comprehensive story of the theatre experience of "Kismet" should be compiled and retained for reference. The early history of the picture stands out from the background of motion picture records as sensational in its exploitation.

Such a history would be, in effect, a valuable treatise upon the general subject of motion picture theatre advertising.

The Robertson-Cole press department, from which come some of the most remarkable campaign books and showmanship suggestions given exhibitors, should be encouraged to compile such a history. It would be a valuable document and one to be treasured by progressive exhibitors.

In Los Angeles, where the picture will be shown at Tally's Broadway theatre shortly, the prolific writers who conduct the amusement sections of the daily newspapers have been generous in praise of the coming event.

E. O. Weinberg, manager of the Strand theatre, Buffalo, N. Y., who has contracted for the picture, published advance notice, duly signed, in which he calls the engagement "The Event of the Year" and describes the production enthusiastically.

During the engagement at the Crotona theatre, New York, W. D. Waldron, manager, utilized practically the same methods as were used by the Audubon theatre for an earlier showing and recorded in these pages.

Denver Exploitation Man Seizes Odd Opportunities

Fred V. Green, Jr., exploitation representative of the Denver, Colo., exchange of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has demonstrated effectively his showmanship insight and his ability to make the most of existing opportunities. In fact recent events indicate a knack for making capital of seemingly unpromising material little short of phenomenal.

Business had been at low ebb in Sterling, Colo., when Mr. Green arrived in that city to assist in the management of the America theatre in advertising “An Old Fashioned Boy,” the Paramount feature starring Charles Ray. Many mines were closed, more were working short hours, and the biggest bank in town had recently failed.

The Chief of Police was accordingly anxious to assist in anything that promised prosperity of any kind and therefore gave his consent when it was proposed that intersection semaphores directing traffic be altered to read, “To the America theatre to see ‘An Old Fashioned Boy’.”

The stunt seemed promising, so the idea was applied with slight alterations to prominent street locations, where the sign read, “Parking allowed here if you are going to the America to see ‘An Old Fashioned Boy’.”

At Trinidad, Colo., working in behalf of the Strand theatre engagement of “The Jailbird,” Paramount’s recent production starring Douglas Maclean, Mr. Green duplicated his Sterling triumph. Here a cigar store Indian was made to direct passersby to the Strand, semaphores were again given attention, and a new stunt was evolved.

The latter consisted of street work in which boys led a blind man and a burro about the street bearing signs which bemoaned the fact that the former could not see the picture and that the latter was not going to see it for the obvious reason.

The chief point of interest, aside from the unusual ability of Mr. Green to see and grasp opportunities, lies in the fact that the cost of the Sterling and Trinidad campaigns totaled, together, just $10.50.

It pays to watch the corners.

“If You Don’t Like ‘Civilian Clothes Join the Navy’ was the co-operative line effectively employed by Harry Swift, Paramount exploitation representative at the Albany, N. Y., exchange, on behalf of the picture’s run at Proctor’s Grand.

The Bobbs-Merrill Company, publishers of “The Tiger’s Coat,” pictured by the Dial Film Company and distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, has announced a special edition to number 500,000 copies. Numerous bookstore tie-ups should result.

Lion Collar Lion And Souvenir Dolls Start Off Serial

A stuffed lion with animated head and tail gave novelty and life to the lobby display used by N. V. Darley, manager of the Alpha theatre, Atlanta, Ga., at the opening of “The Son of Tarzan,” the National Film Corporation serial.

A “Geeka” doll, fashioned after that which is treasured by the little girl in the picture, free to each child accompanied by a parent, added another significant touch to the opening.

The promise of the campaign as outlined was such as to convince the manager that he should play this attraction for two days instead of the customary one, and experience justified his decision.

The lobby display is shown in the accompanying photograph. Cutouts were extensively and effectively employed, but the novelty that attaches to the history of the stuffed lion is worthy of individual mention.

The original habitat of the animal was a clothing store window, where, with tossing head and lashing tail, it advertised Lion Brand Collars. His first professional appearance was in company with a tiny animated mouse advertising a showing of “The Lion and the Mouse.” “Tarzan of the Apes” was next given the benefit of its appeal, and later on “Polly of the Circus” was exploited in like manner.

The “Geeka” doll angle of the Alpha introduction is probably the most valuable. It brought parents as well as children into the theatre, and it produced an excellent publicity story.

Both are excellent for serials.
Scope of Card and Snipe Exploitation
Illustrated in Saginaw, Mich., Drive

Cards variously used have long been productive of excellent box office results.
Cards are not expensive. And their present cost could be materially lessened by increasing use of them to the proportions warranted by their effectiveness as business builders.

A single exploitation campaign in which cards and snipes played prominent part may serve to emphasize the inexplicably beclouded point.

EXPLOITATION that rambled over every yard of the beaten path and still was distinctly not of the "beaten path" variety, marked the appearance of "What's Your Hurry?" when the picture played in Saginaw, Mich.

The exploitation, which was staged by Leslie F. Whelan, field representative at the Detroit Exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, offers an indication of what "What's Your Hurry?" can be expected to furnish the exhibitor in exploitation possibilities where the big truck parades are not available.

Whelan tied up the whole city with the picture. Then he tied up the picture with every lamp post, store and automobile in Saginaw.

Because there were no facilities in the community for a big truck demonstration, or safety first campaign, Whelan decided to concentrate on automobiles, stores and telephone posts, etc.

The first intimation Saginaw had of the coming attraction consisted of a teaser campaign. Pastboard cards were posted in all stores: "What's Your Hurry? Look at this Window.

It offered an example of genuine exploitation where the motion picture expert didn't try to take all the benefit. The stores got attention from the cards and co-operated all the more readily as a result.

Then the exploitation man got after the lampposts and telegraph poles. He had cards printed: "Drive Careful What's Your Hurry?" and "Turn to the Right. Drive Slowly. What's Your Hurry?" in which holes had been punched to facilitate tying them onto the posts. These were "planted" throughout the city.

As the final step in the teaser campaign, Whelan snipped tags: "What's Your Hurry?" on every stationary automobile in the city. With the aid of two assistants he snipped these exclusive locations as the owners were indoors, having parked their machines at the curb. More than 200 of these placards were tied onto standing machines.

Forget the name of Saginaw. Apply the exploitation to any town where conditions fail to warrant a truck parade or some other sensational stunt. See how the fans will pile in if their interest is aroused by just such a simple campaign as Whelan has outlined.

A four-page newspaper, called the "Broadway-Strand News," made up and printed in exact compliance with publication tradition, has made its appearance in Detroit, Mich. The stories and illustrations throughout are publicity for Paramount pictures, so cleverly contrived as to pleasantly deceive and subsequently entertain the reader.

One thousand newsboys paraded the streets of Des Moines, la., advertising the Des Moines theatre engagement of "Dinty," Marshall Neilan's First National attraction. A specially prepared newspaper, the entire front page of which was devoted to stories concerning the picture, with a streamer reading, "Newsboy in Rescue," was also used by A. G. Stolte, manager.
Oliver Morosco Endorses
"So Long Letty" Prologue

"So Long Letty" was a stage success.
Al Christie produced the motion picture version for Robertson-Cole distribution.
What could be a more logical form of presentation, then, than a tabloid stage reproduction of the original farce?
The Kinema theatre, Los Angeles, utilized that form. The accompanying illustration shows the setting used, a duplication of the twin bungalows which were occupied by the two young married couples whose matrimonial misadventures make up the action of the play.
Oliver Morosco, producer and co-author of the stage original, supervised the prologue, which should be ample guarantee of its veracity in relation to the play.
The four principles enacted in pantomime the action which transpires outside the bungalows when the husband who demands culinary perfection and the husband who wants style exchange homes and wives.

The skeleton scenario of "So Long Letty," applied to prologue purposes.
The singing of the song hit of the stage original, "So Long Letty," added auditory appeal to optical.
Entering the houses, as the prop moon sank below the scenic horizon, translucent shades were lowered and the pantomime continued in silhouette.

Though not every exhibitor can avail himself of the personal supervision accorded the Kinema management by Mr. Morosco, the Los Angeles presentation provides material for the staging and direction of similar prologues wherever required. The musical score of the play may be utilized, of course, wherever the picture is used, and it should be incorporated into the accompaniment in all cases.

A new step, this personal supervision of presentation features by stage producers of original plays; and one which may be merely a forerunner of great things to come.

The "Wichita Daily Eagle," Wichita, Kans., recently carried a two-column head (of which but two are included in an edition) reading, "Beheld at a 'Movie' With another Man," the ensuing story being a genuine account of a local event which terminated in a fight between the husband and his wife's escort and led to the bar of justice. "Behold My Wife," at the Palace when the discovery was made, provided the basis for the headline and was featured throughout the story. Stanley Chambers, manager, comments, "Fortune sure was with us on the exploitation of this picture."

N. X. Frudenfeld, publicity director of the Sun theatre, Omaha, Neb., accomplished in recent advertising for "While New York Sleeps," the Fox production, and "The Soul of Youth," a Reallart picture, a regulation of juvenile patronage which is of interest to exhibitors generally. The accompanying illustration shows one of the advertisements used for the former production, the white space carrying clearly worded copy.

The advertising was based upon the belief that the picture was excellent adult entertainment but that the following attraction was better suited to the demands of the juvenile mind. Accordingly, direct statements to this effect were made in the advertisements used, the advice being given parents to bring their children to see "The Soul of Youth" upon the day following.
The result of the plan was in every sense satisfactory. The Fox picture established a new Sunday record for the house on the day of its opening. And when "The Soul of Youth" was offered the children were found standing line awaiting entrance at eleven o'clock in the morning, which volume of patronage was experienced throughout that and the succeeding two days.

An eminently satisfactory regulation of patronage, a regulation which doubtless resulted in bigger gross business than would have been experienced otherwise.
"Shorter Pictures Coming Into Their Own In Newspaper Displays," Says Pritchard

By R. E. PRITCHARD
Director of Publicity, Educational Films Corporation

UNQUESTIONABLY one of the most notable developments of the past year has been the increased attention given the one and two-reel pictures by exhibitors. It is a healthy sign, too, because it indicates surely that the theatre manager has realized the importance not only of offering a program that is worth while, down to the shortest subject, but that he has also determined to make each unit of his program prove its worth.

That means an abandonment of the "filler" idea. It marks the end of padding an entertainment for mere length. It means, too, that the exhibitor is no longer going to be content with accepting "a scenic" or "also a comedy" for his program.

When Educational Films Corporation established its own exchanges and began the release of two-reel comedies, it did so with the belief that the comedy is an essential portion of the program. It had been seen scores and scores of cases in which the comedy had "saved the show." But in most of these cases the comedy had not been made to bring a single additional person to the theatre because of the failure of the theatre to advertise—to make the film do its part of its work.

WHEN we started the release of these pictures we began to issue press books in which we sought to honestly advise the exhibitor as to the exact appeal of each comedy. We did not follow the stereotyped advice of "play this above your feature" but we did insist upon these comedies being given a chance to show what they could do. We frankly told exhibitors that if these pictures did not bring additional business to their theatres they should not book them—they should be content with a cheaper grade of pictures—with "also a remedy."

There has been a wonderful response to this advice. Every time the Rialto or Rivoli in New York plays a Christie or a Chester comedy, it is sure to be in the electric lights. The Euclid theatre in Cleveland broke its rule never to mention a comedy in its advertising when it started to show the Mermaids and other Educational releases, and now mention of the picture and the brand is sure to be found prominently in its displays. The Jensen and von Herberg theatres, which have pursued the consistent policy of putting all the emphasis on the feature production likewise.

These are not exceptions. The same policy is being followed throughout the country. In a mass of advertising clip-papers on my desk I find that every theatre except one is mentioning the comedy by title and giving the brand name. That single exception says merely "Also a Christie Comedy." Though that is unsatisfactory, it is an advance from the "also a comedy" line, almost universal but a few years ago.

ANOTHER city in which the old time rule has been smashed is Denver. The ads of the more important theatres there are now giving full share of the space to these pictures, often balancing the displays with that on the feature.

In Cincinnati such houses as the Lisbon chain are taking the trouble to draw into their ads sketches from these pictures. In New Orleans the Saenger circuit makes it a point to draw attention to them. Every important Chicago theatre advertises them by name and by title, often with a few words of descriptive matter. Even in Boston, where the double feature evil has so long prevailed, several of the houses have dumfounded tradition by giving them attention.

Illustrated on this page are instances of the attention given these two reeilers. The Strand theatre, Louisville, Ky., one of the best advertisers in the whole country, now regularly devotes a share of space to the comedies. When this theatre played "Peaceful Valley" as the feature, it gave a half hour of its third of the space to "The One Best Pet," a Chester comedy. Slightly less space was given to "Mr. Fatima," along with the new Mildred Harris picture, here the contrast being made of the appeal of the story of seminary life and the college boy story, though the ad could have been improved considerably by having coupled the two ideas the stronger.

THE same policy is being followed down to the smaller cities. Exhibitors Herald has published numerous ads showing that exhibitors are willing to give the comedy as much or more space than the feature. They are provided with the material with which to do this advertising. We make it a point to study each comedy as carefully as we would a feature and to give the same care to the preparation of the press books and advertising material. We have tried to depart from the cut-and-dried reading notice that is appended to the shortest picture and have insisted on giving as much fill space and to provide something that is really interesting to the newspapers. We already have a clipping book more than a foot thick containing such notices, as printed by newspapers.

This is true, although too many of the managers have not realized the importance of making the most out of every element of their program. Every comedy has a degree of advertising value and exploitation possibilities. Very often it is greater than that of the feature. We do not undertake to simply urge the managers to play the comedy the stronger, but we do attempt to point out the strong points of each picture and its particular appeal.

For instance, a comedy like "The Big Show" was made the subject of stage displays in a number of theatres. All of the Torchy Comedies offer individual appeals that are being used in many cases. A picture like "Movie Mad," a coming release, will give the exhibitor an angle of advertising that he has never had before, one we believe that will draw a large number of additional people to his theatre.

** * * *

THERE has been a marked increase in the evidence that the exhibitor is studying his whole program and that he is attempting to make every element of it mean something. We believe that the day is close at hand when he will demand that there is some reason why he books each unit.

The comedy can no longer be classed as a filler. It is a necessity. Often it is the biggest part of the entertainment.

The same conditions are found with our specials. We have here an instance where the Strand theatre, Houghton, Mich., has devoted its entire display to "The Race of the Age," a two-reel subject which has broken all advertising records for a picture of equal length, as evidenced in its standing in the advertising of the Strand, New York, and across the country to Grauman's, Los Angeles, where the whole show was built around it. To a slightly less degree the same attention has been given every special that Educational has released.

THE scenic and travel pictures have not the same degree of advertising possibilities as the comedies and specials, but exhibitors are beginning to realize that the presence of a Bruce Scenic Beautiful or a Chester Outing on their bill will decide the uncertain patron in favor of their house and against the theatre that does not announce such an offering.

The better theatres are announcing these in their ads, title and brand name, and in every case where it has been done it has been found so profitable that it is now a "must" order to the advertising department.

There is no such thing any more as a "filler" to the house that jealously guards its offerings. There should be no picture shown that is not worth while, and there should be none shown that does not mean something to the box office and does not contribute notably to patron satisfaction.

That day is rapidly approaching.

Lumberjacks See Paramount Films

The "Chicago Tribune" recently published a page announcement of an arrangement whereby the lumberjacks employed at the Shelter Bay logging camp in Northern Canada maintained to assure a steady supply of print paper were to witness motion picture exhibitions free of charge during the four months of the closed season by the courtesy of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

District Manager Harry P. Wolfberg of the Chicago office effected the arrangement which would take in prints of circulation during the four months and the films went to the camp on the last day of open navigation.

This is newspaper-exchange cooperation of the best type and should not be without effect upon the policy of the "Chicago Tribune," which has occupied prominent place among American newspapers in its opposition to the motion picture and the motion picture exhibitor.

Theatre Banquet Produces Strand Publicity Spread

Any clean publicity is good for the theatre. Exhibitors who strive to "get over" publicity realize the fact.

They realize, also, that the "getting over" process requires something more than dreaming out a yarn and telling it to a reporter.

Some few exhibitors have followed their attempts to get publicity in the daily press to the conclusion that the best way to get it is to do something worthy of it.

These men succeed.

Allen B. Newhall, manager of the Strand theatre, Lynn, Mass., is such a man. The above illustration is a reduced reproduction of the cartoon which was used in four column width by one of the Lynn newspapers following Mr. Newhall's banquet to his theatre employees on the occasion of the Fifth Anniversary of that playhouse.

To obtain this free and altogether desirable publicity, Mr. Newhall simply included in his plans for the affair invitations to members of the newspaper staffs of the Lynn publications. No attempt was made to "sell them the idea." It was wholly the good will of the gentlemen in attendance and the merit of the event as a news feature that produced it.

The incident points out at least one way for exhibitors to obtain worthwhile mention in the press. Anniversaries are but annual in occurrence, but other events of equal importance and productive of equally desirable results occur from time to time in the theatre.

The thing to do is to keep the newspaper people in mind throughout the year. It will be found decidedly worth any exhibitor's time to do so.

Martin F. Gruenwald, manager of the Victory Theatre, Kokomo, Ind., co-operated with the "Kokomo Daily Tribune" in conducting a charity matinee free admission to which was accorded all who brought potatoes, oranges, apples or other good things that would bring cheer to the needy on Christmas. Between 2 and 6 p. m. 2,500 youngsters attended the theatre, bringing 46 pecks of potatoes, 185 apples, 95 oranges, 58 cans of fruit, 52 cans of corn and peas and 33 cans of jellies, as well as one package containing a pair of child's rubber overshoes.
Western Showmanship Best, According to E. L. Hyman

By EDWARD L. HYMAN

MY EXPERIENCE as a theatre manager in Denver leads me to the declaration that the western policy in the management of motion picture houses is the bedrock in the stabilization and permanency of the industry.

I refer to the trait so dominant in the western— the trait of friendliness, the desire to make you feel at home. That atmosphere has been burnished into the theatres has given them character and longevity. The plain, homely things, the things we have in our everyday lives minus the sham and glitter and pretense, dominate the policy in the West. The handshake that every theatre ought to extend to every patron every day and not only at such holiday times as these is making theatres institutions which are as much a part of the community as are parks and churches and schools.

New York and such eastern cities as Brooklyn are learning the western methods in showmanship. The on-the-level, your-money's-worth plan is rapidly being substituted for the hokum and the ballyhoo.

I always had felt that personality had to be implanted into a house and I learned things from the Denver people while in that city which I find are helping to drive the Brooklyn Strand into the front ranks of theatres. But I am not writing an essay, merely a message of good will for brother showmen in the West.

The outlook for 1920 is not promising. It is an outlook that will solidify the industry, that will standardize it along lines that are honest and clean.

The motion picture business is no longer a haphazard business. The coming year will, I think, herald a continuance of the era of prosperity that we have been through. But to maintain it the industry will have to give cent for cent in quality. High prices and poor shows will not survive. Equitable prices and good shows will.

The manager without ideas for novelties in the presentation of his show is going to have a hard row to hoe. If he does not study the opportunities for surprises in his program the man up the street will get his patronage. More and more are the people of the East demanding a "different" sort of performance. It is indeed hard to meet this craving and the manager often has sleepless nights trying to think up new stunts.

Days in the preparation of musical programs instead of a quick rehearsal on Monday morning loom up on the horizon. The manager will work even harder than he has, and he will sleep less. A manager in order to hold his own will have to be a deep student of music and musical values, of the public taste, and must be alert to hop onto every avenue that opens up new paths of exploitation and advertising for his house.

I also believe that there will be more care in the selection of short subjects, due to the careless selection of such subjects in the past. Those managers who have exerted care in their selection have had unusual success in holding patronage.

The comedy problem is another that we must face. The offering in comedy form in some of the best written humorous stories offers the solution. The humorous characters of fiction are now crowding the slap stick artists off the screen. The public wants laughs but they are content to take it without having it shoved down their throats. Above all I believe that the coming year calls for thoughtful solemn judgment which will tend to bring overhead in theatre administration down to a reasonable plane, a basis which will not be in keeping with the reckless months we have had to pass through.

The conservative progress of the west assures stability. I feel that to the west I owe a new vision in the ways and means of running a house.

Western friendliness still has plenty of room in some of our eastern houses, but we back east are learning quickly. May I presume to wish the picture men of the west the very best kind of a New Year?

An unusual effect was gained by the management of the Pastime theatre, Marmaduke, Ark., in a novelty program recently issued covering the attractions of a week. A cheap yellow stock was used, all copy, text and advertising, being written with a typewriter upon both sides of the paper, a mimeograph supplying the reprints. Dots were used instead of rules to separate the matter and a rubber stamp with the name of the theatre was applied at the top of the front page, making each copy seem an original.
Motion Pictures Attacked by Illinois Club Women

Mrs. Guy Blanchard, Prominent Agitator, Leads in the Discussion—Other Members Denounce State and National Censorship

Motion Pictures were denounced and literally torn into shreds at the fourth biennial session of the Illino's Women's Legislative Congress, which met in Chicago recently.

The discussion was led by Mrs. Guy Blanchard, long an agitator for strict censorship in Illinois. While there were those who assailed pictures from every angle, other club women attacked the proposal for rigid state and national censorship. Mrs. H. Hamburger declared:

Censorship Is Denounced by Mrs. Hamburger

"You can legislate out of a film the vamp scenes, or any particular bit that is obviously indecent. But it requires other tactics to eliminate entire stories carrying frightful propaganda in the crook heroes and the pretty country girls enticed to the city by villains, but always coming out safely."

"If virtue is triumphant in the end, the movie is not censored, no matter how insidious or vicious the story may be in itself. If moving picture corporations know in advance what the public will not tolerate, they will censor their own pictures before they are made, and a board of intelligent persons, not political appointees, who review the finished work, will on that basis be able to pass the entire production."

Resolution Is Proposed

Despite the urgent need of censorship by many of the club women, the following resolution concerning free speech was proposed:

"Whereas, There is a world crisis of readjustment after the great war, and

"Whereas, People can only act intelligently when all sides of an issue are publicly discussed; therefore be it Resolved, That the legislature be requested to repeal all legislation limiting free speech, the right of assemblage, a free press, and all precautions be made to safeguard citizens from arrest and imprisonment for expressing opinions on industrial and political subjects."

Censorship Ordinance Framed in Saginaw (Special to Exhibitors Herald)

SAGINAW, MICH., Jan. 4.—An ordinance providing for the suppression of motion pictures which "might have a bad effect on children and others" is being framed by Miss Williamina Green of the social welfare department. She announced that she did not wish to create a formal board of censors, for "I do not think that the movies are improper very often as it is."

Frohman Co. Which Stars Lillian Gish Goes Into Hands of Receiver (Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, Jan. 4.—Frohman Amusement Company, of which William Frohman is president, has been placed in the hands of a receiver, Judge James C. Knox, in the United States district court, appointed Louis Frankel and H. Maynard Kimberly receivers in equity. The complaint was filed by Powers Film Products Company, which claims $31,652. The assets of the company are given as $240,500 and the liabilities $67,072.

The bill states that the company is engaged in the production of motion pictures starring Lillian Gish, and that after spending $34,000 on "The World Shadows," the first picture, it finds itself unable to finish the production because of the lack of necessary cash. Because of this condition Miss Gish threatens to cancel her contract which would mean a loss of that part of the picture already made. It is understood that Miss Gish is under a three-year contract with the company.

Telegraph, and James Beecroft and Harry H. Poppe.

Speaking of the reasons of group-book- ing of what Associated First National's directors believe to be five of the most pre-eminent productions ever made, executives of the company state: "As a result of the circuit's encouragement of independent producers to put forth their best efforts, coupled with the growing demand for bigger and better pictures, we have obtained a class of attractions that we feel must be presented in a new manner in order that the maximum of results may be gained with a minimum of effort and expenditure.

Look for New Records

"After many conferences between our executives, prominent franchise holders and exchange managers, it was decided to launch boldly into the undertaking of putting out super-specials in groups instead of singly. Having assured ourselves of the success of 'Passion' as the result of trying out the Poli Negri feature in Patterson, Newark and New London, it was decided to select from special merit completed productions a group of five which we believe will revolutionize box office receipts and set new records in exchange history."

"It will be observed that a wide range of entertainment will be presented, and the assortment of subjects included in the first Big Five, 'Passion,' for instance, is a powerful dramatic period spectacle; 'The Outlaw' is one of the most vivid domestic dramas yet produced for the screen; 'The Kid' is without doubt the greatest screen comedy ever produced. 'Sowing the Wind' is a most remarkable woman story; and 'Man, Woman, Marriage' is in many respects the most extraordinary of the group. There are in eight or more reels except 'The Kid,' which is six reels.

Lessens Advertising Expense

"The expense and exhibitor effort necessary to the exploitation of these five subjects individually would be very heavy. Advertised, however, as a group the expense and labor for the individual offering is largely absorbed, for the general advance campaign will make more effective the exploitation of the individual productions. Our great effort will be to convince the public in advance, of the remarkable season of entertainment to be presented and thus to pave the way and enhance the effectiveness of the individual productions. The plan is being perfected in every possible detail and we believe it will have a far reaching influence on existing distribution and exhibiting methods and carry immense benefit to exhibitors."

"Necessarily, the thousands of holder of First National Chaplin contracts will get 'The Kid' independently of the group should they so desire. Equally certain it is that all Associated First National franchise holders will get the other four of the Big Five, and for those unable, because of contract complications, to secure the Chaplin feature, we may include a fifth release of equal caliber. Exhibitors, however, will not be obligated to book the series, and may choose one or any number of the Big Five, in which we feel sure the Big Five will be a tremendous factor in exciting business."

"This plan of group releasing and season exhibition is designed purely to obtain maximum returns for both exhibitor and producer. Exhibitors booking the Big Five may find it advantageous to increase the length of the runs, or possibly raise the admission price.
Sunrise Negotiates For Three Hylands

"Price of Silence" May Be Followed by Others

Starring Peggy

Max Carnot, president of the Sunrise Pictures Corporation, 220 West 42nd Street, New York, announced that a deal is pending whereby the company will acquire three or more productions in which Peggy Hyland will star.

Receive Many Inquiries

Scores of companies have come in to the Sunrise home office in connection with the state-rights sale of its first independent offering, "The Price of Silence," starring Alfred E. Evans Wilson, in which Peggy Hyland is the star.

"It is because of this great demand and popularity of Peggy Hyland," said Alfred Timen, treasurer of the company, "that we are planning to sign up Miss Hyland for at least three more pictures. We feel as one of the trade paper's reviewers said, 'that Peggy Hyland has struck her real stride and is certain to give the present day film topnotchers a run for premier honors.' While Peggy Hyland is an old star and is beloved by countless thousands of admirers, she is a revelation in this picture and will win thousands of new admirers by her artistic portrayal."

Sunrise Book Store Tie-Up

"The Price of Silence" is taken from one of the popular novels of the day, "At the Mercy of Tiberius," and the name of Augusta J. Evans Wilson is believed to warrant a book store tie-up and in connection with this, Nat Dorfman, director of advertising and publicity for the company, is making multitudinous calls.

Winfield F. Kelley, general sales manager, returned from a short trip to Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, reports several deals on, with prospects of a Sunrise Exchange in Baltimore. Mr. Kelley is preparing for a swing around the country about January 20 and expects to close on the bigger territories.

Artistic scenes follow one another in the Ford Educational Weekly, No. 1, "A Fairyland," its producers aver. The film, tinted in sepia, giving it the soft tones of an old etching, shows scenes in the Canadian Rockies. Rugged mountain peaks and waterfalls, deep ravines and winding trails and roadways are pictured. Beautiful Lake Louise is shown, and the picture ends with a glorious sunset. "A Fairyland" is the first of the fifth series of the Ford Educational Weekly, and the first to be distributed by the Ford Educational Film Exchanges of America, Inc., under the new contract recently entered into with Fitzpatrick & McElroy.

Selznick Stars Aid Atlanta Paper

In Raising "Empty Stocking Fund"

While in attendance at the Southeastern Motion Picture Exposition in Atlanta, Ga., recently Eugene O'Brien and Martha Mansfield, Selznick stars, entered with fine spirit into the campaign the Atlanta Georgian was then waging to boost that newspaper's "Empty Stocking Fund." Through the efforts of those screen luminaries the poor kiddies of Atlanta benefited to the extent of about $300.

Annual Drive Is Made

The Georgian makes an annual drive for funds to brighten Christmas for children of the poor who might otherwise go without the "fillings" for their stocking and the little presents and cheer that means so much to every juvenile in the land. Charles McClintock, exploitation expert for Selznick Enterprises, aided in the drive.

At "Five Points," the busiest corner in Atlanta, a motor truck was parked by the Georgian as the center of activities for its drive. There was a piano player and singers to jazz the assembled crowds and while the enthusiasm thus stirred was kept at high pitch, Mr. O'Brien and Miss Mansfield appeared as the main attraction.

Result Is Satisfactory

The Georgians had seen to it that citizens of Atlanta would know about the Selznick stars being on hand. Quantities of space was given to the advance heralding of the event, with pictures of Mr. O'Brien and Miss Mansfield prominently displayed. The result was satisfactory in every way; thousands crowded around the motor truck and formed an enthusiastic and liberal assembly for the picture stars to work upon.

Shallenberger Appoints C. M. White
T. A. Curran to Sales Organization
Both Men Will Spend Some Time in New York Office
Before Being Assigned to Territory—Rights
To Picture Dispensed in Atlanta

W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, announces the appointment of two additional special representatives to the sales force of the Arrow organization.

In accordance with the recently announced policy of expansion of the corporation an increase in the sales force became necessary and appointment of Thomas A. Curran and C. M. White was the first step preparatory to handling the greatly increased output of Arrow during 1921.

Both Experienced Men

Both Mr. White and Mr. Curran are experienced film men, who are especially well fitted for the work they will have to do in their new positions. Mr. White was for a number of years connected with Gaumont and has had a great deal of practical motion picture experience. Mr. Curran acquired most of his motion picture experience in Australia.

Both Mr. White and Mr. Curran will spend some time in the New York offices of Arrow familiarizing themselves with the business details of the organization before going to their respective territories.

To Conduct Big Campaign

An announcement is made by the sales department of Arrow of the closing of a contract between Arrow and Quality Film service of Atlanta, Ga., whereby the latter obtains the special production, "Bitter Fruit," for North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida and Alabama.

The announcement further states that quality is going to conduct a big local advertising campaign in exploiting this picture and that a great deal of interest is being manifested by the exhibitors in this production largely due to the fact that the greater portion of the picture was filmed in Florida and that exhibitors throughout that territory are eagerly contracting for it and in their advertising are playing up strongly the local appeal of a picture made in locations with which their patrons are familiar.

"Bitter Fruit" is a production made by Drama Films, Inc., and directed by Will Bradley.

Top Notch Company Announces New Policy in Marketing Its Comedies

Top Notch Producing and Distributing Company of Cleveland, O., announces what it declares to be a new policy for handling its product in the independent field. It announces the establishment of methods similar to those adopted by manufacturers and jobbers of staple articles.

Mr. Hecht, the treasurer of the corporation, states that film is just as staple an article as food or clothing and that an inexpensive amusement like that which is afforded by the motion picture is just as necessary to every day living. If film is not considered a staple article it is merely because the film buyers and producers themselves mismanaged the industry and did not gain the deserved recognition for their product, he states.

Reason Is Cited

"There is no reason whatsoever for the fact that all substantial business men look sneeringly at the whole film industry," states Hecht. "They consider this business a huge joke and a bank will laugh at any film buyer if he should ask for a loan and would offer a five-reel feature or half a dozen short subjects as collateral. You may be able to show that the cost of your production exceeded $30,000, but you couldn't borrow $30 on it.

"That is the reason the Top Notch company, when relasing their new series of two-reel semi-slapstick comedies, made the ruling that made the whole industry stop and think and no decision was made as yet whether this new exploitation method will lead in the direction which aims to make the film industry equal to other substantial organizations, or whether it will be a wasted effort to put the business on a basis that differs from its present policy.

Cancellation Is Possible

"This company does not screen their pictures when selling, but are selling twenty-six two-reel comedies and guarantee to deliver one every second week for one year, and give the right to the film buyer to cancel their booking on instant notice should they at any time be disappointed with any one shipment. This company does not accept any deposits on their contracts, but the buyer merely pays for each shipment as the bookings are scheduled. Furthermore, there is no charge made for state or territorial rights on Top Notch releases but the buyer merely pays for as many prints as there is a demand created for on their territory.

"Finally a nation-wide publicity campaign is advertising a great title contest, whereby the producers of Top Notch comedies are offering seventy-eight $100 cash prizes for the three best titles on this series, suggested by theatre patrons, thus aiding the exchange men and theatre owners in securing a drawing card for these comedies."

The first publication entitled "Movie Mad" is scheduled for January 16.
Reviews Generally Favorable to First Two Films Issued by Stoll
Ralph Proctor Declares American Exhibitors Are Accepting English Pictures As Readily As U. S. Productions Are Received Abroad

In assembling the reviews of motion picture critics on the company's first two publications, "Squandered Lives" and "Mr. Wu," Stoll Film Corporation announces that the reviews have been generally favorable and have confirmed the expectations of the company's officials.

The sales forces of Stoll, which are operating from thirty-three Pathe exchanges, now have been in the field over a month. That these managers and salesmen have received substantial encouragement from exhibitors in their territories is attested by the reports being received by General Manager Ralph Proctor.

Fair Play Prevails

"The word that comes to us from our branch managers uniformly indicates what I always have claimed that the spirit of fair play is just as strong among the exhibitors of this country as it is among those in England," declared Mr. Proctor. "The former are accepting English pictures just as readily as American pictures are accepted in England. They are displaying a spirit of absolute reciprocity. The bookings have been not only beyond our expectations; they have been a revelation.

"That the American market is as cosmopolitan as is any other in the world is proved by the reception accorded 'Passion' at the Capitol in New York. It may have remained for Samuel L. Rothafel to demonstrate this fact as he has demonstrated other things in a showman way before, but there can be no question he has proved there is always room in this country for a picture made outside the boundaries of the United States when the production is a worthy one.

Costume Play Will Go

"'Passion' is not only a subject made in another country, but it is what we have in this country characterized and frequently stigmatized as a costume picture. Mr. Rothafel has shown that a costume production, if the story is there, will go and go big.

"I am hearing so heavily on this phase of this particular question because Stoll will release at the end of January 'The Tavern Knight,' adapted from the book by Rafael Sabatini, a picture I am anxious for all exhibitors, first run and others, to examine critically. I believe they will find in its unusual exteriors and even remarkable interiors something out of the ordinary. And these factors are entirely subordinated to the love and adventure elements of the story.

Will Expand Activities

"So you may understand why it is we feel here the American exhibitor will continue to accept pictures regardless of their nativity so long as they are good.

"And it is because of this open-minded spirit encountered by our sales force that the production chiefs of the Stoll company abroad have determined materially to expand their picture-making activities."

W. R. Rothacker Cuts Melon for Employes

Distributes $14,000 Stock Among Twenty Faithful Fellow Workers

Shortly before the Chicago laboratories of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company closed down, on the afternoon of December 31, Watterson R. Rothacker called a group of his fellow workers into his office and made them his fellow partners by presenting them with stock bonuses.

In all, $14,000 of Rothacker Company stock was distributed, according to the terms of service.

Appreciation of Service

"You have earned a partnership," Mr. Rothacker told them. "This stock is not a present. I am giving it out the same as one would give out anything in appreciation of loyalty and service. I look forward to the time when every one of my present business associates shall have become my business partners."

The entire Chicago force gathered in the studio where Mr. Rothacker spoke as follows:

Addresses His Employes

"Almost every industrial plant in the United States is laying off workers or cutting salaries. The Rothacker Film Company has no desire to do either of these. We want you to earn more than you are now, if possible. We want to increase the number of workers instead of laying off some.

"We want to continue paying the best salaries possible. But, in order for us to do so, you must continue to give the company 100 per cent of your efforts. Our customers say we are making the best quality prints in the country. With your continued co-operation, we shall keep right on turning out quality work."

To the "County Fair"

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, Jan. 4.—Charles L. Stephenson, president of Charles L. Stephenson Attractions of Toronto, now visiting here, has closed a deal for the Canadian rights to "The County Fair."
Harry M. Berman, general manager of exchanges for Universal, announces that an important shift in the sales personnel of Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., has taken place. Stern being promoted to district manager in charge of all Canadian territory. Stern has been manager of the Pittsburgh branch for two years.

The growing importance of Canada as a market for Universal films has prompted Universal officials, it is explained, to project a broadened sales activity in that territory, and to establish it as a separate sales district.

Headquarters at Toronto

Stern's new district will embrace the Canadian-Universal offices in Toronto, Montreal, St. John, Vancouver, Winnipeg and Calgary. The principal Canadian-Universal film branch is in Toronto, and is personally supervised by Clair Hague, general manager of Canadian Film Exchanges, Ltd. Stern's headquarters will be in Toronto.

The new district manager has been with Universal for more than five years, starting as a salesman in the old Universal exchange in Twenty-third street, New York City.

In the time that Stern has guided the Universal policies in the Pittsburgh district, the exchange has jumped from a mediocre position to one among the leading exchanges in the country, Universal records show. Stern celebrates this first half-year as Pittsburgh manager by winning Universal's anniversary sales contest, for the best business increase in sixty days. Universal reports that he has placed Universal film products in every theatre in the territory.

Feted by Managers

When he announced his intended departure from Pittsburgh he was toasted at a special banquet arranged in his honor by the F. L. M. Club. Employees of the Pittsburgh Universal exchange gave a dinner and dance in Stern's honor several nights later at the Fort Pitts hotel, at which Fred J. Herrington, exhibitor organizer, was the principal speaker.

The new Canadian chief has been in New York City for the past two weeks, laying plans for an extensive sales and exploitation campaign which he will inaugurate in the Canadian territory shortly after the first of the year. The main efforts of the coming campaign will be centered around the two latest Universal Jewel productions. "Outside the Law," starring Priscilla Dean, and "Foolish Wives," the new Erich Von Stroheim picture.

Robertson-Cole Is to Distribute Beban's "One Man in a Million"
Included in Contract Is $100,000 in Advance Bookings in Several Cities, Which Include Personal Appearance of Star

Robertson-Cole announces the acquisition of George Beban's "One Man in a Million" for distribution. The production was written and directed by Mr. Beban, who also stars in the piece. Included in the contract is $100,000 in advance bookings in a score of American cities which will include the personal appearance of Mr. Beban, who holds a distinctive place in the American heart through his long and notable success on the legitimate stage and in vaudeville, where his types of the good-natured foreigner struggling for success in the "Melting Pot" have met with favor.

Sign With Beban and Lesser

Robertson-Cole executives signed the contract which gives the right of distribution to the company with Mr. Beban and with Irving M. Lesser. The latter represented Sol Lesser, who has been interested in Mr. Beban's screen ventures. With this picture Sol Lesser is leaving the field of production, and his brother, Irving, who signed the Robertson-Cole contract, henceforth will look after production work.

"I cannot express my satisfaction at having obtained distribution through Robertson-Cole," said Mr. Beban, after the contract was signed. "Above all I desire dignified and fair handling of this production which I consider the best thing I have ever done. I feel certain that the Robertson-Cole organization is exactly the right one to do this. I have watched closely the type of picture Robertson-Cole is releasing, and have incurred into its plans for the immediate future. These searching looks into the future and present, together with my knowledge of the company's past, have convinced me that my greatest work is in proper hands."

Published in January

"One Man in a Million" will be published on January 8 in Newark, N. J. After this it is booked solidly for four months. Meanwhile work on advertising material and accessories is being rushed by Robertson-Cole, in the expectation that a general publication will be an event for early in the year. After a careful study of the production, Robertson-Cole executives have ordered the most complete and elaborate press book and exploitation campaign possible. The cities and theatres in which the Beban picture has been booked, and which will be supplied by Robertson-Cole, in addition to the thousands of other bookings which the distributing company will immediately start to get through its own organization, are:

Loew Sets Precedent Playing Picture Week Three and Four Day Shows Abolished for Doug's "Mark of Zorro"

Marcus Loew has established a precedent for his theatres by booking Douglas Fairbanks' "The Mark of Zorro," United Artists' picture, for a week's run at his houses. Heretofore it has been the policy of the exhibitor never to book a production for more than three or four days.

Concerning this change, Nicholas M. Schenck of the Loew offices declares in a letter to Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists:

Schenck Issues Statement

"I have just returned to my office from a screening of Douglas Fairbanks' new picture, The Mark of Zorro, and I cannot refrain from telling you that I think it is really the most wonderful picture he has made.

"We believe the picture is so big that we have decided to play this feature in our theatres a full week instead of our usual policy, which has always been to play everything three or four days.

Done First Time in History

In the official organ of Loew enterprises, which is published weekly, its editor, Nelse Granlund, said that this time was the first time in the history of their theatres that this had been done and that "Mr. Loew feels that this Fairbanks picture is so unusual that his patrons will want to see it twice. Also, he predicts that everyone who wants to see it will be unable to get in if played only three or four days. He thinks it is the greatest screen entertainment ever offered, and it is predicted that all records for attendance will be broken with this picture."

The picture is considered far the greatest Fairbanks ever made, and it shows him in two roles, the weak-kneed son of wealth, in the days of old California, and a daring bandit, who strikes back and punishes the unjust. He is a master swordsman, and leaves on his victims with his skilled blade a "Z" cut in their forehead, which becomes known as "The Mark of Zorro."
Realart Offers Three of Star Series for January Publication

Productions Star Bebe Daniels, Constance Binney And Alice Brady. Who Have Strong Roles In Their Respective Vehicles

"Something Different," featuring Constance Binney, "She Couldn't Help It," with Bebe Daniels, and "Out of the Chorus," starring Alice Brady, are a trio of pictures which Realart offers for January publication under its star franchise. The first is adapted from the popular novel, "Calebton's Prisoner," by Alice Duer Miller, "She Couldn't Help It," is based on the successful book, "In the Bishop's Carriage," by Miriam Michel son, while "Out of the Chorus" is an adaptation from "Voice of the Blood." a story by the well known writers, Harry Chandlee and William D. Laub.

Constance Binney Stars

The story, "Something Different," deals with the fortune of a wealthy society girl, Alicia Lee, who tires of the monotonous round of social affairs and the attention of the rich idlers who court her, and who longs for "something different." She accepts the invitation of a former school friend to visit in the Republic of Santiago. From the moment of her arrival things happen with startling rapidity. How she finally gets home and what happens before and after form a story which is declared to have unusual charm.

Constance Binney, as Alicia Lee, has a strong role. Supporting her are Crane Willur, Ward Crane, Adolph Millar, William Riley Hatch, Gertrude Hillman and Lucy Fox. The picture was directed by R. William Neill. The scenario is by Katherine Stuart.

New Daniels Vehicle

"In the Bishop's Carriage" furnished the story for "She Couldn't Help It." The Miriam Michel son story is known to many thousands who have read the book. It centers upon the adventures of a little girl who is taken from an orphanage and trained to be a pickpocket. On one occasion when she is suspected of aiding in a robbery, she hides in the carriage of a bishop. He finds her there and she pretends to think he is her father. He decides she is mentally unbalanced and takes charge of her, with many highly complicated developments that furnish thrills and suspense up to the very climax.

Bebe Daniels has a particularly effective role in this picture. Emory John son plays opposite Miss Daniels. Others in the cast are Wade Boteler, Helen Raymond, Vera Lewis, Gertrude Short and Ruth Kenick. The director is Maurice Campbell. Douglas Bronston is the scenarist.

Story of Chorus Girl

"Out of the first row of the chorus into a first family of New York—that is the theme of "Out of the Chorus," featuring Alice Brady. It treats of a popular chorus girl who chances with the son of an aristocratic family. After the marriage his friends and relatives predict he will soon tire of her. His relatives do more than predict—they plot to bring it about. And although she proves to be true blue to her husband and to her ideals, they play their cards to discredit her in his eyes. For a time they almost succeed, but eventually fate takes a hand in the game, and, in a gripping climax, brings it to a happy conclusion.

Miss Brady has many splendid chances for strong emotional acting in "Out of the Chorus." Playing opposite the star is Vernon Steel, Charles Gerard, Emily Fitzroy, Edith Stockton, Richard Carlyle, Constance Barry and Ben Probst. Herbert Blache directed the picture. The scenario is by Coolidge Streeter.

Eagerly Await Kipling Script at Pathe Office

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, Jan. 4.—The first scenario written by Rudyard Kipling for Pathe with the assistance of Randolph Lewis of Pathe's New York staff, is being awaited eagerly at the Pathe offices. Mr. Lewis went to England some weeks ago to advise with the famous British novelist on motion picture technique. He is expected to remain abroad for another six weeks.

POLICE HALT ATLANTA CONCERT FOR CHARITY

theatre, however halefuld the purpose, is in violation of the ordinance.

Following receipt of Mr. Manget's letter, Chief of Police Beavers conferred with Mayor Key, and then issued a statement, under the Associated Charities that to give the proposed concert would be in direct violation of the law, and that if the concert was held as advertised, he would consider it his duty to arrest any persons in charge, and, after the first arrest, which would lodge the question in court for adjudication, if the ticket office were not promptly closed, the police would forcibly close the building to the public if it took every member of his department to carry out his orders.

When this notice was served, Chief Beavers was asked if it would not be satisfactory to make merely the arrest this afternoon so that the case could be passed upon by the courts, and permit the concert to go on.

"No," replied Chief Beavers, "That would be temperizing with the question, for it would be absurd to make an arrest and then let the violation of the law go uninteruppted any longer.

Clergy Oppose Action

The absurdity of the situation was considerably heightened when the "powers that be" said that the concert might be given either at the Auditorium, or at the Atlanta, and when Chief Beavers was asked why he would permit a show at the Auditorium and forbid it at the Howard, he said that the difference was that it was specifically provided in the city ordinance that motion picture houses or similar places of amusement could be opened for public services on Sunday, while nothing was said about other public gathering places where motion pictures are not regularly displayed.

A number of the most prominent ministers in town have taken a strong stand in favor of the Howard's position, and are violently opposed to the action taken by Chief Beavers. Dr. C. B. Wilmer, rector of St. Mark's Episcopal Church made it the subject of his discourse on Sunday morning, and from the pulpit, had this to say:

Dr. Ashby M. Jones, pastor of the Ponce de Leon Avenue Baptist Church, and one of the most influential men of the Church in the South, went on record as saying that he feared the same observance of the Sabbath was being threatened by the extreme attitude of some.

Industry Leaders Certain Hoover Fund Will Be Met

Theatre Men Enthusiastically Join in Movement to Bring Relief to Three Million Starving Children in European Countries

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, Jan. 4.—The motion picture industry's campaign to save 250,000 of Europe's starving children is well under way. An enthusiastic response from every branch of the industry has answered the call of Herbert Hoover, chairman of the European Relief Council, through which organization the funds are to find their way in the form of sustaining food to the hungry little ones across the sea.

Confident $2,500,000 Will Be Obtained

There is no doubt in the minds of the picture men who are devoting their time and energy to the campaign that at least $2,500,000 will be turned over to the Hoover Fund through the activities of the several branches of the motion picture industry. The joint committee which represents producers, distributors and exhibitors of motion pictures in America, has opened headquarters in the Hotel Bristol on Forty-ninth street and Seventh avenue and is holding daily meetings, laying the groundwork for the active campaigning by every branch of the industry from Coast to Coast.

The men whose names are household words in the motion picture industry are daily visitors at the committee's headquarters, offering suggestions and practical aid to the end that this, the picture industry's first big drive for a humanitarian cause, shall be attended by unqualified success.

William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, and Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, have both taken off their coats and are devoting their driving power to starting the big ball rolling.

200-Foot Film Prepared

As a forerunner to the actual campaign of raising funds a 200-foot film, entitled "The Invisible Guest," produced especially to rivet the public attention in a graphic way to the conditions in Europe and to emphasize the necessity for immediate relief to starving children, which has been sent to the exchanges of twelve of the biggest film distributing companies and will shortly be seen by picture audiences throughout the country. This film is of tremendous heart interest. It is furnished exhibitors without charge and is requested to show it daily to their patrons during the month of January.

The crest of the picture drive to aid the starving children will be reached on January 26. This day has been set apart by the European Relief Council as "Motion Picture Day." Throughout the country on January 26 the patrons of picture theaters will be asked to give liberally to the fund. Addresses will be made in every theater by prominent men and women of national, state or local celebrity. These speakers will draw world pictures of conditions as they now exist in those sections of devastated Europe where need for relief is greatest.

Governors to Assist

Governors, mayors, senators, congressmen, educators and others who have been drafted for this work. Every charity will be called upon while which are controlled in the starving-child campaign under the Hoover banner will cooperate with the picture theaters on "Motion Picture Day." Special collections will be made by representatives of these organizations.

On the morning of January 29 it is planned to have picture theaters, wherever feasible, give a special performance for children, tickets for which will be sold in advance by representatives of the European Relief Council. These early morning shows for the children are expected to produce a large revenue for the fund. A plan is under consideration whereby the film companies will furnish gratis to the exhibitors suitable films for children.

Many Organizations Aid

The organizations through which tickets for the morning performances will be sold in behalf of the European Relief Council are the American Friends' Service Committee, American Red Cross, American Relief Administration, Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, Jewish Joint Distribution Committee, Knights of Columbus, Young Men's Christian Association, Young Women's Christian Association. It is anticipated that many wealthy citizens will make a large contribution to the entire seating capacity of certain theaters and will then donate the tickets thus purchased to schools or charitable organizations so that children may attend the performances free of charge.

An extensive poster and correspondence campaign will be inaugurated immediately by the picture men's committee to bring the significant facts in connection with the drive to the attention of the public and picture fans in the country and to the public at large.

Put Names on Honor Roll

As an incentive to theatre owners and managers to exert every effort in raising funds, the committee is considering the advisability of offering prizes for the theaters which turn in the largest amount of money to the European Relief Council in proportion to their seating capacity. Mr. Hoover has also offered to place upon the Honor Roll of the European Relief Council the names of every theater which participates in the raising of funds. Honor Roll certificates will be issued and presented to a selected number of the picture committee has requested the owners and managers of all motion pictures theaters to offer suggestions for unique and effective methods of centering the public attention upon the drive.

The personnel of the Motion Picture Committee which is charged with the responsibility of on behalf of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America is as follows: William A. Brady, C. C. Pettjohn, William Wright, H. M. Berman, J. R. Quirk, Arthur James, Sydney, S. Cohen, Leo Brecher, C. T. Sears, C. E. Whitehurst, S. I. Berman, E. M. Fay, John Manheim and C. L. O'Reilly.

Goldwyn Defends Films in Wire to Blue Law Leader

Samuel Goldwyn, president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, has sent the following telegram to Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts, superintendent of the International Reform Bureau, Washington, D. C.:

"The movement to close motion picture theaters on Sunday fostered by your organization is a dangerous encroachment on the liberties of the people and is an effort to take away from them beneficial entertainment. I maintain that motion pictures have a tremendous influence for good on the public. I ask you in all fairness to reflect for a moment on all the lectures which you have seen. Is it not a fact that right and virtue triumph in every photograph, the basis of all dramas being that the hero and heroine are lifted out of their world and put in a happier one? And this can be done only by a sympathetic, that is a good, character a moralizing in a thousand lectures could not drive home their lessons with as much force as these film stories."

Disapproves Reprisals Against Berlin for Barring U. S. Film

Howells Says That Only Producers of Poorer Pictures Would Make Demands for Counter Action.

By DAVID P. HOWELLS

CRIES for reprisals against Germany due to the edict there against the showing of American films should not be taken seriously by the trade in this country. The demands for the barring of German films by this country is raised by the uncertain producer, the maker of pictures in America, who is not certain that his production can hold its own against competition.

The action in Germany is one that would not be tolerated here inasmuch as it is a direct attack by producers to force the exhibitors here to take films of home manufacture that are of less value to them than others that they could procure. The producers there found that they could not compete with American films and because it is vitally necessary for Germany to foster all possible industry within its borders the government issued the edict prohibiting exhibitors there to show American films. Instead of being taken by producers here as an insult to America, or as unfair tactics on the part of another country, it should be accepted as a surety that there is nothing in the bug-a-boo about the American market being flooded with foreign films at a cheaper price than the American producer can manufacture.

German manufacturers have found that they cannot compete with the American films in their own home market. They admitted this when they joined in the application for the writ against the showing of American films there. If he cannot compete in his own home market what chance have they in the American market? In view of their stand taken before their own government how much basis is there to the oft-reiterated fact that the American producer must beware or he will find his own market taken away from him by foreign films manufactured at a cost far lower than he could hope to approach.

As a matter of fact there is only one director and one star in a foreign country that can hope to break into the American market in direct competition with the best of the producers here with any hope of success. The star is Elsa Negri and the director is Ernest Lubitsch. They work together and the reason why they have a chance of breaking into American territory is because Mr. Lubitsch has adopted the American method of careful production, and in Miss Negri is a star who has the inherent ability to rank among the leaders anywhere in the world.

"Passion," how slow distributed in this country by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., is a striking example of their combined work. Its universal appeal is well shown by the bordertown that has crowded into theatres in this country where the production has shown. The establishment of a record at the Capitol theatre in New York is viewed with alarm by those producers who do not know of conditions in France, Italy and Germany and all other European centers of motion picture productions.

Mr. Lubitsch and Miss Negri work on the same comparatively slow basis that is now characterizing the production of the leading producers and stars of America. They realized that time must be taken for a big production and on resuming work immediately after the conclusion of peace they adopted a schedule of not more than four productions a year. Four foreign productions a year from this source that can compete with American made films carries no great threat to the American market.

Other producers in Europe are beginning to realize that hasty slip-shod work gets the motion picture producer nowhere and the frantic haste to get production onto the market which was so marked within the rules that picture production was possible with the ending of the war is fast disappearing and there is a chance that other European stars or directors may solve the problem of productions with a world wide appeal in the same manner as have Ernest Lubitsch and Elsa Negri. Before they can accomplish this, however, they must accept the dictum which these two have already adopted of very few productions a year, so that even if every producer of any account in Europe should hit the mark of American taste in the same manner "Passion" has, the American market could not be flooded merely because of the small product a careful schedule naturally entails.

That is the foreign position here in a nutshell as far as it concerns the American producer, but from the standpoint of the American exhibitor an attempt to bar foreign films runs a slight toll on the shoe and nail. The exhibitor of the United States has already made known his views in regard to foreign films through the resolution adopted at the Cleveland convention last June.

Vitagraph Shows a 112 Per Cent Business Increase in Two Years

Receipts for 1920 Are 35 Per Cent Greater Than In 1919—97 Per Cent of the Theatres Have Played Company's Films

John M. Quinn, general manager of Vitagraph, has announced figures showing that the company's 1920 business was 112 per cent greater than in 1919, and 39 per cent greater than in 1918. The latter may be increased to 33 per cent as five days were yet to be considered when the report was made.

An interesting sidelight shows that during 1920, all but 3 per cent of all motion picture theatres throughout the United States and Canada used some Vitagraph pictures during the year.

Pictures Are Popular
The harvest of Larry Semon bookings, the interest in the wake of William Dwan's new form of chapter play and the record success of such special productions as "Dead Men Tell No Tales" were said to be a big factor in the achievement of this position.

The statement of Mr. Quinn, who has been at the helm of Vitagraph's distributing organizations since 1918, attributes the extraordinary growth in the volume of business done by Vitagraph in the last two years and its constantly increasing favor with the exhibitors and picture lovers, to the decided increase in the quality of the productions offered.

Facilities Are Increased
While recognizing the great value of proper sales and exploitation methods and the importance of the personnel in charge of these matters, he is firm in his belief that the first cause is in the production end. On the material side, better Vitagraph pictures have been in part the result of greatly increased facilities at Vitagraph's Brooklyn studios, in laboratory and stage space, and in a big addition in acreage to the Vitagraph lot at Hollywood, Cal.

Vitagraph has gone further than the material end. Mr. Quinn explains, and the experience of one of filmmod's pioneers has been injected into productions by the constant and close personal supervision of Albert E. Smith. Mr. Smith made more trips between the Eastern and Western studios during the last year than ever before, and the results of his counsel will be seen in such productions as "Black Beauty," which will be published early in the coming year.

Outlook Is Encouraging
Mr. Smith will continue to divide his time in supervising production in the East and West during 1921, and to that end has acquired a residence at Pasadena, Cal. His summers will be spent mainly at Oyster Bay, Long Island, and he will supervise such special productions as will be made in the East. Both Mr. Smith and Mr. Quinn are optimistic over the outlook for 1921, and are positive in their prediction that Vitagraph will have the most successful year in its history.

As the figures show, the Vitagraph product cannot be shown in many more houses than have already presented it during 1920, but it is believed that such productions as "Black Beauty," "The Heart of Maryland," George Randolph Chester's "Son of Wallingford" and other big special productions on the 1921 calendar will hew the way to still brighter results.

Enlarge Branch Offices
Notwithstanding the provisions made in the past for meeting a constantly increasing demand on the exchanges, plans are being made to increase Vitagraph's distributing system still further, and these plans have reached the goal of fulfillment in Oklahoma City, where an additional Vitagraph building will be opened for business on February 1. This region was formerly served by the Dallas office, which only recently was enlarged.

The first of a group of branches built by Vitagraph is located on South Hudson avenue at the corner of West Reno avenue in the Oklahoma metropolis.

Heralded as Amazing
Katherine MacDonald's latest film story, "Stranger Than Fiction," promises enough airplane thrills to give the most blase picture fan a real tingle.

B. P. Fineman, production manager of the Katherine MacDonald studio and Western head of the corporation, recently startled the aviation world by engaging a flyer to "take off" in a Curtiss biplane from a ten story office building in Los Angeles' business center. Then, as if this were not sufficient to start the thrills chugging up and down the spine of fandom, the company burned a plane in mid-air and filmed the aviator as he dove head first from the flames. E. C. Robinson, who made the daring dive, was equipped with a parachute.

As the aviator left the plane a dynamite bomb was exploded in the gasoline tank and the plunging plane became one vast roaring flame, shooting earthward Cameras in balloons and other airplanes caught the action, which is said to be amazing.

Allan Dwan Selects Cast
For "The Perfect Crime"
Following his policy of choosing an evenly balanced cast rather than a "star," Allan Dwan has selected the players who will appear in "The Perfect Crime," his second Associated Producers picture.

Monte Blue has been chosen to play the leading role, having been borrowed from Famous Players for the production. Jacqueline Logan, a former Follies girl, is entrusted with the leading feminine part; Stanton Heck is the villainous Thaine of the story, and Harde Kirkland will have a character role. The story requires very few imports than already presented it during 1920, but it is believed that such productions as "Black Beauty," "The Heart of Maryland," George Randolph Chester's "Son of Wallingford" and "DOUG" AND MARGUERITE IN "MARK OF ZORRO"
Tod Sloan, Once a Famous Jockey, Has Role in New Hampton Picture

"The Killer" Will Be Published by Pathé Exchange
On January 30—Adapted From Novel by Stewart Edward White

People who are heard now and then to inquire, "What has become of Tod Sloan?" will find themselves answered in a very interesting way by the picture screens which shortly will show Benjamin B. Hampton's production of "The Killer," adapted from Stewart Edward White's novel with the same title.

"The Killer" is announced for publication by Pathé on January 30. This will be Tod Sloan's first public reappearance of any significance since the great royal and aristocratic personages of the English turf turned "thumbs down" on him. Affer that he glided into the obscurity which has held him for nearly a half score of years.

Works With Determination

In that time he has grown a chubby and rather grave-looking Tod Sloan—not at all the figure of a jockey any more, but as a screen actor, and still easily recognizable in spite of added weight and years. He goes about his picture work in a businesslike way that is good for "The Killer" while it suggests the thought that Tod is putting his best foot forward with the determination to win back as much as possible of the million dollars he won on the turf and spent in wildcat ventures and luxurious living.

In "The Killer" Tod Sloan shows himself a good enough actor to rise effectually to a moment of pathos. He has conspired with the villain's stable man—who is a trainer associate of his old racing days—to ride across the desert and summon aid to save the heroines of the piece. When conducted to the place where his mount is ready he is affectionately greeted by "Stalwart," the very horse he had ridden to victory in the "Futurity"

Gives Synopsis of Story

The meeting and the memory are too poignant—Tod bows his head to the stall rail and his shoulders heave while the mare nuzzles him. You rather expect to see Tod Sloan crossing that desert like a streak, hunched up, as of old, on the neck of his mount. But what you really do see is still more dramatically effective. Tod is in a morning coat with derby hat and white spats.

Tod attired, and carrying a gripsack containing deadly evidence against the villain, he canters leisurely and unsuspected to his destination, and returns to the same fashion, "bringing up the reserves," all in cowboy regalia, in time to bring the murderous villain to his last account.

Benjamin B. Hampton has made of "The Killer" a most impressive and thrilling picture dealing with the unmitigated villainy of the master villain and his henchmen whose tyrannical and homicidal practices are furthered by the circumstance that their ranch headquarters are located close to the Mexican border.

Fox News Number 23 Is Devoted To Argument Against Blue Laws

Believing that the proposal to revive the Puritan Sunday by means of blue laws as stringent as those of ancient Salem is a serious menace to the motion picture industry, William Fox has devoted nearly one-half of the issue of Fox News No. 23 in the second volume to a telling argument against the killjoys.

Fox News gives exhibitors opposed to such oppressive legislation as the Lord's Day Alliance and other organizations are trying to impose upon the American people an opportunity to bring home to their audiences what the Puritan Sabbath would mean.

Is Realistically Depicted

All the significance of a blue law Sunday is realistically depicted in a series of scenes directed and acted by professionals. Each irritating feature of the Sabbath gloom is shown. There will be no ball games in the afternoon, even for those who want to be in church; it will be a crime to take the wife and children on an automobile ride; there will be no public conveyances or traffic lines in operation you cannot visit friends unless they are in walking distance—and even then you may have to explain what you are doing on the street on Sunday; no candy, ice cream sodas, no entertainment—not even motion pictures. People will learn to hate and dread the Sabbath instead of loving it, and longing for it as a day of recreation.

"If you want these conditions to occur," says the Fox News title, "that is your business; but if you believe in the right of all Americans to personal liberty, protest as hard as you can against these traducers of the Land of the Free."

Will Carry Weight

The Fox News plan, more than all the talk in the world, will bring home to the people what a terrible menace the blue laws are. The people will laugh at the picture of the discomfort of the man without his Sunday paper and the family arrested for autoing, for they will see the ridiculous side of legislation that proposes to treat men and women as children. But they will resolve to fight, and their fight will help the exhibitor.

Hodkinson Says Survey Does Not Substantiate Talk of Depression

Distributor Returns to New York After a Trip to His Exchanges, During Which Time He Personally Met Theatre Men

After a two weeks' trip in the field during which time he visited Chicago, Milwaukee, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Dayton, Columbus and other cities, W. W. Hodkinson, head of the organization which bears his name, has returned to New York.

Concerning his trip, he said:

"While all the talk we hear lately would seem to indicate that conditions bordering almost on panic prevail throughout the United States, nothing that I observed during my trip would serve to substantiate such a fact. The exhibitors, as I have seen it, are prospering greatly.

Theatre Conditions Vary

"It is only where local conditions are bad that the theatres feel the reaction. For example, in Akron some of the theatres are closed, which may be accounted for by the fact that the rubber industry is in a state of great unrest, but in the majority of the other towns where the manufacturing interests are diversified, the theatres, as I have said, are in a prosperous state.

"The purpose for which I went out in the field in this trip of mine were manifold. First of all, I wanted to get to know the men who go to make up our organization and, too, I wanted to get in personal touch with the showmen of the United States, I did so, and I am particularly delighted to see with my own eyes that exhibitors everywhere are learning more and more the full significance of the name Hodkinson and all that that name implies.

Company Attains Position

"My organization is beginning now to take exactly the place to which the quality of its service and the quality of its product entitle it. It is my contention always that a square deal meets with a square deal in return. And when you back that square deal up with an unequalled line of product achieving the result for which you strive is only a matter of time."

In connection with this square deal policy Mr. Hodkinson has dispatched a letter to the various members of his sales force. It follows in part:

"Be a Missionary"

"Always remember that you are more than a salesman, you are a missionary. You sell not only pictures but ideas. The more you sell the man on the soundness of the Hodkinson system the better will be your sale on Hodkinson pictures. If you convince the exhibitor of the benefits of the Hodkinson system you will have him for a permanent patron and a Hodkinson booster.

"The Hodkinson system is simplicity itself. We book the best material obtainable through the open market, we have access to every promising source of production. We are not under compulsion to sell the inferior picture on the strength of the superior picture. We let the producer take the risk and if a producer fails the cost of his failure is assessed against him and not against the exhibitor or the public. The Hodkinson organization is not buying theatres to come into competition with the exhibitor in his own chosen field.

Benefit to Exhibitor

"Is it not clear that every exhibitor supporting the Hodkinson organization is directly benefiting himself? By strengthening the hands of an independent distributing agent the exhibitor is not only sure of a constant supply of good pictures but he automatically checkmates the producer-distributor and the producer-exhibitor organizations which are looking to absorb the exhibitor's theatre in the assets of their respective organizations."

"Don't fail to give this thought the first place in your mind and if you can explain it to the exhibitor he will look upon you not only as a salesman but as a friend whose interests are the same as his."

While in Cleveland on his trip around the country one of the newspapers there highly praised Mr. Hodkinson for his unassuming and convincing manner and his democratic attitude toward exhibitors.

N. Y. Will Get Premiere On Marion Davies' Latest

The publication date of "Buried Treasure," Marion Davies' newest Cosmopolitan production, has been advanced. The public in New York will soon view the feature at a Broadway premiere and shortly thereafter it will be given general issue throughout the country. "Buried Treasure" is a story of the psychic, based upon reincarnation. Production was begun in New York last spring and completed in California during the summer at a cost of a quarter of a million dollars, it is said. Periods of time from the stone age to the present are comprehensively revealed largely by the costumes of Miss Davies imported, for the occasion. George D. Baker directed "Buried Treasure" from the story by R. Britten Austen which appeared in "Hearst's Magazine."

Unique Street Exploitation Stunt Outlined for Owen Moore Picture

Select Production, “The Chicken in the Case,” Is To Be Published on January 10—Campaign Book Details Good Lobby Display

An unusual street stunt particularly adaptable for the Selznick picture, “The Chicken in the Case,” starring Owen Moore, which is scheduled for publication on January 10, is outlined in the exhibitors’ campaign book issued in conjunction with the production. The idea is based on “the chicken” in the case.

The exhibitor is advised to obtain an attractive young lady, fashionably attired, and provide her with a suit case, on the inside of which place a live chicken. Have the young lady walk down your main street to the busiest corner of the town. When she arrives at the busy spot have her unfasten the straps or lock of the suit case, and at an opportune moment release the bird inside.

Will Get Press Publicity

This will create a great deal of commotion, as there will be many gallant gentlemen who will endeavor to retrieve the hen for the young woman. Have her appear visibly embarrassed, but refuse to volunteer any information whatever. This should lend a good newspaper story, although it will do no harm to tip a reporter off to the fact in advance and have him write it up as a chance occurrence.

Repeat this stunt a day or two later, using a different young lady, but this time have a card the size of the interior of the suitcase arranged so as to be visible when the bird is released and the case opened. On the card have merely the works: “The Chicken in the Case.”

Can Elaborate on Idea

On the day of the first showing of the picture have several young ladies around town, all carrying suit cases, which have one side removed and a wire netting put in its place. Place a young chicken in each case, and a card reading: “See ‘The Chicken in the Case’ at the Select Theatre Now.” This stunt can be elaborated upon or modified to suit individual ideas, and is calculated to be a sure-fire publicity getter.

For an attention arresting lobby display that can be gotten up practically without cost it is suggested that the exhibitor obtain a quantity of newspapers without regard to place or date of publication, and clipping therefrom all the stories or articles relative to such matters as “Millionaire’s Son Weds Chorus Girl,” “Jersey Minister Elopes With Pretty Organist,” “Society Woman Names Stenographer as Co-respondent,” “Romance Hinted Between Prince of Wales and American Girl,” and other stories in which there is a woman in the case.

Assemble All Clippings

Assemble all these upon a three-sheet board, and place this in front of your lobby or on the sidewalk, where it will attract attention. Across the whole layout have printed diagonally in bold black script letters the words, “The Chicken in the Case.”

Arranged with the Material

Arranged with the material have production stills of the photoplay and other publicity matter pertaining to this Owen Moore production. Across the bottom of the stand have a snipe or streamer reading, “There’s Always a Chicken in the Case.”

The supporting cast in the picture includes Katherine Perry, Ziegfeld Follies beauty, in the leading feminine role; Teddy Sampson, Walter Walker, Edgar Nelson and Vivia Oden.

First Neilan Issue in 1921 Is Parrish Film Said to Be Most Ambitious Picture Yet Staged by This Producer

Marshall Neilan’s initial publication for 1921 will be his spectacular visualization of Randall Parrish’s book, “Bob Hampton of Place,” that big production of America’s frontier days in 1876, which has been in production since early last summer.

Undoubtedly the most ambitious picture yet staged by this producer, this film will mark the beginning of an active year for the Neilan producing organization. Upon his return to Hollywood from New York, Mr. Neilan will finish this production and early issue.

Will Produce “Penrod”

The picturization of Booth Tarkington’s famous “Penrod” will then be started by the Neilan company with Wesley Barry again in the starring role. This film will be staged in the East in order to give the picture its proper settings. Albert Payson Terhune’s “The Lotus Eater” is also scheduled for early production.

For “Bob Hampton of Place” the producer has used 1,500 men and horses of the Tenth Cavalry stationed at Fort Huachuca, Ariz. In the production of these spectacular military effects the entire fort was turned over to the Neilan.

A thousand Blackfoot Indians in their picturesque attire are also shown and many night views with novel lighting photographed by Mr. Payson and Jacques Bizeul at the head of a corps of cameramen are said to present the most artistic conceptions of Mr. Neilan’s career of ten years in this branch of the industry.

Script by Marion Fairfax

Marion Fairfax worked for months on the script of “Bob Hampton” with the idea of making this her best achievement. James Kirkwood, Wesley Barry, Marjorie Daw, Pat O’Malley, Noah Beery, Charles West and other popular Neilan players are assembled in the cast.

Costume Ball Feature of Elaine Hammerstein Film

One of the largest and most colorful costume ball scenes yet staged for a Selznick production was recently filmed at the Fort Lee studios for the forthcoming Elaine Hammerstein production, “The Girl From Nowhere,” under the direction of George Archainbault.

The big scene represents the days when booted cavaliers paid homage to bare-kneed girls, and Corsican bandits ran wild with Norman peasants. The supporting cast includes Reginald Davidson in the leading male role, Huntley Gordon, Louise Prussing, Colin Campbell and Al Hartgart. The story was written by Bradley King and picturized by Sarah Y. Mason.

Adams Circuit Books all Hodkinsons Through Iowa

The Adams Theatre Circuit, which controls a string of theatres in Iowa, has booked practically all of the Hodkinson productions to play over their circuit. Joe Bloom, Hodkinson supervisor, is responsible for the statement that the Adams people say that they are always assured of a good patronage whenever one of the Hodkinson subjects is shown in one of their houses.
Prints for Second Fox Serial Are Sent Abroad Where Demand Is Felt

Many Translations of Stories Make Chapter Play Popular in Foreign Countries—Issued in U. S. on December 19

The second William Fox serial, "Fantomas," issued under date of December 19, is circulating in its first episodes throughout the country. Prints have been shipped abroad, and especially great prosperity for both American and foreign exhibitors is expected in that the Marcel Allain and Pierre Souvestre stories, on which the serial is founded, have been translated into all continental languages and have been read worldwide.

Mr. Fox purchased the right to film twenty-six volumes of the Allain and Souvestre works for what he describes as his "1921 American serial in 20 episodes." Into the twenty-two reel chapters, as filmed, the greatest thrills in the entire collection of stories have been packed by Edward Sedgwick, who created the serial and also directed the chapter story for the screen.

Five Episodes Complete

Five episodes have been completed, titled and distributed to Fox branches throughout the world. The preliminary work on five more chapters was completed before "Brille 19" the serial which "Fantomas" succeeded, was finished. That "Brille 19" justified its inception as the means of bringing the Fox organization for the first time into the serial field is declared to be proved in the bookings with which "Fantomas" starts off in 95 per cent of the theatres where "Brille 19" ran. Spectaculously, "Fantomas" will be shown, and in five more episodes than its predecessor.

"Fantomas" has been equipped with an unusual complement of lobby, window and billboard paper and a special campaign book has been issued by the Fox press department carrying details of an extensive exploitation program, together with newspaper advertising and publicity text. The first campaign book is printed on extra strong paper, using hand colored lithographed covers designed in attractive colors in strikingly effective design.

Proofs of newspaper cuts, in single, double and triple column display, scene cuts, portraits of the principals in the cast, and especially written and designed newspaper advertisements supply the howmen with an extensive selection of attention arresting illustrations. When and how to use all these aids is covered in full detail of explanation by expert publicity writers who speak from experience.

Story Is Outlined

In the text matter each of the five episodes now ready for exhibition are given in synopsis form, together with an outline of the story these episodes relate as a whole. Then too, the text carries the cast, advertising catch-line and a detailed list of the "high spots" and thrills in the several chapters.

The principal players include Edward Roman, who plays Fantomas; Edna Murphy, who plays Monna, chief aide to Fantomas; Johnnie Walker, Rene Parker, Lionel Adams, John Willard, Irving Brooks and Ben Walker. Edward Sedgwick wrote the scenario and directs the serial, with Horace Pylympton as his photographer.

Hayes Hunter, will be put on the press in time for simultaneous distribution with the picture.

A newspaper campaign on the part of the publishers equal to that planned by Dial Film Company and W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, who will distribute the screen version of the book, will be launched by Bobbs-Merrill Company. This edition of Bacheller's literary work will contain color plates of scenes from the filming of the book, together with other interesting data on motion picture production.

Exploitation Book on "Blind Wives" Ready

"Blind Wives," the picture spectacle that Fox Film Corporation has just published, is accompanied by an attractive exploitation book.

Among the most striking features of the book are a double-page spread of the fashion show that takes place in the story, with Lucile's (Lady Duff-Gordon) entire corps of models wearing the set of gowns that were made especially for this production by the famous modiste. There is a page devoted to scenes from "My Lady's Dress," Edward Knoblock's internationally famous play from which "Blind Wives" was made.

Travel Aboard Warship

The Duke of Connaught, his staff and entourage, and the film representatives, are now aboard the British warship Malaya proceed to India by way of the Suez Canal. Whipple sailed from New York on two days' notice and caught the warship at Marseilles, France. The Duke is going to India to officiate at the opening of the government house.

It is expected that the ceremonies attending the official function will be the most lavish staged in India since the ascension of King George to the throne.

Clozenberg Arranges Mission

Mr. Clozenberg arranged the exclusive motion picture rights for the expedition with the admiralty. At his suggestion the naval authorities set aside a large space in H. M. S. Malaya, in which experts from the F. B. O. built a film laboratory. Whipple and his assistants will develop their films as they are taken. Once a week, exposed film will be returned to London by the king's messenger and then to New York by the earliest boat.

Review Hayakawa's Year
As His Most Notable
In Whole Screen Career

A review of this last year for Sessue Hayakawa means the passing of the most notable year in the Japanese dramatic star's motion picture career.

The first two pictures made during 1920 were "Li Ting Lang" and the "Arabian Knight." Early in the spring of last year Hayakawa signed a new contract calling for four special pictures every twelve months. The first of these photoplays was "The First Born," from the pen of Francis Powers, and will be ready for publication shortly.

Colin Campbell, who directed Hayakawa in "The First Born," also handled the megaphone in the Oriental star's last two pictures, "Where Lights Are Low" and "Black Roses." In the latter story, by E. Richard Schayer, Tsuru Aoki (Mrs. Hayakawa) returns to the screen after a year's retirement, to play a prominent role. Myrtle Stedman, Henry Hebert, Andrew Robson, Charles West and Harold Holland support Hayakawa in this picture. Hayakawa's next feature has not yet been chosen and the scenario editor of the company welcomes original scripts which place the star in an Occidental atmosphere.

"Over the Hill" Moved
Again in New York City
But Keeps Popularity

"Over the Hill" has made its fifth leap and landed this time from the Lyric into the Broadhurst theatre, New York. Thus far the film has five theatres to its credit: the Astor, the Noma Bays, the Central, the Lyric and now the Broadhurst. Its story has brought crowds nightly into every theatre in which it has played. Moving on in each case because of previous contracts for occupancy of the house, "Over the Hill" has destroyed for all time the ancient theatrical superstition that it was impossible to pick up the crowd again when an attraction that was doing well moved to another theatre.

Newark Exhibitor Stages
Good Japanese Prologue

F. L. Smith, manager of the Rialto theatre, Newark, New Jersey, recently won praise from his patrons because of a Japanese prologue staged with his last week's run of "The Breath of the Gods," the Universal-Jewel picture starring Tsuru Aoki, the Japanese wife of Sessue Hayakawa.

The prologue was built up around the popular ballad, "The Japanese Sandman," which was sung by a coloratura soprano in Japanese costume. The presentation proved a valuable tie-up to the picture, which is a realistic reproduction of Japanese scenes, life and customs.

"Sunset" Jones Will Be Ready Shortly for Issue

American Film Company has completed and shipped to its New York exchange "Sunset" Jones, which will be issued shortly.

If you think it's easy to get "long shots" of a battle scene, gaze on this. Marshall Neilan took a blimp with him to Montana to take scenes for "Bob Hampton of Placer."

Four-Cornered Tieup on Vidor's
"Jack-Knife Man" a Big Success

A big four-cornered tie-up conducted through the columns of the Los Angeles Express preceded the opening of King Vidor's First National attraction, "The Jack-Knife Man," at Tally's theatre. The contest began with the issue of December 8 and continued to Christmas day.

In addition to the wide advance publicity given the picture, the contest netted the newspaper 1,000 new subscriptions. So large were the opening crowds that T. L. Tally plans on an extended run of from three to five weeks. Ted Le Berthon, director of publicity for Vidor, planned the affair.

Every boy in Southern California was invited to join the contest, which was participated in by the Express, B. A. Dyas Sporting Goods Company, Tally's theatre and the King Vidor studio. All each boy had to do in order to win a jack knife from the sporting goods company and a ticket to a special presentation of the picture at Tally's was to bring in one one-month paid-in-advance subscription to the Express.

Special Prizes Are Given

Special prizes were given to the ten boys who procured the most subscriptions. Each of the first ten received a beautiful de luxe jack knife, as many tickets to Tally's as corresponded with the number of subscriptions obtained and a closeup film of himself with his name on a sub-title. The films were made at the Vidor plant.

The films of the winners were screened at the theatre, after which they were presented to the parents of the boys.

Le Berthon Will Cooperate

The prizes were presented at a special performance on December 24, when more than 700 jack knives were awarded. Throughout the contest layouts in the Express ran from three to five columns wide daily, the length of the page.

Photographs of King and Florence Vidor, Fred Turner, Bobby Kelso, Harry Todd and other members of the cast were printed daily.

Publicity Director Le Berthon will cooperate with exhibitors over the country in conducting a like contest. The studio phase of the affair would not be necessary to its success.

New York Notes About Film Folk

New York City, Jan. 4, 1921.

Jim Milligan has dropped the "Typhoon" from his name and now desires to be known as Mr. Milligan. His resignation became effective December 31.

Dr. J. Victor Wilson goes out ahead of George Beban the first week in January in order to determine whether there is any nycorrhakhia stigmata (sleeping sickness) in the theatres before George's arrival. If there is any Dr. Wilson knows the pep recipe and will slip it over.

Gretna Green has moved a bit to the north and is now located in Greenwich, Conn. Constance and Dorothy galloped into the quiet little village astride a couple of foam-flecked steeds, grabbed off a couple of husbands and retired. They said it was a surprise and it sure was.

Al Corrier, who just resigned as advertising manager of the "R.C." will soon join the ranks of the non-theatrical. It is rumored that Al will have his own publication. Best of luck, Al, we're with you.

Frank Mattison is wearing that time worn smile but one which never grows old because Frank's better half presented him with a bouncing nine-pound baby last Wednesday. Both mother and child are doing well.

The spirit of harmony and eager cooperation with which the First National folks seem to be inoculated was prevalent again Christmas eve when an old-fashioned Christmas party was staged at the company's home offices. A section of floor space was cleared of desks, chairs and other office fixtures to make room for a Christmas tree and a couple of counters piled high with gifts. Work was suspended in the early afternoon so that every member of the staff could attend the party. Judging from the gathering in the room it is safe to say that no one in the organization missed the proceedings. J. D. Williams was brought from his office to mount a box beside the tree and make a speech. It was extemporaneous and it was sincere. For felicitated the assembled employees on their loyalty and said that if even all that were broken there was a chance of their achieving success so long as they remained loyal. He was applauded vigorously—every one was in accord with him. Then Father Kris, enacted by no other than Arthur Leslie, beat the buskin of good cheer. It was typically a First National affair, which means that the spirit of good fellowship pervaded it.

Among the Californians now in New York, Grant C. B. Stivers will join Marshall Neilan West Coast studios. He is conferring with "Jimmy" Granger, Mr. Neilan's eastern representative.

The Rivoli theatre is celebrating its third anniversary this week with an elaborate festival program built around the Cosmopolitan production, "The Barbarian and the Empress," with Matt Moore and Ruby De Reemer, Cecil B. DeMille's "Forbidden Fruit," which was scheduled to be the principal screen attraction during the Rivoli anniversary week, will be shown during the week of January 23.

The New Series of Hallroom Boys comedies, has been bought by Bromberg Attractions, Atlanta, for Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Tennessee. North and South Carolina have been bought by Preminger Pictures Corporation of Charlotte, N. C., announces C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation of New York.

May McCavoy, who scored a big hit in J. Stuart Blackton's "Forbidden Valley" and Whitman Bennett's "Truth About Husbands," has completed work in Barris's "Sentimental Tommy," a John S. Robertson production, in which she portrayed the role of Grisel, Miss McCavoy fairly romped through Grisel's childhood days, then her character changed and she made of Grisel a dignified young lady, very much in love with Sentimental Tommy. When Tommy forsakes her, the girl is heartbroken. Her sorrow becomes a mania and she loses her mind. With the finding of Tommy, however, her mind becomes normal and her life one of perpetual happiness. This is indeed a role requiring charm, poise and skill. According to Director Robertson and Miss Josephine Lovett, scenario writer, the petite May is a Grisel to Barris's own heart.

Roy Neill, after completing "Dangerous Business," starring Constance Talmadge, went to Famous Players to take charge of "The Teaser" with Dorothy Dalton. This is a gripping Alaskan drama, enacted with skill by the star; directed with artistry and sympathy by Mr. Neill. A rare combination. The picture is earning complecion and Director Neill expects to start the cutting process in the very near future.

Webster Campbell is now a full fledged director. Campbell is remembered as a leading man and a production expert. For several months he has been devoting his time to the business end of production. Now, he has been signed as a director by Vitaphone and his first picture will be "The Correspondent." On the posite Miss Griffith will be Percy Marmon.

Hope Hampton, whose latest pictures are "The Ball" and "Passion's Penalty," is making the most of a few weeks' respite from studio responsibilities. "It's nice to be home all hours of the day, for a change," asserts Miss Hampton, smiling contentedly.

Bert Lytell's powers of "thoughtful speech" are again in demand. With the opening of another big Loew house in New Jersey, Bert has been called upon to be "master of ceremonies" or something else just as entertaining. And not this time "The Messenger from Mars," starring Lytell, is held up.

Clara Beranger, scenario writer and playwright, is busy adapting plays for the screen for Famous Players, writing originals for this company and adapting popular stories and completing several short stories, "The Painted Lily," starring Mae Murray, directed by Robert Z. Leonard; "The Man Who Came Back," directed by Franz Orlowski, both now in the course of completion at Famous Players' Long Island studio, is an original story from Miss Beranger's prolific pen.

Thomas F. Fallon, who wrote "The Shark," "The Plunger" and "Dynamic Allen," and whose latest story, written in collaboration with Max Marx and J. Searle Dawley, is now being made as a Pearl White Special, is laid up for at least another week with a badly ailing knee. Just for recreation while convalescing, Tom is writing another original story.

Louise Glaum's "Love"

Inspires Charity Drive

More than 100 pretty girls of the Chorus Equity invaded Wall street on December 22 and collected better than $3,000 selling Louise Glaum "Love Tags" to aid the New York American Christmas fund.

Parker Read, Jr.'s, latest production starring Louise Glaum, "Love," was the inspiration for "Tag Day" held in Boston, Pittsburg, Chicago, San Francisco, Los Angeles and New York. Various charity organizations were called upon to supply girls to make the collections and the theatres playing "Love" supplied the tags. The Hearst papers aided in each of these cities.
"In Shadow of Dome" Not Political Film

David G. Fischer Explains His Treatment of the National Problems

David G. Fischer, director of "In the Shadow of the Dome," the new Fox-Fischer Masterplays, Inc., eight reel feature drama, emphatically states that his latest production is not political propaganda in any sense of the word. The locale of the photoplay is Washington and the story deals with the social activities of our national lawmakers and the intrigues of the House.

No Political Issue

Mr. Fischer's treatment of the play does not take sides in any of the great political issues of the day, he says. Nor does the play criticize the method of law making as it is accomplished in Washington. It merely states the problem and shows how the well-meaning Congressman can overcome the efforts of insidious lobbies and create beneficent laws.

"In the Shadow of the Dome" is the result of five months production. Mr. Fischer supervised everything from scenario to cutting, which is just being completed. According to an announcement made this week, Mr. Fischer intends to show the picture to the entire trade at once.

Confident of Results

His own faith in it is such that he believes it can take a position beside any other picture made this year in story, acting, quality of photography and the power of gripping drama. An announcement regarding the showing will be made shortly after which the picture will be ready for the general market.

The cast numbers 1,000 persons. Sets include replicas of the house of representatives, the Capitol, the Corcoran Art Gallery. The featured player is Dixie Lee. Other headliners in the cast include Donald Hall, Eulalie Jensen, William Parke, Jr., and Marguerite Gale.

Dominant Corporation Enters the Independent Field in New York City

Announcement is made of the formation of Dominant Pictures Corporation, a new entrant into the independent field. This comes simultaneously with the resignation of Jacques Koplstien as general sales manager of Victor Kremer Enterprises, who has resigned to assume the general managiership of the new company. Offices have been rented at 13 West 44th street, New York, and, according to Koplstien, the new company will be prepared to take care of the requirements of the independent exchange and the state rights operator.

The company will specialize in the production and distribution of high-grade independent offerings, including everything from a one reel subject to a five reel spectacle. A series of twenty two reel Western subjects to be issued as the "Western Star Dramas" is announced for distribution by the corporation. The first of the series is "The Cowboy's Sweetheart" which features Art Acord and Eddyth Sterliltg. The second and third are "The Vulture of the West" and "West Is West" respectively, and in these two productions the leading roles are essayed by Dorothy Davenport, Art Acord, Crawford Kent, Fritzie Brunette and Rupert Julian. Dominant also announces for ready issue in the state rights market a series of twelve one reel comedies featuring Rosemary Theby, to be known as "The Newlywed Series."

"Dog-Gone Mix-Up" Will Be Next Hallroom Comedy

"A Dog-Done Mix-Up," the next Hallroom Boys comedy, issued by C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, is the first of several stunt comedies in the new series in which Harry McCoy and Sid Smith are accredited with exceptionally clever work on the roof edges of high buildings, providing a combination of sensational thrills with comedy.

SCREEN MASTERPIECE

ONE MAN IN A MILLION
THERE was a line in "Business Before Pleasure" that always got a laugh, to the effect that the making of photoplays is not a business—it is a dissipation. And, unfortunately, in the past there was considerably more truth than humor in the remark. But the past year has seen fewer "dissipations" and the future will probably witness still fewer examples of misguided judgment on the part of manufacturers who stake immense sums on poor stories, acted by poorer artisans, and directed by inferior directors.

The idea that any story is suitable for adaptation to the screen is gradually being dispelled by the success being met by the original stories written by the most successful authors of present day fiction. People have long since tired of choosing their evening's screen entertainment because of the fact that the book from which it was taken was one of the "six best sellers." Screen literature is becoming more and more distinctive and peculiarly typical of the screen. Big men in all lines are entering the field, as writers, directors and heads of departments responsible for artistic titles, sets and camera work, all of which makes for permanency of this useful art and dispels the idea that it is a mere passing diversion.

"BLIND WIVES" (Fox) is an adaptation of Edward Knoblock's stage success, "My Lady's Dress." Charles J. Brabin adapted and directed it with excellent effect. Marc McDermott and Estelle Taylor have the principal roles. The story is divided into several episodes, each telling a complete story, a tragedy that is closely knit to the main theme. (Reviewed in full on page 38.)

"THE SILVER LINING" (Metro) is a crook story following a conventional trend, but made interesting through incidents which demonstrate methods employed by pickpockets and confidence workers. A surprise twist at the finish adds considerably to the picture's value. A splendid cast appears in Jewel Carmen's support.

"NINETEEN AND PHYLLIS" (First National) gives a unique portrayal of life in a small town, with Charles Ray contributing his usual finished performance. The story holds one's attention from the start and sparkles with amusing situations. Clara Horton appears to advantage opposite Ray as Phyllis.

"THE TORRENT" (Universal) presents Eva Novak in a rather far-fetched melodramatic tale of a marooned couple on a desert isle. Picturesque backgrounds and splendid night photography are the picture's outstanding points and it will make an acceptable program feature.

"THE HUNDREDTH CHANCE" (Stoll) is a pleasing presentation of the triangle plot, simply but interestingly told, with an anti-climax that will thrill the most blood. A picture that should find general favor in any theatre.

"HEARTS UP" (Universal), with Harry Carey in the leading role, that of a rough Westerner whose love of heart gets him into a peck of trouble. A worthy follow-up on Carey's previous pictures.

"FLAME OF YOUTH" (Fox) presents Shirley Mason in a highly refreshing romance as a little Belgian flower girl. Especially interesting setting that offers exploitation possibilities. A feature certain to please everywhere.

"BILLIONS" (Metro) offers Nazinova in a role entirely different from any she has previously assumed. A society drama, typically French, in which she appears as a Russian princess in America. The play is a comedy and the star a comedienne of great skill. Attractive settings and gowns.

"THAT GIRL MONTANA" (Pathe) is a plain story of the West, a love story, told simply and interestingly. Blanche Sweet and Mahlon Hamilton have leading roles. Exceptionally attractive scenic background. A romance of the gold country. A good picture.

"THE SCUTTLERS" (Fox) brings William Farnum to the screen in characteristic role, this time as a sailor adventurer seeking evidence of law-breaking on the high seas. Exciting and pictorially good. Smooth and finished. Will especially appeal to men and boys.

"NUMBER 17" (Fox) presents George Walsh in a mystery melodrama in which Manchurians riot with other Chinese and with American opposition. Walsh has the role of a young writer gathering data for an expose of crime. Better than other late Walsh pictures.

"HABIT" (First National), featuring Mildred Harris, is a story with a moral. The moral is not to let the tiny chains of habit enmesh you until you cannot break them. It presents a pleasing little-drama of present day life with a small but excellent cast in support of the star. A fashion show of unusual beauty is one of the outstanding points of the picture.
NINE TEEN AND

PHYL LlS

( FIRST NATIONAL)

A fine representation of small town life in a broadly treated romantic tale which, though short on plot, sparkles with amusing Ray touches. So well done that interest never flags.

Followers of Charles Ray will find in this production an enjoyable morsel. It hasn't much style—it's just the story of Andrew Jackson Cavanaugh, nineteen, in debt, and in love, seeking to win Phyllis Laurie against rival Jimmy Long, who owns a car and has the only dress suit in town. But it has delightful Ray touches and these make the picture seem all right.

The introduction finds Andrew calling to take Phyllis, the granddaughter of Judge Lee Laurin, to a dance. With his eye on the girl's future the judge asks Andrew how much he earns a week. Eighteen dollars! Andrew had said it proudly, but a moment later his voice is quavering as he repeats the information. But he takes Phyllis to the dance where Jimmy Long appears. Jimmy's dress suit and the car impress Phyllis. So Andrew has a rival. The party, except for Jimmy, who has the machine, returns in a sort of a Fontaine Fox street car, in charge of a motorman-conductor of uncanny trading ability, when a bandit who has been terrorizing the neighborhood appears on the scene. The experience makes Andrew realize all the more forcibly that he ought to have a car for Phyllis, especially since the girl is to take driving lessons from Jimmy.

He has asked Phyllis to marry him, but she decides they are too young to marry. She agrees, however, to become engaged to him. The next day he begins to look for the ring. His eyes rest on a $100 one, but the girl, who accidentally joins him, prefers the $500 one she sees in the window. He buys the $500 ring on the deposit plan, hoping to pay for it out of the $1,000 he will get if he can capture the burglar. The fun is well under way when, driven to desperation to get money, he spends his evenings searching for the glass slabs.

The comedy is sustained when Andrew picks out a dress suit pattern from a mail order catalogue and measures himself for it. It is a clever bit of business. But before it arrives he is piqued because of Phyllis' friendship for Jimmy and he makes an agreement with his uncle that he is to be sent to bed if he tries to leave the house for the dance. Then the dress suit arrives and temptation is irresistible. He is all dressed up but his uncle won't allow him to leave. He tries all sorts of methods, finally climbing out on the roof in his dress suit, top hat and sneakers, with top coat and cane on his arm and shoes in his hand. Shoes and cane slide down the inclined roof; his top hat gets in the way of the eaves. The sequence is rich in broad comedy. But he scrambles on to the apex where he is suddenly seized by a burglar. There is a fight on the roof until the two roll down and crash into the shrubbery. Andrew on top of the burglar. The dress suit is ruined, but Andrew has caught the burglar. He rushes him to the dance hall, where he knows he will find not only the judge but Phyllis and Jimmy. And Jimmy has the ring on which Andrew had paid a deposit. He arrives before Jimmy proposes, is acclaimed a hero and the winner of the reward, but as the honor is empty without Phyllis, he sneaks away, ties Jimmy to his car and then goes back for Phyllis. The motorman-conductor sounds his bell, but Andrew and Phyllis fail to hear it from their cozy spot in the porch swing.

The whole production has an air of luxury about it. The photography is exceptionally fine, while the titles, appearing in a sort of a picture frame with soft out-of-doors backgrounds, are well done. Clara Horton plays Phyllis and Lincoln Sedman appears as Jimmy Long.

WILLIAM FARNUM IN

THE SCUTTLERS

(FOX)

There is dramatic and spectacular value in this feature and the fact, with its pictorial worth, should make it popular, particularly to that patronage inclined toward the melodrama. While its romantic trend is moderated, the adventures of Farnum as a bold, brave seaman are allowed width, and a high pitch of excitement rises in the climax and remains until the feature's end. It is smoothly presented with graphic photography, particularly the night scenes of the ship at sea. Its holding qualities are good. The work of the supporting cast is gratifying and the atmosphere of the sea suggests exploitation employing sailor ushers and other nautical ideas.

The story is that of a venturesome, fearless adventurer who, for the excitement of the dangerous task, signs up to be of the crew of a ship carrying contraband cargo of ammunition to store on an island for Mexico. Furthermore, there is suspicion that the ship, the "Dorothy May," will be "scuttled" during the voyage for the insurance. Captain Machen (Harschell Mayall) is compelled by a bullying first mate (G. Raymond Nye) and absent former associates to carry on the lawbreaking business, and the presence of his daughter (Jackie Saunders) on the ship is expected to prevent danger from attack. Farnum as Jim Landers becomes good friends with the girl and when he, defending a bullied steward, is put in irons and into the ship's hold, she serves as "go-between" in his negotiations to get the evidence that shall place guilt on the proper parties. The captain himself directs the scuttling and the ship is sunk amid vivid proceeding, and the conclusion ends in the London office of Lloyds where the affair is cleared up as the girl brought to the arms of the sturdy Jim.

HARRY CAREY IN HEARTS UP
(UNIVERSAL)

The story of a rough Westerner whose attempt to shield a homeless little orphan girl gets him into a peck of trouble. The plot is trite but the action is well sustained and the night photographic shots especially beautiful. Val
Paul directed it from an original story by the star.

"Hearts Up" is the familiar story of the big-hearted westerner who comes upon a letter notifying his dead pal of the arrival in the West of his daughter; of his weakness to inform her that her father is dead, and in his dilemma is about to sacrifice his ranch to avoid telling her the truth.

Carey is credited with writing the story.
It is presented with a small but adequcast, and Val Paul's direction brings out the high points of the tale in masterful manner. Mignonette Golden appears in the role of Lorelei Drew, the orphaned daughter of a ne'er do well, Jim Drew, ably portrayed by Arthur Millet. Charles Le-Mayne has the villain's role and Frank Braidwood is the young engineer, in love with Lorelei. Some especially fine photography is introduced in the prairie night scenes, and those of San Francisco's night life are well handled. There are two fights, one between Millet and a halfbreed Indian and one in which Carey engages with Le-Mayne, that lend a thrill or two to the story.

David Brent, following the death of his pal, Jim Drew, finds a letter from Drew's daughter, informing the latter that she would soon be coming home. To shield Lorelei from the city's pitfalls, Brent goes to meet her and lacks the courage when she rushes into his arms to inform her that he is not her dead father.

At the ranch Brent tells his servant to call him "Drew" thereafter and everything goes well until Harding, a neighbor, threatens to expose him unless he leaves the country. He goes to Harding's ranch and whips him in a hand-to-hand fight. Brent then discovers she knows of his deception, tells her the truth and is about to go away, when she informs him she is in love with him and not the civil engineer.

JEWEL CARMEN IN THE SILVER LINING
(METRO)

A crook melodrama, purporting to be based on fact, and dealing with the question of whether crooks become such through heredity or environment. Story follows a conventional trend, but is made interesting through incidents which demonstrate crook methods em-ploved by pickpockets and confidence workers, the use of real backgrounds, and the surprise twist for the finish.

Roland West wrote and directed this production, which Metro is distributing for the Iroquois Film Corporation. His work is a melodrama in which he discusses the question of whether the criminal tendencies in crooks are the result of heredity or environment. Failing to come to a decision with two debating characters, he introduces John Strong, a secret service man, who says he will tell a true story and let the two decide for themselves which is right. A foreword by the author also announces the story to be based on fact.

The answer to the question isn't quite clear, but the story the secret service man tells, while following conventional routine and of obvious outcome after the premise is laid, except for the final twist, is interesting. The discussion takes place at a reception where Mr. and Mrs.
Robert Ellington are to be guests of honors, and the secret service man's subjects are two girls from an orphanage, one of them to live in a wealthy home, the other to become the protege of a pair of pickpockets. Years later the first girl is engaged to an author, but the engagement is broken through the girl's frailty. The second girl becomes a pickpocket. On the elevated train—excellent scenes by the way—she nips a pas-senger's watch. A detective catches her in the act and arrest confronts her until the victim does the surprising thing and denies ownership of the watch. The situation has considerable dramatic worth.
The girl is released and, when she leaves the train the victim follows and stops her.
He suggests they chose together, she refuses, saying she is only a crook. The victim laughingly explains that he is also a crook, but that he works a high-class confidence game. The two form a partnership and go to Havana.

There they set a trap for the author the first girl has rejected. The second girl—the pickpocket—falls in love with the author and by demonstrations supplies him with information as to criminal methods that help to make his newest book a success. It is clear what is going to happen. And the expected hap-ens. At the last moment the girl crook finds she cannot flee the author and she tells him who she is. The crook, the first girl appears on the scene to win back the author. The second one, seeing she might wreck the author's life, shams love for her confederate to send the author away. The plan works.
But she confesses her true feelings to her confederate and he, it develops, calls back the author and quits the country, leaving behind a note to the girl saying he is going straight. So the author and the girl pickpocket are reunited.

The secret service man emphasizes the fact that he hasn't mentioned names, but the audience knows who he means when the guests of honor appear. They are the author and the reformed girl crook. The surprise twist comes when the two, who have heard the tale, ask for proof of its authenticity. Then the secret service man reveals himself as the former confederate of Mrs. Ellington. It is an excellent punch and adds immeasurably to the strength of an otherwise rote and rule story.

The production is not as polished as it might be and gives the impression of lacking substantiality. But it is adequate.
The cast is a large one with such prominent names in it, besides Jewel Carmen, as Leslie Austin, Coit Albertson, Virginia Vaill, Julia Swayne Gordon, Gladden James and Arthur Donaldson. Each gives a satisfactory performance.

GEORGE WALSH IN NUMBER 17

(FOX)

This feature will reawaken interest in George Walsh by reason of its improvement upon his late picture, Trite of plot and commonplace of setting, but exciting, interesting and entertaining and score a hit with Walsh admirers.

Directed by George A. Beranger.

To the timeworn trend of the melodrama, when the Oriental devil pursues the fair young Occident, Fox has gone for the idea of this late George Walsh feature. It is valuable, however, in the fact that it is a better vehicle than that star has had for some time. It should regenerate interest in his work. The story is exciting and the suspense carefully carried. It will please the majority of patrons there is no doubt, although it will not score any great weight except with Walsh devotees.

As Frank Thedyon, a young writer, who exposes the ways of the underworld Walsh undertakes the troubles of the Forbes family, New York society folks. With the murder of a Mrs. Lester, the suspicion points to Mr. Forbes, father of Evelyn, the girl Thedyon loves. The tragedy is connected with Chinese plottings, the murder of the woman an outcome of her husband's dealings against the race. The Young Manchus, a Chinese tong, is the villain, and an opposing tong in the end proves the rescuers of the score no grudg the hero, who are led through thrilling experiences in a Chinese den before all is ended happily.

George Walsh is breezy and brawny and thoroughly likable in the role of Thedon, but the supporting cast is not up to standard.

BLANCHE SWEET IN

THAT GIRL

MONTANA

(PATHE)

A Western picture that departs enough from the stilts ways of the average one to be refreshing and highly interesting and entertaining. Blanche Sweet in a role different from the usual. Beautiful scenic background. Mahlon Hamilton and others of the supporting cast play excellently. Directed by Robert Thornby.

Here is an uncommonly good western feature—not spectacularly so—and there is nothing about it to particularly distinguish it from others set in that locale, but its very straightforwardness and simplicity, the fact that it is a plain little love story well told in bright, picturesque pictures and with smooth continuity, make it interesting. Views of fresh, clear, sparkling waters playing at the foot of a great pine-covered mountain heights instil peacefulness that is refreshing.

The story has to do with Montana Rivers, reared by a rascally father and brought up to wear boy's clothes and aid his robbing and cheating. In one skirmish Holly, the father, is driven from the girl's life, but he turns up again when she is becoming adjusted to new and honorable ways of living. Jim Harris also comes into her life and she learns that he is really her father. A gold rush brings Holly back, also the wife of Dan Overton and the man Montana loves. Holly and the worthless wife plan to rob Harris and Dan of their mine, but both are killed and the way to happiness is cleared for Dan and the girl.

Blanche Sweet makes the part of Montana an attractive one. Mahlon Hamilton, a favorite with many patrons, plays the part of Dan with much capacity; and good looks. Frank Lanning as Harris, Edward Peil as Holly and Katie Price as Mrs. Hazzard are others of the cast doing notable work.

MILDRED HARRIS IN

(First National)

A story of what habit did for one woman; a lesson in sartorial adornment. The old triangle theme with considerable footage devoted to an extensive display of rich and costly gowns and wraps. A small but competent cast assist the star. Edwin Carewe directed this Louis B. Mayer production.

There is a moral behind "Habit" for those indulgent parents who grant their offspring their every wish. It tells the story of a pampered child, of her desire for automobiles and pretty clothes and a father who has reached the end of his resources, of two suitors for her hand. One wealthy, the other a struggling architect and of her decision to marry the poor man and give up some of her expensive tastes.

Miss Harris has the role of the spoiled daughter of wealth. She imparts to the role the needed aristocratic touch and Cameraman Robert Kurrie has given her some especially pleasing close-ups. Ethel Grey Terry plays with spirit the part of Mary Charters; Walter McGrail is a splendid heavy; William Lawrence an ideal choice for the suitor opposite Miss Harris, and Emmet King convincing as Fletcher, the father. Throughout the play there is an allegorical spirit of "Habit." Here is some excellent double photography. A great deal of footage is devoted to introducing the theme, and as an added punch a train wreck is shown with the engineer, a victim of the habit of gambling, asleep. Just at this tense moment she awakens and finds her father and suitor by her side. She is cured of her habit of extravagance by her dream and agrees to wed Marshall.

LARRY SEMON IN

THE SPORTSMAN

(VITAGRAPH)

A sultan's palace and hareem give many possibilities for the wild and strenuous play of fun in which Larry Semon and fellow players customarily wallow, and offer a comedy that will bring a succession of guffaws from the devotees of screen humor. The picture begins with Semon's vain efforts to bag a jackrabbit. There are exciting scenes about a floor trap that leads to subterranean regions, and when a lion comes to the fore, things move even more speedily. It is the usual mad melee that follow—the pursuit and pursued alternating in their successes at escaping this trap and then that. The end is a distinct surprise.
NAZIMAOVA IN BILLIONS
(METRO)

An adaptation from the French presenting Nazimova in a society role and one entirely different from any previously carried by her. Interesting for the diversity of skill she displays. Entertaining and attractively set. Directed by Ray C. Smallwood.

Because it contains a curious combination of characteristics of Nazimova’s, pleases the popular fancy and at the same time delights the intelligent, high grade patronage which will catch the amount of subtle humor that underlies the whole piece. Through getting this feature, its appeal should be more universal than some of her more spectacular vehicles. It is a unique and peculiarly French drama. It is less dramatic—tragically dramatic—than anything the star has yet essayed, for she assumes the role of a Dutch heroine of the whole play. The star herself is the usual fascinating person, a creature of varying emotions, characteristically strange and lovely in her fantastic gowns that would approach the barbaric if affected by another type of woman.

Nazimova’s role of a Russian princess. At a California beach colony she meets Owen Carey Krackelfelder, a millionnaire, who desires every woman in the resort appears to revolve. Piqued by the apparent reverence for his millions, she refuses his offer of marriage, informing him that he has been measured in billions against the millions that he has to offer. She discovers in him a poet whom she praises, and he wins her love next day. When a compromise threatens him, the plot of conniving parents to make them marry the daughter, she shields him, but escapes from the Mountain Inn wherein the party has been sojourning, knowing that her identity has become known. Later she learns that he has returned to his attire, having lost his fortune, and visits him to compel him to recognize their real love for one another. The billons that stand in the way of his wayward, by a convenient confiscation by the government, and all ends romantically and happily.

EVA NOVAK IN THE TORRENT
(UNIVERSAL)

A five reel program picture hand-capped with a familiar melodramatic tale based on the marooned couple on a desert island idea, somewhat inexplicable and brutal in spots, but helped considerably by the director’s efforts at reproduction and his selection of picturesque backgrounds and the cameraman’s well lighted night scenes. A generally acceptable program offering.

"The Torrent" was begun with the handicap of the old story of two young people who became marooned on a deserted island and after falling in love escape to cut across the sea and that one of them is not free. The story was written by George Rix and was published in "Telling Tales under the Sun and the Sunset."

Considering the picture in the light of the handicap under which it was begun Director Stuart Paton has done well. Much of the action is necessarily of the "wild" sort, but by reproduction the director has injected enough of life into some of the characters to make them at times recognizable, and therefore, moderately interesting figures in their tribulations. On the other hand, the subject got out of bounds on several occasions. The torturing of both the hero and the heroine at the hands of whiskers on the island is not only beyond the bounds of logic, but it is brutal. There seems to be no reason for the mad head of the distillers making the hero a captive and then thrust- ing firebrands under his nose to make him tell where the girl is hiding. Nor does there seem to be any reason for the murder of "Red Mike" by the gang head.

Also it does not seem feasible that the heavy—over-the-top—or resort to such means as roping the hero at hands and feet to four stakes at the water's edge, so that the rising tide will engulf him just as he is about to realize the hero is a federal agent. Yet these things occur. And the picture suffers accordingly. As long as the story sticks to digestible occurrences it is palatable.

Carefully chosen backgrounds give the production a picturesque atmosphere and help it along considerably. The art of night photography is also an aid. The acting of Eva Novak as the heroine, and Jack Verrill as the hero, is commendable in the story's trying times and "wild" incidents are too much of a burden to overcome and the picture cannot be said to be more than a satisfactory program offering.

SPECIAL CAST IN THE 100TH CHANCE
(STOLL FILM CORP. OF AMERICA)

A pleasing, well-rounded production of a triangle play, simply but interestingly told and carrying an anti-climactic thrill with some good shots of a steeple chase race. Should find general favor.

The third release of the Stoll Film Corporation of America, "The Hundredth Chance," is an adaptation of Ethel M. Dell's story of the efforts of two men, one an unscrupulous lord, and the other a vaguely handsome, vain, a sensitive girl. Driven to despair by the tactics of her brutish stepfather, the girl, to help her invalid brother, marries the suave, suave, suave, who shall come between them until all doubt as to her love for him is dispelled from her mind. She is again thrown with the lord and then begins the battle between the two men seeking to win her, a battle that gives the story the major part of its action. In England, where the story is set, and where class distinctions are made, this conflict has extra dramatic weight.

Yet the story, while simple and without any really great moments, is always interesting, largely because it is so carefully handled. First the groom has the upper hand, then the lord. Meanwhile doubt beclouds the girl’s mind. Her indecision gives the story its suspense. The climax is reached on the opening day of the steeple chase race, which, by the way, has a thrill or two. The heroine is drugged by the suave lord, but is rescued when the groom comes to report the winning of the race by the horse named "The Hundredth Chance." And as the girl's indecision is at an end, the groom wins his second 100 to 1 shot in a day.

A great factor in the building up of the story's interest is the exceptionally smooth running continuity, which develops the plot in an intelligent and effort and makes the most of its dramatic values. The exterior scenes are quaint and colorful and, having been made in England, agreeably harmonious. The interiors strike one as lacking somewhat in the quality of estudium.

The cast is made up of English players. Mary Glynn is the heroine, and though from the American viewpoint she makes the character too sweetly pathetic, she gives it a thrilling sort of a common amount of innate ability which.

under vigorous direction, would help her develop into a first rate screen personality. Sydney Seaward is big and virile as the groom, while Denison Ames, would soon be seen as a parting of "Red Mike" by the gang head.

SHIRLEY MASON IN FLAME OF YOUTH
(FOX)

A Belgian love story with the star in captivating role and the whole highly meritable and certain to please everywhere. Wholesome and tender romance set in background uncommonly attractive and picturesque. Directed by Howard M. Mitchell.

Enough of the elements of the ideal photography are blended in this picture to assure its universal appeal. Youth and romance properly purified seldom miss the popularity mark with any patronage. They are here in tenderness and patience, as sweet and clean and natural as the little star herself. Her success in "Merely Mary Ann" has been followed by another vehicle as good. This picture proves that it can be and has been done. The role that she carries is ideal for the ingenuous imperfections in which she excels.

The story appears as Bebe, a flower girl of Belgium, surrounded by several live pets who will delight juvenile patrons. Bebe, on her seventeenth birthday anniversary, kneeling at the grave of her foster father, captures Victor Fleming, an artist from the Latin Quarter of Paris. A peasant neighbor, Jeantot, is also devoted to her. The artist wins her love and in a crisis impelled by the visit of a Parisian woman who loves him, beseeches Bebe to give him back to her, he spurns the city woman for the little peasant girl. Bebe points the way to happiness for Margaret, the woman, and believes the promise of Fleming that he will soon return for her. After months of vain waiting, believing that he is ill, she goes to him in Paris. She comes upon him in the midst of a mad studio orgy, is disillusioned, and returns with the faithful Jeantot to her home. There is promise that in time the heart wounds of Bebe will be some comfort for her.

The atmosphere of the Belgian country in peace time is caught in a picturesque way for background. Scenes are stage in the Brabant region, a country so familiar to ex-soldiers of the World War that they offer a point worth stressing in advertising and exploitation. Flashes of "The Angelus" and a Bethlehem manger scene, used at the opening of the feature, shown brief and beautifully, are particularly noteworthy. Philo McCullough plays the part of Fleming in an able way. Raymond McKee gives an exceptionally good performance in the role of Jeantot and Betty Schade is attractive as Margret.

Robertson-Cole Finds Exhbitors Appreciate Press Book Features

"What You'll See" and "Catch Lines" Are Used in Scores of Ads Received at Home Office—Make Special Effort for Marsh Film

In its triple advertising line service, such as is illustrated in the press book, which it has just published on "The Little 'Fraid Lady," starring Mae Marsh, Robertson-Cole adds to its services to the exhibitor. The Rot idea is that the distributor is only half done when he has delivered the picture. Along with it must go a complete advertising and exploitation service if the full duty of the distributor is done.

Two New Pages Offered

Realizing the need of a great variety of advertising lines, which will pull business, Robertson-Cole is now giving the exhibitor, in addition to the regular three full pages of display advertisements, two other pages known as "What You'll See" and "Catch Lines." They are of broadest use to the exhibitor. He may draft them for his newspaper ads, his lobby display, his special posters, his program or his house organ.

Week after week, as the advertisements used by exhibitors all over the country come into the Robertson-Cole office proof is given of the effectiveness of these two auxiliary pages. Ad after ad is the first thing to please the "What You'll See" and "Catch Lines," were utilized as they stood.

So far there has not been a single advertisement which has completely lost its identity as established in the Robertson-Cole press book. In a majority of the newspaper insertions the exhibitors gave "What You'll See" and "Catch Lines" the prominent position.

List "What You'll See."

For "The Little 'Fraid Lady," Robertson-Cole offered the following as "What You'll See.":

"Mae Marsh, the elf-girl of the screen, in a story of fascinating whimsicalities. The daughter of a girl of the make-believe of a big city found adventure and love in the heart of the country."

"A display of a hero's dog nearly caused the death of a lovable child."

"The peculiar situation when a man unknowingly offers as a present some of the girl's own handwork."

"How an evil father can think evil of his innocent daughter."

"How rum-runners smuggle their goods and how they killed a revenue officer."

"How the Little 'Fraid Lady' dared to face an armed and vindictive man."

"The wild scenes at a mask ball given by a madman and his models."

"How a girl, detained as a witness, escaped from the home of a judge."

"The intense courtroom scene where surprise succeeds surprise and the mystery is revealed."

"Catch Lines" Are Given

Some of the "Catch Lines" read as follows:

"She sought to escape the make-believe of a great city, but the city followed her in all its disguises."

"She painted for a living, but she could not buy a dog cracker with her earnings."

"For what mysterious reason could a young girl want to bury herself in the woods with no company other than a dog."

"The adults talked of her, but it was the baby boy's intuition that he was the real lady's 'niece' that put them on the track."

"To most girls a thousand dollars would mean new dresses, etc., but to the Little 'Fraid Lady' it meant that much food."

"The Little 'Fraid Lady' is a screen adaptation of the novel, "The Girl Who Lived in a Tree.""

Pearl White Has an Exciting Sea Chase On Christmas Voyage

Pearl White was among the passengers who arrived in New York on December 24 aboard the Victoria from Bermuda. Miss White caught the steamship eight miles at sea in order to keep a promise to be in New York for her Christmas dinner.

Miss White told friends she would be back from the island on Christmas day without fail. Her family prepared an elaborate dinner for her at her Bayside home. In order to keep her appointment it was necessary for her to sail from Bermuda at noon on December 22. The Victoria sailed all right, but Miss White was not aboard. Director J. Earl Dawley completed his last scenes on the island for "Woman or Tiger," Miss White's next picture for Fox, at exactly 11:45 o'clock, and the company was several miles from the pier. Then began a race by automobile for the boat. When Miss White dashed up to the pier the smoke of the steamer was just disappearing in the distance.

She had turned back to her hotel when two majors arrived with the proffer of a British monoplane to take the star of the ship at sea. When the aeroplane with the two Majors and Miss White on board, came in sight of the craft, it let down a rope ladder. Miss White climbed down into the lifeboat, and was put aboard the ship eight miles out to sea.

First National Xmas Party Held in N. Y.
Headquarters Staff Meets at Invitation of High Executive

Christmas spirit was in ample evidence at Associated First National offices on the holiday eve, when as many of the big staff as could find room on the busy presidents and corridors leading thereto gathered at the invitation of Manager James D. Williams in a festive party which included a number of the editors and representatives of the trade journals as invited guests.

Addresses Assemblage

Mr. Williams, in response to the spontaneous applause which greeted his entrance, mounted the dias alongside a burlly Santa Claus, admirably impersonated by Arthur Leslie of the publicity department, and expressed the evident pleasure it gave him to see such a large First National staff, "a family, the size of which I hardly realized," he said.

Commenting on the wonderful growth of the organization, Mr. Williams thanked and congratulated the whole body of employees assembled for the wonderful spirit of loyalty and cooperation which permeated the whole organization and to which every individual employee whole-heartedly contributed.

"For Highest Results"

"When I say 'employees,'" continued the manager, "I would remind you that we are one and in every single one of you we depend as a large organization and upon you to give your best work in all the things which make us through.

With Mr. Williams' address went seasonable tokens of regard to each member of the organization. In the spirit of good fun and merriment, C. L. Yearsley and other heads of the department followed Mr. Williams' address with humorous "copy" and sketches, touching on popular personalities among members of the organization other than First National, and with only such items as appeared at the various trade papers, adorned the walls. Good cheer was dispensed, a mistletoe bough played havoc with Old Doctor Formality and two hours of Christmas eve fun came to a close with hearty handshakes and happy wishes for the holiday.

Advertisers Gridiron
Banquet in February
Tickets for Brilliant Affair
In N. Y. Practically All Sold

The Associated Motion Picture Advertisers will give their famous annual Gridiron banquet, in honor of the profession, at the Biltmore hotel. This is considered the most brilliant affair of the year in the opinion of the Advertising Age, P. A. It bears the same relation to the organization that the Lambs' Gamble and Friars' Frolic is to the Lambs and Friars Clubs.

Tickets Are Limited

This function is patterned after the famous Gridiron dinner of the Washington Press Club of Washington, D. C., which is attended each year by the president, senators and congressmen. At this affair the famous men in Washington are caricatured by the members of the club. Only a limited number of tickets have been issued and they have been attended by many of the biggest men in the motion picture industry. While tickets were distributed to the members at their last weekly meeting they were practically unobtainable. The advance demand for them was unprecedented.

Entertainment Is Lavish

The entertainment this year will be even more lavish than previous events. Preparations for this affair have been in progress for the past month for brilliancy and elaborateness, it is believed it will outdo anything ever offered in the motion picture industry.

Educational Reports

Big Demand for Steele Industrial Pictures

Educational reports that strong demands are coming from all sections of the country for two-reel comedy dramas, with the industrial life of the theater background, which have been written and produced by Rufus E. Steele, Saturday Evening Post cartoonist, are especially in demand, with his pictures, in two reels, are "The Big Idea," which was published in December, and "The Kick Back," scheduled for January. There have been many applications for these pictures from large employers and from various community organizations, but all of these have been declined by Steele. Educational believes that theatre owners should have the benefit of their patronage asset. It is declared that these pictures will appeal to every man in the community who works for wages and salaries and that they will be fully appreciated by employers and all who are concerned with the industrial prosperity of the country.

Unionism or the open shop does not enter into the pictures, it is said, but that they are aimed against Bolshevik unrest and un-Americanism.

The Square Shooter, with Buck Jones.—As fine a Western as you could ask for. Good crowd for me.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy theatre, Hazen, Ark.—Neighborhood patronage.

Merely Mary Ann, with Shirley Mason.—This is a poor picture. The plot is an old worn out one.—J. G. Varnell, Princess theatre, Piedmont, Ala.—Small town patronage.

Twins of Suffering Creek, with William Russell.—Not much to this one though it went over. Russell's best work for Fox is Sacred Silence.—F. Zimmerman, Rex theatre, Aurora, Minn.—Small town patronage.

The Little Wanderer, with Shirley Mason.—A splendid picture. Please everyone who saw it.—J. G. Varnell, Princess theatre, Piedmont, Ala.—Small town patronage.

Thieves, with Gladys Brockwell.—This picture pleased about 50 per cent. Below the average.—E. Blinglaub, Cozy theatre, Nebo, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Heartstrings, with William Farnum.—Picture is all right. Star's acting is all right, but Farnum is not the actor for this play. He handles a gun more satisfactorily than a violin.—George E. Taylor, Idle Hour theatre, Dunlap, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Orphan, with William Farnum.—It is a Western that you can push to the limit. It will certainly make good. Farnum fine in this.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy theatre, Hazen, Ark.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Untamed, with Tom Mix.—A very good picture. Have seen this star in better pictures. However, he never made a poor one.—J. G. Varnell, Princess theatre, Piedmont, Ala.—Small town patronage.

The Hell Ship, with Madaline Traverse.—I consider this a fair program picture. I have run worse pictures than this.—E. Blinglaub, Cozy theatre, Nebo, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Tumble In. Theatre, Sinton, Tex.—Neighborhood patronage.

It's a Great Life, with a special cast. — A good high brow picture. Pleased the better class.—Pfeiffer Bros., Grand Opera House, Kenton, O.—Neighborhood patronage.

JES' CALL ME JIM, with Will Rogers.—If anything more was needed to clinch our claim that Rogers is the idol of the screen out here in the short grass country JES' CALL ME JIM did it. Rogers has again endeared himself to his patrons as no other star has ever done. Clarence Badger, who directs Rogers, has added another plume to his headgear by the masterful manner in which he directed this production. There is no must, no slush, no improbable situations, no sickening love scenes, no strange holds, nothing but 100 per cent entertainment and 100 per cent satisfaction. Rogers didn't even lay a finger on the lady he married. Can you beat it? That's the kind of picture sensible people want. Will other directors please take notice? When you beat Will Rogers, Irene Rich and Little Jimmy you don't, that's all. Get the picture and play it for an extended run at advanced prices. It's worth one of your best efforts. — C. Jenkins, Auditorium theatre, Neligh, Neb.

The Joyous Liar, with J. Warren Kerrigan.—Not much to it.—Herman Bloomeke, Opera House, Springfield, Minn.—Home patronage.

Alias Jimmy Valentine, with Bert Lytell.—Top price 35c. Stars cast and photography excellent, but story has poor ending. Improvable.—Giacoma Bros., Crystal theatre, Tombstone, Ariz.—General patronage.

Old Lady 31, with Emma Dunn.—A charming picture. Cannot be fully appreciated by those under 25, but how it does please the old people. So refreshing from the usual scenario material, and it is well worth advanced admission price. Must use the old airs in music to complete its atmosphere.—Jean Lightner, Regent theatre, Alameda, Cal.—Neighborhood patronage.

Old Lady 31, with Emma Dunn.—One of the most interesting pictures in months.—Giacoma Bros., Crystal theatre, Tombstone, Ariz.—General patronage.

Paramount

Remodeling Her Husband, with Dorothy Gish.—Good picture. Drew well and pleased all.—H. J. McBeth, Gem theatre, Ord, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

ON WITH THE DANCE, with Mac Murray.—I wish I could tell all small town exhibitors how fine a production this play really is. It afforded an evening of rare entertainment. Am showered with compliments. The company sent out preliminary letters to my patrons. An orchestra helped wonderfully. Charged 50 and 75 cents. Mac Murray's dancing was worth the price of admission.—Philip Rand, Rex theatre, Salmon, Idaho.—Small town patronage.

Mary's Ankle, with Douglas MacLean and Doris May.—Pleased Saturday, Sunday audience. Played this with Arbuckle's Coney Island which is a scream. These make excellent laughable combination.—Philip Rand, Rex theatre, Salmon, Idaho.—Small town patronage.

Counterfeit, with Elsie Ferguson.—Were warned against this one, but our patrons liked it, and many said so. Not Ferguson's best by any means, but was fault of story, not star.—S. Olson, Pastime theatre, Delavan, Wis.—Neighborhood patronage.

Away Goes Prudence, with Billie Burke.—Time wasted. Another effort gone wrong.—Giacoma Bros, Crystal theatre, Tombstone, Ariz.—General patronage.

WILLIAM DUNCAN

The Miracle of Love, with a special cast.—This was good, but did not draw. Would have drawn better if stars had been featured.—S. Olson, Pastime theatre, Delavan, Wis.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Woman in the Suitcase, with Enid Bennett.—Very good picture. Pleased 100 per cent.—H. J. McBeth, Gem theatre, Ord, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

Quicksand, with Dorothy Dalton.—Failed to register.—J. Herbert Talbert, Legion theatre, Norwich, Kans.—Small town patronage.

The Six Best Cellars, with Bryant Washburn.—Most of Bryant's admirers were disappointed in this one. Nothing to it.—W. W. Wolz, Star theatre, Lake City, Ia.—General patronage.

The City Sparrow, with Ethel Clayton.—Very good picture. Ethel Clayton always pleases patrons here.—Homer Thompson, Ruby theatre, Three Forks, Mont.

A Lady in Love, with Ethel Clayton.—Good picture and good crowd, and everybody satisfied.—John Hafer, Princess theatre, Donora, Pa.—Neighborhood patronage.

Firing Line, with Irene Castle.—Nothing extra. Fail to see how this can be called a special.—C. P. Buswell, Empress theatre, Akron, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

All too dark.—Mrs. James Webb, Cozy theatre, Union, Ore.—Small town patronage.

Arizona, with Douglas Fairbanks—Never a dull moment in this picture. Star always popular.—J. Herbert Talbert, Ritz theatre, Norwich, Kan.—Small town patronage.

YOU NEVER CAN TELL, with Bebe Daniels.—Great. But why not? It's a Realar, and that's sufficient. Bebe great in this. Broke our house record.—J. Paul Swickard, University theatre, Los Angeles, Calif.—Neighborhood patronage.

Sweet Lavender, with Mary Miles Minter.—Not quite up to Minter's standard, but it pleased all Minter fans. The story had no pep or action, being a little too slow in parts. However, we did a nice business, but disappointed as to drawing power.—Mrs. J. A. Dostal, Ideal theatre, Omaha, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

Robertson-Cole

Her Purchase Price, with Bessie Barriscale.—The women seem to like her pictures, but I cannot see why they do. This picture was only fair to my viewpoint of story.—Clarence Langacher, Opera house, New Glarus, Wis.

The Flame of Hellgate, with Beatrice Micheleina.—If your patrons like the old-time Western drama, book this one. Plenty of pep.—O. Rodgers, Colonial theatre, Ellensburg, Wash.—General patronage.

ness at advanced price. Select never disappoints.—S. C. Hagan, Palace theatre, Mound City, Ill.

Marooned Hearts, with a special cast.—Our patrons are enjoying the daily Tar- celle drawings in this good drawing card. We like Lena better in Out of the Snows. Both are good pictures. Don't be afraid to advertise them.—S. Olson, Pastime theatre, Delavan, Wis.—Neighborhood patronage.

Everybody's Sweetheart, with Olive Thomas.—Big business for a two-day run, and right in the heart of Christmas shopping. Pleased 100 per cent of the people and a tonic for a rundown box office.—Mrs. J. A. Dostal, Ideal theatre, Omaha, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

THE WONDERFUL CHANCE, with Eugene O'Brien. I ran all of the 1920 O'Brien pictures and was satisfied and so were my patrons, in fact on all Select pictures. Yet this new 1921 picture proved to be a wonder.—J. O. Le Roche, Vialta theatre, Clifton, Ill.—Small town patronage.

The Poor Simp, with Owen Moore.—Will please. The colored guy was the "whoopee character" in the picture. The Despereate Hero and this fellow Moore had better get busy.—Jack Cairns, Brooklyn theatre, Detroit, Mich.

United Artists

Romance, with Doris Keane.—Very high-class production. Great care and expense have been lavishly bestowed on this story, but it will not get money for the small house. It would cost too much for advertising the play, of course, there is always a limit.—Jack Cairns, Brooklyn theatre, Detroit, Mich.

Suds, with Mary Pickford.—This drew big for one day. It frightfully the second. The ending killed the whole picture, as otherwise it pleased. Pickford still one of the big "aces" in the business.—Mrs. J. A. Dostal, Ideal theatre, Omaha, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

Universal

Pink Tights, with Gladys Walton.—Very clever program picture. Above the average. People, pleased and business good.—J. Paul Swickard, University theatre, Los Angeles, Calif.—Neighborhood patronage.

Honor Bound, with Frank Mayo.—This did not please. Naked pictures the public cannot and will not tolerate. At least the better class. No wonder we are continually fighting censorship. It is the business's own fault when such as this are put out.—Mrs. J. A. Dostal, Ideal theatre, Omaha, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

Sundown Slim, with Harry Carey.—If Carey thinks he can write stories for pictures, he has another thought coming. His last three pictures show it. I'm through.—Jack Cairns, Brooklyn theatre, Detroit, Mich.

Hitchin' Posts, with Frank Mayo.—Good picture and good acting.—S. Olson, Pastime theatre, Delavan, Wis.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Girl in the Rain, with Ann Cor-

Human Stuff, with Harry Carey.—Fine picture in every respect.—Hoffman Bros., Happy Hour theatre, Burke, S. D.—Neighborhood patronage.

Hitchin' Posts, with Frank Mayo.—Would call this Mayo's best picture to date. River scenes are beautiful and the action holds throughout. Fine business

"Chick" Kepple, who has been battling with the block in an effort to obtain a flat, is considering pitching a tent on the lake front. It has its advantages—plenty of ventilation and no rent, but—

Oscar Florenz and Joe Lyon deny the report that they are to leave for the coast early in February to appear in mob scenes in several super-special comedies.

Harry Marks, former manager of the Majestic theatre at Louisville, Ky., has joined the staff of Balaban and Katz and is reported to be in line for the assistant managership of the new B. & K. theatre, the Ambassador, in the loop.

"The Charm School" has been held over a second week at the Randolphe theatre as a result of the crowds it attracted seven days of its run. It is to be followed by "Mid-Summer Madness."

Ben Readall, managing the Stoll office, was pleasantly surprised Christmas eve when the salesmen presented him with a gold-mounted carving set and a merchandise check. Considering that the Stoll office has only been open a month, it is apparent that Ben makes friends quickly.

Mary Rubens of Joliet, after signing up for a block of Paramount pictures, tried to take someone in the Paramount office to dinner. Every one had a date that couldn't be broken. It was tough luck, as a good many exhibitors would have expected to be taken out to dinner instead of acting as host.

A. R. Rosselle is back at the Robertson-Cole office after closing a contract which assures the showing of "Kismet" over the Enterprise Theatre Company circuit house in South Bend, Elkhart and Michigan City. The price paid is said to be the highest in the history of the theatre company, "Kismet" will be shown at the Oliver in South Bend at $1 top.

I. L. Ballard is back peddling the output of United Artists. Not a new line for I. L., for he formerly—before going to the Pathé, to be exact—talked up the merits of the "Big Four."

Everybody should have met Cecil Ma- herry at the train on his return last week from Oklahoma. He's a sharpshooter and returned with a mess or two of quail. The Goldwyn manager looks none the worse for his sojourn in the "Bisons."

You have to catch Carl Hartell between jumps these days. The home office of Retheratt spotted a good man in Carl moons ago and since then they have been giving him added territory to supervise. The latest addition is Kansas City. Last week he did a turn at the Milwaukee.

Eddie Silverman last week was hiking through Indiana closing some prosperous contracts. Such is the life of the Select manager. Indianapolis isn't a bad town. neither is Fort Wayne; in fact, the Hoosiers themselves aren't half bad.

Everybody's glad to hear of H. A. O'Brien's recovery and welcomes him back to the street. After two months' illness he displayed a real comeback by turning in four Paramount contracts on the first day. Germs nor nothing else can keep a good man down.

Harry Lorch is going to leave us soon; not for good, however, just going to show 'em out in Omaha. Des Moines and Sioux City how to get S. R. O. crowds on Gold- wyn's "Earthbound." The picture opens at the Rialto in Omaha on January 9; at the Princess, Sioux City, on January 16; at the Des Moines, Des Moines, on January 23, and the Colonial, Sioux City, on January 30. This schedule will complete the first runs in this district.

This bit of news from the Hoddkinson office, W. F. Seymour, central supervisor. reports that Lubliner and Trinz have closed a contract to play "The Broken Gate" over their entire circuit. Not so bad, Phil.

Just to remind you that E. C. Jensen, former district supervisor for Goldwyn, is still active in the game. Decidedly set now as head of the New York office of Fitzpatrick & McElroy.

No wonder Saul Opiezer presented Sales Manager Steve Montgomery and the force at Paramount with a few boxes of good cigars the day following Christmas. A new eight-pound boy is nothing to sneeze at. Simultaneously with the arrival of the stork Saul played the first Paramount production of the new first run contract he has signed for the Hyde Park theatre.

Cresdon Smith has been showing the town to C. Thornton, assistant general sales manager of United Artists. The latter spent a week in the Windy City, going from here to Buffalo to open a new office.

"Red" Johnson is now covering the North Side for Select. The new member of Al Gallis' staff resigned recently from the office of Milt Simon.

E. Binger has wired the Goldwyn office that he will open his new theatre at Fort Madison, Iowa, on or about January 15. The message would indicate that the faws of the Iowa town can expect a Goldwyn program.

When you see Joe Hoop rushing down the street or skidding in and out of doors, don't interfere with his progress. He's a mighty busy man these days. His new Fort Armstrong theatre at Rock Island, Ill., will be opened to the public on either January 19 or 26. For his opening performance he will present either William DeMille's "Mid-Summer Madness" or Cecil DeMille's "Forbidden Fruit." The event probably will attract several Chicagoans.

A little enemy fire into the offices of Independent Films the other day. His first point of attack was Eddy Eckles, the presid- ent, who went to bed with a slight attack of the flu, but sooner did the president resume his duties than Harry Rice, business manager, phoned the office that the grippe necessitated his absence from the office.

Alfred Parker, the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company publicist, spent several days indoors last week nursing a bad cold, and last week on the job as manager, and was among those present at the dinner given by Watterson K. Rothacker to the staff at the Edgewater Beach hotel on the evening of December 29.

Jones, Linick & Schafer, just to start the new year right, have added to the Mid- ville program at McVicker's theatre the First National comedy feature, "Married Life." And it's getting a big hand at every performance, too.

SHOTS AND MISSES
By Mac

Art Toffler was a busy man as of Jan. 29, being ready to become a past event by moving the selected films exchange to their new location at 207 South WALNUT Ave., so all would be settling pretty, bright and early for the rush of set-ins arranged for their big serial with the arrival of Dec. Incidentally we suppose Matt Sugg is bringing some more good bills from New York, where he has been spending the past week.

F. F. Tarbell, manager of the local Vitaphone exchange, was a busy host Dec. 29-30 entertaining FRANK REID, manager of the Pittsburgh office, and Tom DLANEY, manager of the Omaha office. Nothing doing. We tried our best to keep them here for the New Year’s eve frolic, being said benefits the ‘home call’ prevailed with our best wishes again with em.

Contrary to prevailing rumors, MANAGER Brown himself informs us that the Moir theatres would continue under his management. Seeing as possession is nine points of the law, looks like this argument is settled right here for keeps.

Jack McFarland, manager for the American Film exchange at Detroit, spent the week-end, or rather the year-end, visiting his many Chi film pals and tells us Detroit looks better every day to him and that general conditions in his territory register a healthy normality.

With Joe Lyon holding “64000” the British lion, through the Canadian banks, was prevailed upon to contribute to the popular Celts bankroll. We hope it was plenty, Joe, for with the heap of bargains being offered along State Street now, it takes no dough at all to buy a couple of neckties.

“Chu” FLORINE is back again with us. Understand he takes charge of the short subject department for Pioneer Film Corporation of Illinois. Best o’ luck, “Chu,” and much gratitude for your holiday felicitations. They were surely the creation of master minds of the hygiene days.

The charming Miss EVELYN ZAMBRENO, who danced for the benefit of the Orphans’ Fund, at Evanston, Dec. 29, was acclaimed by all present at the Town and Country club the premier star of their popular program. This little five-year-old Miss danced with such professional technique, the critics of the big Chicago papers offered homage to her.

With U of California slipping some considerable pole over the Buckeye champs of the West Conference, a pittance is what we let Capt. FRANK MARSHALL get back to Cleveland without looking him for a few leaves of the green. All right, Frank, see you next game.

After carefully perusing the casualty list of the Groot, teller after New Year’s eve we are felicitous to note no film dignitaries were present during the zero hour. Guess most of the men were at OASIS FLORINE’S hangover party devoting the cracker and milk diet as purveyed.

FRANK HAMMOND of the Hammond Amusement Enterprises, just arrived in Chi in time to celebrate, having concluded his several weeks’ sojourn in the Bermudas. With his usual loquacity, Frank says, “It’s some place,” and judging from the coat o’ tan he brought back, heavy woolen socks and galoshes are taboo!

J. H. ROWLEY in Durant

DURANT, OKLA.—J. H. Rowley of the Rob and Rowley Theatre company, which operates motion picture shows in Oklahoma and Texas, has arrived here from Dallas and assumed charge of the Liberty theatre.

Fox Reports Heavy Sales On Pearl White Picture

Sales records of Fox Film Corporation list among the most heavily contracted subject by exhibitors Pearl White in Henri Bernstein’s great drama, “The Thief.” Considering the long run “The Thief” enjoyed as a play at the Empire theatre, New York, its successful tours and the frequency of its presentation by stock companies throughout the United States, the staying power of this remarkable story stands out notable among the events in filmdom. When “The Thief” was first produced as a play, it was so eminently successful that its immediate translation into almost every language of civilized peoples gave it a hearing in all the big cities. Now, the Fox exchanges report, the smallest and most remote hamlets of America are recording heavy business with this seemingly perennial attraction.

Can You Qualify for Screen Authorship?

A national educational institution to train photoplaywrights by correspondence during spare time at home has been established in Los Angeles to meet the needs of the motion picture industry. This institution is directed by experienced writers sponsored by Cecil B. DeMille, Thos. H. Ince and other prominent producers. The field for photoplaywrights is lucrative and applicants drawn from every walk of life respond to the call. Only persons naturally endowed with the gift of creative imagination and dramatic insight, however, can hope for success in this profession, and applicants must be selected accordingly.

All applicants, therefore, are requested to apply by mail to Frederick Palmer, Director of Education, for the Palmer Home-Test Questionnaire to determine their fitness to undertake this course of vocational training.

This questionnaire, scientifically compiled by Professor Malcolm Shaw MacLean, A.M., formerly a Northwestern University instructor of English composition, in collaboration with H. H. Van Loan, noted photoplay author-producer, is the first test of its kind ever adopted by an educational institution.

The purpose of this questionnaire is to help applicants determine the degree of creative imagination possessed by them and consequently their eligibility to enroll in this curriculum. If successful in making this home test, the Palmer Plan of Instruction in Photoplay Writing is available to you. Address all inquiries to:

MAURICE TOURNEUR'S
masterpiece
THE LAST OF THE MOHICANS
By James Fenimore Cooper

"29 SEVENTH AVENUE, NEW YORK CITY"
The 24 Sheet that scared New York

"The most amazing American Melodrama ever screened" is the right way to characterize this tremendous picture. Up-to-the-minute and absolutely breathless in its action, it will give your people the biggest thrills of their lives in a production de-luxe in which not a single detail has been neglected. Here is one picture you can book without viewing.

Universal has done it again! Has developed an exploitation idea that will work in every town and city of the country just exactly as it worked in New York—and it nearly scared New York to death.

A series of four posters was used:

"Do you play cards on Sunday?"
"Do you motor on Sunday?"
"Do you work on Sunday?"
"Do you dance on Sunday?"

After these had been on the boards four weeks another 24-sheet was posted announcing Priscilla Dean in "Outside the Law."

For four weeks all New York saw these posters—and thought only of the proposed Blue Laws—and talked of nothing else. When the advertisement was disclosed, that title, "Outside the Law," had been fixed in their minds as nothing else has been fixed for years.

It will work exactly the same way in your town, wherever you are, whatever the character of its people. See your Universal Exchange today as to these tremendously successful posters. A complete description of the campaign will be found in your Help book, which is now in the mail.

"OUTSIDE THE LAW"
The action in this serial is nearly all out of doors, covering sky, sea and land, and most of the drama is staged in America. That is what makes its breathless adventures seem still more strange. One look at any episode of this startling serial at your Universal Exchange will show you its tremendous power.

"The LOVE LIGHT"

has its moments of delightful humor—the quaintest comedy touches imaginable—human bits that will find a response in hearts everywhere. And there are bits of pathos—moments of real heart-searching tragedy—and again, scenes of tremendous melodramatic force.

And withal, the radiant beauty and exquisite dramatic genius of Mary Pickford herself, the foremost artiste of the screen.

"The Love Light" is indeed a picture to be remembered.

"Torchy," the famous red-headed office-boy, has a 100% appeal to motion picture audiences. Announces

ESTABLISHMENT OF

FINE ARTS CITY

More than 700 acres of ground in Jacksonville have been purchased by Fine Arts Pictures, Incorporated, of New York.

Over $1,000,000.00 will be spent transforming Camp Joseph E. Johnston into a spot of beauty.

Florida's unusual advantages in producing motion pictures win over the Pacific Coast.

Murray W. Garsson, President of Fine Arts Pictures, Incorporated, starts work immediately erecting 20 complete unit studios. These studios, capable of accommodating 40 companies, will be the finest in America. Each unit distinct and separate. Every studio will give each company an entirely separate working space from all other companies using Fine Arts City.

The streets already built in Fine Arts City are paved with brick. A complete sewerage system covers the entire city; fire pumps are on every street, close enough to each other to limit fire hazard and assure perfect safety to the entire city.

In Fine Arts City there is being built a "Western City" for filming Western pictures; slums typical of Chinatown quarters; and outdoor sets of every description are being built for filming big productions. A fireproof laboratory complete in every detail is being erected.

Fine Arts City will stand for greater efficiency in the production of motion pictures.

Plus this wonderful motion picture city where complete service will be given producers, the City of Jacksonville and in fact all the people of Florida, stand behind this gigantic movement ready to extend the motion picture industry their service and a hearty welcome. This welcome means that producers will be treated in the kindest way; we assure you it will not be necessary for you to form your own buying units; we pledge ourselves to work with you hand in hand in making your productions a success from both an artistic and financial standpoint.

Why blame it on the Girl?

Like mother, like daughter. When mama worships "Who's Who" and the Social Register, her daughter will be a snob.

And when daughter gets out into the world and begins practising her snobbery, she's going to find that it takes more than sniffs to conquer said world.

is the story of 'one snob agin the world'—only the world happened to be an american college with a real football game, a college prom and a college boarding house.

Here is a picture that is brim-full of youth, laughter and cheers. It radiates laughs as the sun radiates heat—that's it's nature! It's as typically American as the Statue of Liberty!

Your theatre needs "THE SNOB." It's death to the Gloom bug. (Adapted from the William J. Neidig story in the Saturday Evening Post by Alice Eyton. Directed by Sam Wood.)

The Spoor—Berggren Achievement

By MARTIN J. QUIGLEY

THE motion picture industry the world over may join with Mr. George K. Spoor and Mr. P. John Berggren in rejoicing over the arrival of stereoscopic photography. This discovery alone represents a development of sufficient importance to give forever to the present year a conspicuous place in the annals of the motion picture art.

Stereoscopic photography has long been the dream of those who have looked forward to the artistic and commercial possibilities of this long step toward the mechanical perfection of the motion picture. Years of effort and large sums of money have been expended in the search not only by those whose efforts have been crowned with success but also by many others both here and abroad.

The absence of the suggestion of depth in motion pictures as they have been known has been generally regarded as an obstacle that would eventually have to be overcome if the logical effectiveness of the motion picture was to be achieved. Despite the most stupendous efforts with present equipment it has been apparent even to the casual observer that a great deal has been lost in the transference of the view from reality to the screen. Many expedients of more or less recent invention particularly within the scope of lighting have done much to offset the disadvantages of two dimension photography, but even these have fallen far short of achieving the desired result.

* * *

No passing encomium of the moment will add much to the lustre of the attainment of Mr. Spoor and Mr. Berggren. Through the achievement of stereoscopic photography these names have been assured of a perpetual position of prominence in the history of photographic developments. It will remain for the historian of science to write the final judgment of just where this discovery ranks in the list of significant achievements of the age and to provide for Mr. Spoor and Mr. Berggren the credit and fame to which their work entitles them.

Mr. Berggren, now unknown to the industry, will not long remain so when the product of his thought and effort of the past twelve years comes before the trade for study and inspection. At the moment it may be remarked, however, that the success which followed Mr. Berggren’s efforts in the field of stereoscopic photography comes in a most logical manner: For twelve years he has labored religiously at the task, disregarding the assertions of optical experts the world over that stereoscopic photography is an impossibility. With the true scientist’s disregard for everything save only the goal of his experiments, he followed his labors under such conditions of long hours and confinement that he finally laid his health as a sacrifice at the feet of Science.

When ordered by his physician to give up his work in Chicago and go to another climate, he replied: “I could take my body away but my heart would remain here in the laboratory with my experiments.” He starved and within the year he accomplished the task he had set before him.

* * *

Similarly logical is it that Mr. Spoor should participate in the fame and credit of the invention. Unlike Mr. Berggren, Mr. Spoor is far from unknown to the motion picture industry throughout the world. Mr. Spoor is a valid pioneer of the industry, having been wholehearted in motion picture work before there were motion picture theatres and exchanges and long before the industry as presently constituted was known. Just as he battled through the manifold obstacles of those early days of pioneering when there were prejudices and difficulties of a magnitude that are almost inconceivable at this time, he carried through on his determination to put the third dimension on the screen.

Under such circumstances mere congratulations seem a feeble thing to offer, but we do congratulate Mr. Spoor and Mr. Berggren and in doing so we feel sure we are expressing the wish of the motion picture industry the world over.

Pastor Assails Legislation Aiming at Forced Sunday Observance as Destructive

Milwaukee Minister Says
That Reformers During the Last Thirty Years Have Had 160 Bills in Congress

(Milwaukee, Wis., Jan. 11—Declaring that Sunday must be observed from reason and conviction and not by force if it is to be beneficial, the Rev. M. C. Guild of the Seventh Day Adventist church here denounced the blue law menace as destructive to man's natural rights.

"I am decidedly in favor of Sabbath and Sabbath keeping," he says, "but to be of any benefit to an individual it must be observed from reason and conviction and not by force.

Legislation Is Destructive

"If the religious organizations who are making such strenuous efforts to get religious legislation ever succeed the foundations of our government will be destroyed. This legislation will be destructive of the natural rights of men, rights that have been so dearly bought by the blood of our ancestors.

"During the last thirty years religious societies have introduced more than 160 bills in congress to compel people to observe Sunday as a religious institution. But so far congress has remained true to the constitution and has refused to legislate on this subject.

Cites Grant Belief

"If congress can compel the individual to rest on Sunday because the church demands it, it can likewise compel him to go to church on Sunday. If it can prescribe one obligation it can regulate them all.

"We believe with George Washington that every man who conducts himself as a good citizen should be protected in worshipping God according to the dictates of his conscience. General Grant has wisely said, 'Leave religion to the family altar, the church and the private school. Keep the state and the church forever separate.'"

To Manner Clerics Are Being Depicted

(Washington, D. C., Jan. 11.—The public morals board of the Methodist Episcopal Church has announced that it would open a campaign to "stop contemptuous treatment of the Protestant ministry by some cartoonists, writers and actors.

"On the stage and in motion pictures," the board's announcement said, "the Protestant minister is seldom represented except as an effeminate fool. The members of the Protestant churches are exorted to be liberal in their humor and be slow to wrath. But the members of the Roman Catholic Church do not tolerate such treatment of their priesthood, which is represented on the stage and elsewhere in a most favorable way, and whose religion is treated with consideration. The Catholics are to be commended. The Protestant has come also when Protestants should not tolerate any other than courteous treatment of their religion and ministers."

The board added that the matter was being called to the attention of ministers of all denominations and their congregations, with a request that "the observance of ordinary courtesy" be reported to the board, which would make them public.

Films Which Depict Crime Prohibited by Officials of Newark

NEWARK, N. J., Jan. 11.—Exhibitors of Newark have been notified by Director of Public Safety William J. Brennan that motion pictures depicting crime or criminals at work will not be permitted on the screens of Newark.

"During the past few months," declares Brennan, "a most careful investigation has been made into causes of the crime wave, especially concerning crimes of a spectacular nature, and my deduction has been that photoplays and stage productions have in a measure been a source of inspiration to those criminally inclined."

Police Lieutenant Frank E. Bres, director of the censorship bureau, declared that he expected no difficulty in enforcing the ban. Both Bres and Brennan stated that they had interviewed many criminals before arriving at the conclusion that pictures had a great influence on criminal minds.

Mary Pickford’s “Love Light” A Winner

United Artists star scores in entirely human story, very well acted, with humorous and pathetic touches that are sure to appeal. Settings are noteworthy, with beautiful sea pictures and rugged inland scenery. Frances Marion’s direction effective.

“T”HE Love Light,” in which Mary Pickford returns to the screen after a protracted absence, will quickly re-establish her in the hearts of any whose affections for the world’s most popular screen star have lapsed in the past few months.

The picture, although a trifle long, is in eight reels, is remarkable in several respects. Here we have Miss Pickford in a more mature role than any heretofore essayed by her; it was written and directed by a woman, Frances Marion, and unlike most of her former stories is laid in a foreign country. It is moreover excellent drama, full of dramatic “punch” without strain for effect. Seldom has a more direct appeal to the heart been so effectively put over in a picture. Its success should be instantaneous.

The story presents Mary Pickford in an Italian role. Her rippling, curling tresses, her long-lashed eyes that sparkle so bewitchingly through tears, her winning ways of mimicry and all the other elements that intrigue one’s heart, are to be seen. It was a wise hand that guided her from the romping girl of the opening scenes to the young Madonna part that she carries so excellently in later reels.

She plays with all the captivating graces and the undisputed skill that has previously established her so pre-eminently among screen artists. She has proved her right to praise for versatility, for the character is a distinct departure from any she has heretofore assumed.

She appears as Angela Carloti, first mothering two lively brothers, the younger, Mario, obviously her favorite. War comes and the elder brother goes and gives his life. Mario follows and Angela is left in charge of the lighthouse on the rocky coast. There comes into her home and her heart, Joseph, whom she hides from the law, believing him a deserting American seaman, and whom she eventually marries. Sending, at his request, a love beacon over the waves one night by means of the lighthouse lamp, she is horrified to learn later that it was the signal for the destruction of a ship bearing wounded soldiers back to their homes, among them her beloved Mario. Joseph admits his presence as a German spy, she gives him into the hands of the law, but he escapes by way of the sea and goes out of her life forever. When her baby is born, interfering villagers deprive her of the child, doubting her mental soundness, and she lives the life of a recluse. She makes a home for Giovanni, a village youth who has loved her from childhood, who was blinded in battle, and ultimately happiness comes to them after a shipwreck tragedy which restores her baby to her.

That an artist, sensitive to the harmony of the least detail, has directed the acting and planned the backgrounds, is evident. Scenes along the sea coast, in the Italian homes, villages and gardens, groups of children and pet animals, convent scenes and other contributing items are employed to a picturesque result. Lighting has been given careful attention and scenes on cliff peaks and during a storm at sea are arrestingly excellent.

The story is of the heart-gripping sort with romance and motherhood the outstanding themes. The grief-tortured little mother grieving for her baby, maddenized by her sorrows, is made so vital and living a character that this alone could make the picture powerful. It stands now one of the strongest of the elements contributing to a feature that is of prime importance among the new year’s publications and of the highest worth.

Several Italian players are cast with Miss Pickford, the majority of them new to the American screen. Raymond Bloomer, the leading man, was found in France and has played on the stage in Rome. Jean de Briac, Albert Prisco and Georgas Rigas are foreign-born and famed, and Evelyn Dunne, who plays the role of Mario, is Italian.

Exhibitors Plan Programs
For Raising Hoover Fund

Many Theatres Signifying Their Intention of Giving All or Part of Receipts on January 26 to the European Relief Council

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, Jan. 11—Exhibitors over the country are directing their attention toward arranging programs for January 26, when a concerted drive will be made by motion picture interests to raise $2,500,000 to save 250,000 starving children in Europe.

Theatre men in letters to headquarters of the committee at 122 West 49th street have signified their intentions of donating all or a part of their receipts on Motion Picture Day to the Herbert Hoover cause. In some communities exhibitors will be aided by churches and relief organizations.

Will Give Series of Special Benefits

Various means of raising money have been adopted by exhibitors. Some exhibitors will give a series of special benefit performances culminating in a special morning matinee for children on Saturday, January 29. Tickets for these special matinees will sell for $1, with the entire proceeds going to the relief fund.

Exchange Donates

The first contribution from exchange men has come to the committee in the form of a $20 check from the Metro film exchange of Philadelphia. Robert Lynch is manager. He stated he would call a meeting of exchange managers in Philadelphia to devise ways and means of concerted action in obtaining big results in the Philadelphia territory.

A sample of the hearty spirit of cooperation from exhibitors is shown in the following letter from E. D. Heins of Roanoke, Va., who operates the American, Isis, Princess, Roanoke, and Jefferson.

"I think this is a splendid spirit that is being shown. We have five theatres at our disposal. We have already paid for two full page insertions on this subject in the Roanoke papers, and we gave our Roanoke theatre several Sundays ago for a free concert at which $800 was collected for this relief work at one performance. We are again going to give the theatre this coming Sunday for the same purpose and will have several more in January. This is a suggestion that can be followed in cities where no Sunday shows are given. We also suggest that receptacles be placed in all lobbies where donations may be made."

PUBLIC TIRES OF FADS

Otto Bollman Declares That Motion Picture Patrons Today Are Demanding Plain Substantial Productions

Dial Company President Believes That Stories of a Conservative Nature Will Take Place of Sex Dramas and Daring Serials

Innovations are often huge successes and serve to relieve the situation at times. But the public soon tires of fads. They are demanding a steady amusement diet.

In this pointed statement Otto Bollman, president of Dial Film Company, gives his views on motion pictures, gained during an extended survey of the industry.

"The highly flavored sex dramas and daring serials," he continues, "all have their brief space in satisfying the public appetite, but I firmly believe that the books and tales of a more conservative element will appeal more and more strongly to the public taste as time goes on."

"We will maintain a department of exploitation whose duty it will be to pay particular regard to trade paper advertising and publicity, as well as the newspaper and fan propaganda which will be issued."

Mr. Bollman organized Dial Film Company more than two years ago. Previous to his entry into the cinema realm, he was the successful head of one of the largest piano businesses in the country. Prior to his retirement from the world of music, the organization founded by his ancestors more than a century ago was recognized as one of the staunchest institutions in America.

Mr. Bollman's business associates and competitors alike attributed his success in no small measure to his knowledge of "what the public wants."

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.—Al Lichtman, who has been associated with Adolph Zukor for a number of years, has resigned as general manager of the department of distribution of Famous-Players-Lasky Corporation. The resignation is effective immediately. S. R. Kent leaves the position of general sales manager to succeed Lichtman.

When Artcraft was formed he became general manager and has been a leading executive of Famous Players-Lasky since that time.

Mr. Lichtman's rise has been rapid. He entered the industry four years ago with General Film, working with former Postmaster General Frank H. Hitchcock in liquidating the affairs of the company. Three years ago he joined the administrative bureau of Famous in the New York office. Two months later he became a special representative in the distribution department. He was later appointed district manager of the Kansas City territory, which position he held until May 1919, when he was called to the home office to become general sales manager.

Franchise Members Showed First National’s “Big Five”

Confer With Home Office Officials at Convention in Chicago on Methods of Distributing Group of Special Productions

Associated First National’s initial group of “Big Five Productions” have been well viewed and approved by franchise holders, a number of subfranchise exhibitors and other film men.

These special shows to which First National executives have attached special significance because of the anticipated box-office value, were shown privately, along with other new pictures which the company has not yet published, at the Congress hotel on January 10, 11 and 12.

Producers and Star Are in Attendance

All franchise holders were in Chicago to attend the showings and in addition to confer with the home office officials on further details relating to the distribution of the “Big Five.”

Between fifty and sixty exhibitor members and officials, as well as other film men whose business associations are closely related with First National, were in Chicago during the convention. Marshall Neilan, Dorothy Phillips and Allen Holubar, First National producers and star, were present at the showing of the Holubar feature, “Man, Woman, Marriage,” on Tuesday, January 11. The three notables were en route from New York to the Coast.

The advance notices given the convention and pre-view attractions made good crowds turn out to see the showings. The room at the hotel used for projection purposes was far too small to accommodate the crowds, many exhibitors being turned away.

“Big Five” Listed

No public announcements were made concerning the business transacted at the executive sessions. Tentative plans for distribution of the series had been framed by executives. It remained for franchise holders to ratify these and reach a conclusion.

Pre-View Program

The “Big Five Production” and the pre-view schedule at the Chicago convention of Associated First National follows:

“The Kid,” Charlie Chaplin’s multiple reel comedy; exhibited at 2:30 o’clock Monday afternoon, January 10.

Wednesday was given over to the screening of other new productions not included in the special group.

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.—Pola Negri, star of “Passion,” will arrive in this country this week, to start work on her first Famous Players-Lasky production.
“The Kid” Is Chaplin’s Greatest

Exhibitors and press, at private view in Chicago, pronounce famous comedian’s latest contribution to First National the best he has ever made; pathos and humor nicely balanced in unusually well handled story—All comment favorably

Charles Chaplin’s widely heralded and long awaited feature length production, “The Kid,” was exhibited for the first time at a meeting of leading exhibitors and executives of the First National Expositors Circuit, Inc., at the Congress Hotel, Chicago, on Monday, January 10.

“The Kid” leaves little room for argument; there will be few if any who will not regard it as one of the greatest box office attractions since the commencement of pictures. Even stripped of the world-wide popularity of the celebrated star it would be a production that would be remembered; it is that type of picture that can return again and again.

There are many auspicious details concerned in the production: It represents the return to the screen of Charles Chaplin, the greatest comedian the motion picture has produced after a long absence. It is the first stellar appearance of Chaplin in a feature length production. And it is a picture almost totally different from anything in which Chaplin has previously appeared.

“The Kid” is an extraordinary medley of pathos and humor, accomplishing in no uncertain manner an amount of strength and heart interest that is seldom seen. It is unlike anything that has ever previously been done. It fits under no known classification. It stands alone. Unless all indications fail, this Chaplin feature will be a sensational box office attraction, winning and holding the public’s favor for many a year.

There is not a great deal of the Chaplin of old in this picture. To a great extent he has put his old bag of tricks away and goes in for a great deal of very nearly legitimate acting. While not much of the Chaplin of old is visible there is still very much present those whimsical moods, apparent here and there in previous Chaplin pictures which strike very close to really great acting.

The picture being really different than those that have gone before will elicit a very sharp surprise from the public, but while it is different the Chaplin showmanship genius has retained in it just enough of those bits of horseplay for which the veteran Chaplin fan will be looking.

Chaplin shares a large measure of the honors of the performance with Jackie Coogan, that delightful youngster who in this picture registers so convincingly that many will acclaim him the real star of the play. The little fellow’s scenes are certainly sure-fire. In the name part he contributes to this picture one of the very best juvenile bits that has yet been seen in motion pictures. Of considerable pictorial importance is Miss Edna Purviance who is exceedingly beautiful in many views and who carries through a legitimate acting part in a very surprising manner. It is probably the finest work of her career by a wide margin.

There is a real story in “The Kid”: An infant waif is left by an unmarried mother in a luxurious motor car in front of a palatial home. The car is stolen in the absence of the driver and when the identity of their passenger is discovered by the thieves the infant is roughly deposited alongside of an ash can in a back alley of the tenement district. The infant is discovered by Chaplin, who is a half comic, half tragic figure of the district. He first tries to rid himself of his charge but then decides to take the youngster to his impoverished home.

While the child grows to boyhood the mother becomes a famous theatrical star and devotes herself to missionary work in the slums, meanwhile carrying on her search for the child that she would now recover. A stirring devotion is built up between Chaplin and the child and their misadventures to one another in their destitute little home have a very great heart interest. Chaplin battles the county authorities that would remove the child to an orphanage and is beset with other attempts to separate him from his charge to whom he has become devotedly attached. Eventually the child is restored to his mother’s home—and Chaplin with him.

The outstanding characteristic of “The Kid” is human appeal and real heart interest. The public will in turn laugh and weep and as the finale is flashed on the screen they will regret that the picture is ended—which to our mind is just about the acid test of a great picture. The comedy and burlesque is in Chaplin’s inimitable manner. In its customary style it is highly amusing and laugh-producing.

Chaplin returns to the screen in his greatest picture, great as a comedy and great as a drama. In it he is a master of dramatic as well as comedy situations.

“The Kid” hits the bull’s-eye as a box office attraction.

“Passion” Shown At Chicago Meet

“Passion,” the spectacular German-produced production starring Pola Negri, which established a new box office record at the Capitol theatre, New York, in its American premiere, and has been grouped with “The Kid,” “Song of the Wind,” “The Outfit” and “Man—Woman—Marriage” as the first unit of attractions composing the “Big Five,” recently launched by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., was shown to the members and franchise holders of that organization in convention at the Congress Hotel, Chicago, on January 10. A number of guests were included in the audience.

The picture was reviewed in the November 6 issue of EXHIBITORS HERALD, the view being obtained at the initial New York screening for the trade press.

Several stories describing the exploitation and actual box office performance of the feature, substantiating the advance review, have appeared in the “Exhibitors Advertising” department in recent issues of this publication.

"Man, Woman—Marriage" Is One of Screen's Greatest Attractions

To Allen Holubar belongs the credit of creating in "Man, Woman and Marriage" a really great production—great in spectacle, drama and heart interest; it is one of the clearly outstanding pictures since the beginning of the art.

Viewed from the box office angle, it is a truly marvelous woman's picture and on this basis it becomes an unusually significant attraction carrying with it extraordinarily broad commercial possibilities. It is a picture that will keenly interest women and will receive their fullest approval and endorsement.

* * *

While the picture may correctly be termed an unusually good woman's attraction it is by no means exclusively gauged to hold the feminine attention; although the dominant motive is feminist it nevertheless is crammed full of fundamental spectacle, drama, and emotional interest, the appeal of which is universal.

The comprehensiveness of the title—"Man, Woman and Marriage"—accurately suggests the breadth and scope of the subject: The story and action is centered upon a modern narrative depicting graphically the matrimonial experiences of two persons of a certain class. While the story is focused upon two individuals of a particular class it nevertheless has a broad application to the marital lives of men and women the world over and as such the leading characters may be interpreted as typical of modern man and woman.

At occasional intervals in a very natural and convincing manner the action carries back to pre-historic, matriarchal and medieval times. It is in these instances that there are natural opportunities for introducing the spectacular incidents which on the whole represent as fine an achievement along this line as has yet been put upon the screen. A conspicuous example of the stellar qualities of this work is to be had

"Sowing the Wind" Strong Drama

Mayer Production Starring Anita Stewart and Directed by John M. Stahl Featured by Powerful Situations and Fine Characterizations

In the Louis B. Mayer production of "Sowing The Wind" there comes to the screen a splendidly produced and excellently enacted drama of compelling strength. John M. Stahl, the director, has built into this picture a thoroughly convincing story of striking intensity. It is a tale of passion's retributions which carries with it a singularly significant preachment and drives home unswervingly a moral that many pulpits aim for but do not hit so effectively.

The production throughout is in keeping with the established Louis B. Mayer standards of rich and elaborate investiture and a cast of great competence. Miss Anita Stewart is called upon to enact a role of heavy dramatic exactions and she succeeds in registering almost the entire gamut of emotions in a manner of such certainty that her work in "Sowing the Wind" probably touches the uppermost point of the dramatic attainments of her career. In various close views she is exceedingly beautiful. In the big dramatic moments—and there are many of them—she effects a sincerity of characterization that will yield to her a very great sympathy.

Mr. Stahl has accomplished in "Sowing the Wind" a masterful dramatization of a difficult theme. He has woven into the picture a story that grips the sympathy of the spectator and frequently quickens the heartbeats in effectively registered scenes of unusual dramatic intensity. "Sowing the Wind" as a drama of its type ranks very high. It is suggestive of a wealth of exploitation possibilities and has an innate strength that will justify big promise.

A notable feature of the production is the work of Miss Myrtle Stedman. It is with difficulty that one may comment with any degree of restraint upon her work which is extraordinarily fine, capable and effective. Miss Stedman has a big acting part and every opportunity has been seized upon and handled adroitly. Another sincere, natural and altogether satisfactory characterization is that of James Morison. Other roles of a rather numerous cast are all well executed. Acting-wise, there is little to be desired in "Sowing the Wind."

The story is of that stuff which strong, intense drama is almost necessarily built of. It was once a familiar and very popular narrative in its original form. In its translation to pictures nothing of its power has been lost. Of considerable importance is the fact that many situations of poignant strength involving conflicts of sexes have been carefully and judiciously handled.

The story, long familiar upon the speaking stage, relates the tale of he who shall sow the wind shall reap the whirlwind; that with every outraging of the social code a retribution shall be visited upon the guilty. Miss Stedman plays the errant mother and Miss Stewart the daughter who upon leaving a convent school learns of the life into which the mother has lapsed. The code of double morals finds expression in the advice of the guardian of the daughter's suitor, the girl having become an actress is pointed to as a man's plaything. The innate decency of the young man eventually rides down the bad advice and the story ends with the happiness of the girl and her suitor assured and with the wages of sin tolled out to the guilty.

In the Amazon battle sequence in which there is staged upon horseback between men and women a conflict of fiery intensity, producing a telling spectacular effect meanwhile raising the spectator's interest to a high pitch of enthusiasm.

In every scene where elaborate settings are required the production has been built in a lavish manner. Throughout there is much proof of the fact that a great deal of money was judiciously expended. And in no instance is there evidence of lavish expenditure for no definite purpose; every lavishly appointed scene and every huge set has a good reason for existing just where it is found as the story is unfolded. The photography excels the average to a noteworthy degree.

The leading role of the production is carried by Dorothy Phillips and Miss Phillips does it in a manner that should place her securely upon a very lofty pinnacle of prestige. The individual efforts of Miss Phillips are no less extraordinary than the production itself as a whole. In scene after scene she registers effectively a delightfully sincere, wholesome and convincing personality. Pictorially she is at her very best—which is saying a great deal—and historically she evidences a mature and competent ability for tense emotional appeal. Miss Phillips is thoroughly splendid as the leading player and beyond that she very apparently has contributed much in collaboration with her husband, Mr. Holubar, to the upbuilding and the sustaining of the theme. The competent and polished James Kirkwood submits a very excellent characterization in the leading masculine role. Also of prominence and importance in the cast is J. Barney Sherry.

"Man, Woman and Marriage" tells the story of a girl and a man who marry for love and embark confidently and joyously upon their matrimonial voyage. As the years progress the man loses faith and confidence in his ability to succeed. He becomes indifferent to his wife and out of sympathy with her overwhelming interest in home and children. Eventually he yields to the advances of a dishonest political chieftain who later sees to his election to the United States senate. With the political position comes wealth and luxury and in their wake follow riotous parties and other borderline excesses of society in the new mansion home. Subsequently the wife rebels, leaves her husband and strikes out into the world to do constructive work, ruling her own destiny and rearing carefully her two children. As the story unfolds historical parallels depicting thought movements related to the various problems confronting the woman are fixed upon the screen, connecting up graphically with the modern story the unceasing struggle of womankind which has brought her to her present place in the civilized world of today.

"Man, Woman and Marriage" will now take its place as a document of importance in the film libraries of the world.—M. J. Q.

They follow:
2.—That an exhibitor's copy of every application signed by him to be given by salesman at the time the contract is signed.

Contract Made Void
3.—That where an exchange breaches its contract on one picture, in contract, where remaining pictures are to be used, the entire contract is void at the option of the exhibitor.
4.—That where an exhibitor breaches protection given in a theatre, balance of contract may be voided by exhibitor and exhibitor is to be paid damages double the amount of rental price paid for particular picture or pictures thus wrongfully used. Such protection and run must be specifically stated in contract.
7.—In case of any picture sold under this contract shall be reissued or re-created pictures same must be stated on the face of the contract.
8.—It is hereby agreed that the signature of the exhibitor to this contract shall make it binding unless canceled by the home office within (thirty days to points West of the Mississippi and fifteen days to points East) days, and it is further agreed that the distributor or producer shall not offer this picture for sale to any other exhibitor in the zone of the contract exhibitor until such exhibitor shall be notified of the rejection of this contract by the home office.

Further meetings of the exhibitors and the national association will be held to ratify the proposition.

Lyons and Moran Again
Producing Two Reelers
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)
NEW YORK, Jan. 11.—Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran have returned to the production of two-reel comedies for Universal. Their last five-reel feature is "A Shocking Night," which was published yesterday.

"Confidential" Reviews Are Derided
An interesting discussion is being carried on in England as to the intrinsic value of "confidential" reports on pictures as compared with the reviews printed in the trade papers. The English exhibitors are being besieged to subscribe to the various "confidential" film services. In this country it is not quite so bad. But the point is are these reports of any real value?
We quote from the Kinetograph Weekly, a London publication, which sums the matter up as follows:
"The word (reviewer) is generally taken to refer to a newspaper representative, and the point in dispute in this case is not the reliability of press reviews of films but the competence or incompe- tence of what the public calls 'viewers'—a very different matter. The methods of the pressman and the compiler of 'confidential' press reports are as the poles asunder. The one works in the open; his opinions are on public record and can be chal- lenged by anyone who fails to agree with them, whereas the other sends under cover a private report to a limited number of personal clients. He is no more entitled to be called a reviewer than any other individual who writes a personal opinion of a film to a friend.
"The competence of the average viewer is a matter of opinion, but one can feel some sympathy with the trade prejudice against any critic who has not sufficient belief in his opinions to publish them openly. The pressman, on the other hand, can easily cloak his blunders. He cannot easily be com- pelled by criticism to face up to any of his judgments. In these cir- cumstances it is no wonder that the general competence of the class is doubted by readers and by exhibitors who think for themselves."
Up-Hill Climb Wins Place at Top for First National Men
John H. Kunsky Was One of the First in Michigan To Place the Motion Picture on a Basis of Commercial Entertainment

The recent election of directors and officers of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., of Michigan, brought into the limelight of the industry again seven men who have reached the top after a steady up-hill climb. They are:

John H. Kunsky, Harry Scott, of Detroit, and Herbert Weil, Port Huron, as well as personal attorney for Mr. Kunsky. Mr. Trendle occupies a position of prominence and responsibility in the theatrical world.

Walter Scott Butterfield is head of Bijou Theatrical Enterprises, with headquarters in Battle Creek and theatrical interests in close to a dozen of the Michigan cities, besides others in Ohio, Illinois and Wisconsin. Mr. Butterfield began life a poor boy and often discusses the days when in he sold newspapers and fought battles with his rival newsies to maintain his rights. Later settling in Battle Creek, he purchased a vaudeville house and from that time on his holdings began to grow.

H. S. Gallup, a leader of motion picture activities in the Upper Peninsula, makes his headquarters in Marquette, where a good share of his time is taken up with local politics and other lines of business to which he has in late years extended his holdings. Gallup has been instrumental in bringing many large industries into the upper peninsula and is firmly regarded as one of the strongest boosters of the Motion of the state.

Blaine McElroy, of the firm of Fitzpatrick
& McElroy, with headquarters in Chicago, is the executive head of a string of nearly a score of motion picture theatres in Michigan, Illinois and Wisconsin and his success, like all of the others, dates from the time the motion picture industry came into its own. Mr. McElroy became associated with Kenneth Fitzpatrick. The partners met with continued success with their venture from the start. Their Michigan holdings now include theatres in Benton Harbor, St. Joseph, Three Rivers, St. Johns, Allegan, Big Rapids, Ludington, Manistee, Cadillac, Traverse City and Alpena.

Herbert Weil, head of Port Huron Theatrical Enterprises, is recognized as one of the most progressive of types, always alert for the betterment of the legitimate interests of the industry in general and not to the individual in particular. His holdings in Port Huron include three motion picture and a legitimate house, all of them looked upon as among the best paying institutions in the state. Mr. Weil's brother is editor of the daily newspaper Port Huron, but it has been through no influence exerted by the brother on the news columns of the paper that the theatrical interests have flourished. Herbert Weil's career started as a newspaper reporter on the Detroit News, from which position he climbed to copy editor and city editor.

Harry Scott, general manager and a director of Associated First National Pictures of Michigan, took charge of the Michigan territory two years ago after successful experience in organization and sales work with other film companies. Mr. Scott's career has been closely associated with the amusement business. For several years, he was press representative for Ringling Brothers Circus. Mr. Scott's experience in the legitimate and the motion picture industry has served him in excellent stead with the policy he has instituted in operating the Associated First National Michigan exchange.

4,000 Theatres Will Show First of News Kinograms
More Than Fifty Cameramen Will Be Retained by Educational—In Addition Special Expeditions Will Cover Big Events

Four thousand theatres showing the first issue of the super Kinograms is the mark set by Educational Film Exchange, Inc., following the announcement that on January 30 it is to take over this bi-weekly news service which will absorb Gaumont News and one month later will include a service being handled by a third organization.

Publication of Kinograms will mark the completion of Educational's plans to afford exhibitors everywhere full service of everything for their programs with the single exception of the feature. It marks the fullest accomplishments of the organization's plans, including the establishment of exchanges through the United States and Canada in less than eight months time.

Entire Resources of Three Will Be Used
Stress is placed on the fact that the absorption of these three news pictorials is not simply a combination of three different services, but the acquisition of their full resources and their full possibilities. Each of the three will continue its forces in the field and the merged editorial departments will select from everything available the cream of the material and these pictures will be issued twice weekly under the name of Kinograms.

More than fifty camera men, placed in the key centers of the world, will be retained and in addition special expeditions will be sent to cover world events. A number of contracts have been made which will assure exclusive news pictures of important happenings from Kinograms. Each camera post is given liberal advance funds so that advantage can be taken of every sudden happening without the delay incident to communication with the home office and awaiting authorization.

Service Is Emphasized
Service on Kinograms will be one of the points emphasized in Educational. Since the company has devoted its entire attention to one and two reel subjects the various branch managers have been instructed to call attention of exhibitors that the fact that its own record guarantees that each exchange will devote the same attention to the handling of the single news reel as it does with every comedy, scenic and special that it handles. Each exchange man is instructed to emphasize this specialization in short subjects as an additional guarantee that the exhibitor will get the very best weekly that he has contracted for and on time.

"We are putting our whole guarantee behind Kinograms," commented E. W. Hammont, president of Educational. "We take the utmost pride in this service because it now enables us to offer the exhibitor everything for his program fifty-two weeks in the year with the exception of the feature, a field which we have not and will never enter. We are confident that the super Kinograms will prove the greatest news weekly that has ever been put on the market, but in offering these pictures we are not content with merely promises of superior quality, but stress the point of superior service.

Quality Is Required
"From the beginning of this organization, even on its rather conservative basis, we have made the point of requiring quality as the basis of our every release. Our success has been largely founded on that point. We feel confident that exhibitors generally will recognize that we have taken over these three combined news services under the name of Mr. Rembusch's eleven Inco we are confident that they will maintain our standards."

Exhibitor's Secretary Held on Theft Charge
(Toronto, Canada, Jan. 11.—John Doughty has been indicted by the grand jury on a charge of stealing $105,000 in Liberty bonds from Ambrose J. Small, the theatre magnate whose disappearance a year ago has remained a mystery. The jury did not report on the charge that Doughty, who was Small's secretary, conspired to kidnap the exhibitor.

Rembusch Plays Santa
(Toronto, Jan. 11.—Frank Rembusch, owner of the American theatre, gave each employee a substantial check as a Christmas gift. All the employees of Mr. Rembusch's eleven Inco theatres were similarly remembered.)
“What the Picture Did for Me”
Reflects Need of Exploiting

Famous Department Is Pointed to as Basis of Urging Exhibitor to Push Pictures

By Claud Saunders
(Exploitation Director, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation)

“A GOOD picture and a good star; and then it did not draw.”

If the phrase occurs once, it occurs half a dozen times in a recent issue of Exhibitors Herald in the “What The Picture Did for Me” section. Perhaps the wording of the thought is not always the same. Sometimes the phrase reads: “The picture deserved better at the boxoffice;” or, “A picture although I did next to nothing on it.”

Granted that the story is good, the direction competent, the cast capable, and the photography clear, there is absolutely no reason why the exhibitor should not be able to show a substantial profit on a picture. The exhibitor who is fair enough to the producer to admit that the picture was not at fault if the boxoffice receipts looked shabby, should be fair enough to himself to insist that his showings bring him every cent they are worth.

The sentence which opens this article sums up the “why” and “wherefore” of an exploitation department to put Paramount pictures over with the public. It had occurred often that audiences seeing a certain production had nothing but praise for it; and still the number who saw it was too small to leave any monument of appreciation at the boxoffice. The truth was that while the picture was everything to be desired the public had not learned about it, did not know what the theatre had to offer and consequently failed to be interested in a sufficient degree to bring the exhibitor the returns he should have had.

It remained for the deft artistry of the exploitation representative to wave his magic wand of experienced showmanship. Like Mahomet he was obliged to force the picture upon the mountain of public opinion, since public opinion did not volunteer to come to the picture.

The appearance of the trained exploitation representative is in no sense a reflection upon the ability of the theatrical manager. Very often the latter is too occupied with detail work to give exploitation the attention it should have. Again, what the theatrical manager would have to do through his own intuition, initiative, and knowledge gleaned from the trade papers the exploitation representative accomplishes with experience gained in every section of the country. He is the consulting specialist who has devoted his entire time and energy in publicizing an attraction and putting a show over with the people.

When Famous Players-Lasky Corporation organized its exploitation staff more than a year ago it was with three definite purposes in mind:

1. To let the public know a good show when it came.
2. To bring the exhibitor every cent of revenue out of every Paramount picture he booked.
3. To make the exhibitor a synonym for “good entertainment” in his community.

Pictures that fail to draw will always exist. Pictures that spell S. R. O. in one section of the country and flop in another continue to be in evidence. With the innovation of the modern exploitation man, however, there is no reason why a picture, admitted satisfactorily in every respect, should fail to spell profits for the exhibitor if he is willing to tell the public what he has, through the versed training of the skilled exploitation man. Failure to do this is simply permitting so much good cash to slip through one’s fingers “by default” and can be likened to selling a satin gown at gingham prices simply because the buyer does not know it is satin and the seller hasn’t impressed the fact.

The “What This Picture Did for Me” section of Exhibitors Herald is the greatest testimony in existence of the need of keen exploitation. If this one need is supplied I am willing to assert that the tragic report: “Good picture, but didn’t draw” will be eliminated and that the boxoffice receipts and the value of a picture will always bear a close relation to each other.

In Color to Market

C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation of New York has obtained “Heidi,” a dramatic film presented in colors, for the state right market. The Prizma picture features Madge Evans. In a review one critic declared that “‘Heidi’ marks an epoch in motion picture production in that it is the first real indication that the black and white photography with its limited tints is ultimately to be superseded by colors for dramatic subjects.”

The production was on the Christmas program at the Capitol theatre in New York. The little star made personal appearances, and in appreciation of this she was presented with a silver loving cup by S. L. Rothafel.

Scientists at Rivoli Show
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.—Hugo Riesenfeld gave a private showing before noted scientists, college instructors, explorers and newspaper representatives, of motion pictures taken by the Vandenbergh-Paramount Expedition, at the Rivoli theatre, January 7. Dr. Leonard J. Vandenbergh, missionary and explorer, who headed the eleven months’ expedition into East Africa and Uganda, personally lectured on the pictures.

TWO POPULAR SCREEN STARS IN A NEW PRODUCTION

Marguerite Snow and Louis Bennison in two scenes from the Renco Production of “Lavender and Old Lace”
SUCCEDING pages of this department contain illustrated accounts detailing several of the most remarkable events in theatre history, conducted by enterprising showmen during the recent holiday season. The opportunity to combine the doing of good with the advancement of theatre interests was properly grasped by the majority of American exhibitors.

Another opportunity of similar nature and as great or greater promise is presented in the Hoover Fund, detailed plans for the raising of which were published on page 63 of EXHIBITORS HERALD for January 15.

A clear understanding of the proposition is essential to every exhibitor, and such an understanding is imparted in the story referred to. The primary object of the drive is made clear, the raising of funds to relieve the sufferings of starving children in Europe, and the exhibitor's part is outlined.

No less essential than this information is a clear understanding of the reasons why exhibitors without exception should devote every energy to the task of raising the $2,500,000 which the industry is expected to contribute to the cause—and this understanding involves consideration of the advertising phase of the proposition.

Participation in the campaign to raise the designated amount is excellent advertising for the individual and the industry. That does not mean that any exhibitor should enter into the work with selfish interests as his only reason for so doing, but it does mean that the enthusiasm with which the work is undertaken will be materially greater because of the fact.

Charity-Advertising

Charity and advertising have been demonstrated compatible elements in scores of exploitation campaigns conducted in the past and described in these pages. The free matinees given orphans in connection with the Fox production, "The Orphan," the newsboy matinees conducted in connection with Neilan's "Go And Get It," the special screenings at naval training stations of various Paramount productions, all have demonstrated beyond question that the two purposes do not conflict and that each interest is furthered by the other.

Sincerity Vital

The theatre man who wholeheartedly supports the Hoover Fund devotes his energy and the resources of his institution to a worthy cause. None will question that.

The theatre man who does everything in his power to attain the desired quota simultaneously contributes to the elevation in the eyes of the world of the industry as a whole. He can give time and effort to no more essential work than that.

Every exhibitor, be he theatre one of the mammoth palaces spoken of in whispers within the industry and regarded as a new wonder of the world by those who patronize it or a 100-seat house in the smallest community, is popularly rated with the motion picture. The individual who considers the motion picture in its true light, a great and constantly developing art-science, regards the exhibitor as a business man of a class apart from the general mass of tradesmen.

Status Improved

The man who does not accord the motion picture its proper place, the individual occasionally encountered who refers to the theatre as "a movie" and classifies it with the penny arcade of a decade ago, has another opinion of the exhibitor. To him he is a sort of mountebank engaged in dispensing a fallacy for which there is an unaccountable reason a majority of the public is addicted.

Participation in any worthy cause tends to dispel this impression, an impression which operates as a brake upon progress even in its present limited prevalence.

The many Christmas funds raised by American theatres in December, 1920, were not without a dual profit. The poor of the cities in which such campaigns were conducted benefited directly. In most cases newspapers cooperated in the work and the effectiveness of the enterprises was thus heightened.

But the theatre benefited also. And even that benefit was of dual nature. Simply as advertising the work was productive. It carried the theatre name to far corners in connection with news which inspired respect. And inspiration is peculiar in that it operates two ways, its effect being as marked upon the inspiring party as the inspired.

Theatre men gained confidence in their power when their plans were seen brought to brilliant fruition. They learned that the resources at their command were capable of producing something more than a financial profit for themselves. They learned that people would come to them with hands outstretched and congratulations upon their lips, incidentally with a healthy respect for theatre and exhibitor firmly founded.

Opportunity Promising

In the present instance the exhibitor has another opportunity to bring

Showmanship Suggestions in the Stills

With the introduction of stunt humor in the Hallroom Boys comedies distributed by the C. B. C. Film Sales Corp., a new exploitation opportunity is provided.

Edith Roberts, featured in "The Fire Cat," a Universal production, appears as in the above still. The costume is one easily obtainable for any exhibitor, and a horse resembling that used in the picture may be procured in any locality. The sight of such a horse and rider is unusual enough to draw attention upon any street and create comment. Used several days before the opening of the picture, without direct identification, a local mystery of considerable interest should be created. A newspaper taken into the secret should be willing to contribute valuable free publicity.

"The Baby," a forthcoming Fox comedy, offers splendid opportunity for an exploitation baby show such as conducted by Arnette Aiken at the Colonial theatre, Commerce, Ga., and described in full on page 36 of EXHIBITORS HERALD for January 15.

"Man—Woman—Marriage." Allen Holubar's production starring Dorothy Phillips and presented by Albert A. Kaufman through First National, has scenes representative of many periods in the world's progress. The above still, showing a Roman setting, offers one suggestion for stage setting and prologue. A dramatic tabloid presentation of the final scene between Marc Anthony and Cleopatra, beginning with the defeat of their forces by Caesar's fleet and culminating in the death of the famous lovers, should prove effective. Shakespeare's "Julius Caesar" or any good history of the period provides ample working material.
Four-Act Christmas Feature Surpasses Previous Presentation at N. Y. Strand

Joseph Plunkett, managing director of the Strand theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., is known throughout the width and breadth of this country as a presentation expert and a progressive exhibitor.

The expertness and the progressive-ness are seen at their best in his Christmas Frolic, staged during the holiday season of 1920, which surpassed previous Strand stage features.

There is significance in the fact that the greatest Strand feature was in behalf of the Strand theatre and not a motion picture production.

The Strand Christmas Frolic was presented in four scenes, one of which was a film transition the basic idea of which may be utilized by exhibitors everywhere in presentation of similar features. Special scenery was used for each setting, the whole feature being staged exactly as is the Broadway stage production for which a road tour is contemplated.

Scene I, “Toyland,” is illustrated by the upper photograph upon this page. It opened with Santa Claus prepared to take the audience through his quarters, a song conveying that promise, after which dolls seen in the illustration left their boxes, sang their numbers and returned to their original positions as the stage became dark.

Scene III, “Over the House tops,” was a film novelty especially made for the occasion which showed Santa Claus en route from his traditional home to the roof of a pretentious dwelling. Landing upon the latter he made his way to the chimney and as he disappeared into the opening the screen disappeared and stage lights came up to disclose—

Scene III, “Christmas Eve.” The other illustration upon this page shows the fireplace supposed to lie at the base of the pictorial chimney. Here Santa Claus approached the four stockings hung in readiness for him, a singer’s head appearing at each as he reached to open them for gifts. The four singers constituted a quartette which gave suitable selections, concluding with “Holy Light.”

Scene IV, “Christmas Night,” represented the exterior of a church at night, with snow falling and a soprano attired in suitable black sang “In a Manger Lowly,” a fitting conclusion to an effective feature.

The bare scene plot does scant justice to the reality. The careful rehearsals were reflected in the final stage delivery. The reception accorded the feature was enthusiastic. And all of this expense, all this preparation, for a feature that was not intended to emphasize a screen attraction. This despite the fact that a Chester Scenic, an Edgar Goldwyn comedy, Charles Ray’s most recently published production and selections from three news reels were listed on the program.

Exhibitors will not fail to grasp the significance of that point. The presentation was of the Strand theatre, not of a picture, and the beneficial effect it had will benefit the playhouse rather than a single picture or brand of picture.
Paramount Advertising Men Substitute for Santa Claus

Exploitation men at the various branch offices of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation distinguished themselves during the recent holidays by their unflagging endeavors to make successful the charitable enterprises conducted by theatremen in their territory.

As a result of the splendid work done by exhibitors and exploitation men in close cooperation thousands of poor children enjoyed Christmas as they could have enjoyed it through no other arrangement.

The work constitutes a step forward for both exhibitor and exchange man, as well as for the industry as a whole.

Two instances which typify the general work done in this connection are illustrated upon this page, the charitable campaigns conducted in Denver, Colo., and Indianapolis, Ind., by theatres and exchanges in those cities.

In Denver the Rialto, Princess and Queen’s theatres were engaged in the work, the three theatres using Paramount pictures, “The Testing Block,” “Idols of Clay” and “The Sins of Rosanne.” The Denver Post contributed cooperation which was highly effective in spreading news of the event.

For more than a week before the actual donations were receivable the newspaper devoted whole columns of front page publicity to the enterprise. And thus it came about that when the three houses were thrown open for a special performance, the only admission for which was an apple, orange or similar contribution, their several capacities were taxed to their limits to accommodate the well intentioned people who came with arms and pockets laden.

Prominent people donated their services in distributing the presents, and isolated cases of poverty and want were sought out and given the benefit of the event.

On the day following the free performance and the distribution of the good things collected the newspaper followed through and carried a full account of the work done.

Fred W. Green, Jr., Paramount exploitation man, was largely instrumental in obtaining for the theatre management the cooperation of the newspaper, cooperation which obviously was of great service in spreading the doctrine of charity. To him, to the theatre management and the newspaper everlasting credit is due.

In Indianapolis the Isis theatre, playing “The Life of the Party,” cooperated with Oscar Kantner of the Paramount exchange in similar manner. All the newspapers gave readily of space, and society people were interested to the extent of taking active part in the management of the two special performances given and subsequent distribution of the gifts thus obtained. The accompanying illustration shows one of the Paramount exchange vaults pressed into service as a storeroom pending delivery.

Window displays were also donated by merchants, who otherwise gave of their support.

Kantner and Green, whose names have been identified with enterprising exploitation frequently in the past, have never done better work than in behalf of their respective communities during the holiday season. Their work was unselfish, the fruits of their labors are of the enduring variety.

It will be remembered when the motion pictures shown upon the separate occasions are forgotten.

The theatres involved, the newspapers and the exchanges, all will receive deserved credit and the prestige that goes with it for the work done. Though this consideration is secondary to the actual good accomplished it should not be underestimated.

“Exploitation with a heart” is the term applied to the Indianapolis event in the report received. It is difficult to improve upon that phrase.

A. W. Eiler, manager of the American theatre, Walla Walla, Wash., advertised passes as Christmas gifts and placed specially designed blanks upon sale at the box office. Provision was made in the composition of the same to accommodate the signature of the giver and passes were made for one or as many admissions as were desired.
“House of Toys” Prospers During Atlanta Engagement by Charity-Exploitation Drive

In the days when the biggest feature was published in single reel length every producing company published at least one Christmas picture every year.

The custom has been abandoned, and many exhibitors succeeded admirably with attractions having no direct identification with the holiday season in scoring creditable triumphs in 1920.

George B. Schmidt, manager of the Alamo No. 2 theatre, Atlanta, Ga., experienced great success with a picture eminently suited by reason of its title, for holiday use, American Film Company’s production “The House of Toys.” Mr. Schmidt’s method of procedure merits highest praise.

The photographs reproduced upon this page give a clear idea of the Alamo front during Christmas week, but the setting of the miniature stage set up in the lobby is not shown in detail, and the details are important.

The scene presented was one wholly in keeping with the season. A rolling panorama of snow-covered hills, with miniature electric trains so incorporated into the arrangement as to make complete circles of the setting at proper intervals. Effective realism was imparted to the whole by smoke curling out of the chimney which was mounted upon the fireplace setting.

The Atlanta Georgian, sponsoring the “Empty Stocking Fund” each year, was brought into cooperation with the theatre when it was announced that two Christmas trees had been erected upon the stage and that children bringing toys for the trees would be admitted free of charge during the week of the showing, and by Thursday evening of that week the trees were heavily laden with gifts.

As a consequence of this arrangement big newspaper publicity was given the theatre, stills from the picture being used as illustrations for the various stories used and a photograph of Mr. Schmidt accompanying the final announcement of the results of the enterprise.

Mr. Schmidt’s choice of attraction for the occasion was excellent. The title gave him additional material for advertising purposes and perfected the identification of the theatre with the season and the project.

Aside from the altogether desirable results accomplished for charity, the theatre established itself as an institution of the highest class, dedicated to the best civic interests.

Mr. Schmidt deserves great credit for his enterprise and the skill with which he executed his campaign. The general effect of the whole cannot be otherwise than beneficial.

The current demand for calendars has been met by A. L. Hepp, manager of the Idylhour theatre, Greeley, Neb., who has published a card, eleven by fourteen inches, containing the dates for January with each day’s attractions boxed in with the number. Star portraits were used in making up an attractive border and a hole at the top renders hanging convenient.

Aaron Shusterman, manager of the Strand theatre, New Brunswick, N. J., profited during the holiday season by illuminated arrows on downtown electric supports pointing the way to the theatre.
Harry Swift, Paramount exploitation representative at the Albany exchange, specializes in popular movements. His ability to swing sentiment into line as support for advertising drives is one of the little wonders of modern showmanship.

But when Mr. Swift went to Utica, N. Y., to exploit the New Delux theatre showing of "Something to Think About," Cecil B. DeMilie's Paramount production, he found the city apathetic generally and no civic movement in progress which could be converted to exploitation purposes.

Thus given pause, he resorted to the revival of a topic which had formerly been given wide discussion, the attempt made by the police department to correct the habit of crossing streets at points other than intersections and in defiance of traffic regulations.

Coining a pat phrase, he visited the mayor of Utica and obtained written permission for the posting of warnings at vantage points worded in such manner as to attract and hold attention, incidentally delivering the title of the picture with telling effect.

The accompanying illustration shows one of the warnings posted. In its trick wording lies its strongest point. That is the novelty which gives it distinction.

A curiosity stimulator utilized at various points on the streets of Utica, N. Y., by the Paramount exploitation representative.
R. J. O'Crawley, manager of the Branford theatre, Newark, N. J., utilized a miniature countryside stage setting for the presentation of "Peaceful Valley." Charles Ray's First National attraction, lights in the setting being managed in such manner as to give the impression of depth and reality. Five players were employed for the musical element of the prologue which was enacted against this setting.

Branford's "Peaceful Valley" Prologue
Vivid Reproduction of Rural Atmosphere

R. J. O'Crawley, manager of the new Branford theatre, Newark, N. J., recently demonstrated to the satisfaction of all his ability as a presentation producer. His "Passion" prologue was one of the big events recorded in this department last week.

Additional evidence of his skill and indication that high class contributions to the archives of exploitation may be looked for from this source is presented herewith in photographic testimony proving the insight and showmanship sense of the man.

"Peaceful Valley," Charles Ray's First National attraction, was the picture for which the present prologue was instituted, and the eminent suitability of the feature is plainly discernible in the illustration.

The rural scene which formed the background of the Branford prologue was obviously constructed at considerable expense. The effect, however, was certainly worth the expenditure. With a lighting system and involving color effects and dimmers, such as are in use at the theatre, unlimited possibilities are presented by such an arrangement.

The five players appearing in the prologue staged against this background included a male quartette and a feminine soloist. The former is especially important in that it proves practical in presentation a form of entertainment which for reasons undisclosed exhibitors have avoided using.

The male quartette is one of the most popular acts in vaudeville. In the musical comedies that have incorporated such an act it has invariably proved an important factor in the success of the whole.

People like male voices. Exhibitors should give people what they like.

In presentation the quartette is especially serviceable because of the versatility of the members. Practically any musical number that has been written can be delivered effectively by an individual of the organization or in group.

The musical library may be resorted to without restriction when the person planning the program knows that any composition selected will be found practicable for presentation purposes, the additional freedom thus assured being one of the strong arguments for this form of stage feature.

The Branford, in its short history, has contributed two valuable precedents for American showmen.

An advertisement disguised as a magazine feature, measuring one column wide and one inch high and containing bits of philosophy attributed to "Movie Mabel," is being carried on the second page of Toledo, O., newspapers by Harold F. Wendt, manager of the Rivoli theatre. Two lines of agate black face occupy the bottom of the space and refer to the current attraction at the theatre, while the regular display advertisement is carried upon a page further back. Readers quickly become accustomed to seeking a feature of this type, and the obvious productivity of the space, out of all proportion to its cost, strongly warrants adoption.

The players used in the Branford theatre presentation of "Peaceful Valley."
National Board of Review Report Used by Exhibitor

The special report issued by the National Board of Review approving "Passion," the First National special attraction which is listed as one of the productions included in the recently announced "Big Five," was utilized to good advantage by the management of the Garden theatre, Paterson, N. J., when the picture was exhibited at that playhouse.

The accompanying illustrations show the front of the Garden theatre with patrons standing in line awaiting turn to purchase tickets. The photograph also discloses the prominent position accorded the National Board of Review report, a report familiar to the trade and a strong argument for attendance at the theatre showing the picture.

The idea is excellent.

The National Board of Review is a body of standing in the public estimation. Every motion picture bears its stamp of approval and the public has learned in the period since the inauguration of the policy to attribute much of the credit for good motion pictures to the national body.

Exhibitors do well to utilize the reports in advertising. They are without exception complete in appraisal of the productions reported upon and worthy of reproduction in all cases where the attraction merits praise in the estimation of the board.

Any exhibitor can avail himself of this opportunity by requesting the board to provide him with copies of the reports given out each week. The great majority of these can be utilized to good advantage.

When the public has learned to depend upon these reports to the degree that they warrant, it may be added, a noticeable change may be discernible in the general attitude in regard to censorship.

When George K. Turner, manager of exploitation for the Star Amusement Company, operating the Everett theatre, Everett, Wash., constructed an icicle lobby for "The North Wind's Malice," the Goldwyn attraction, he accomplished only the effect that many other exhibitors have obtained. When he added fir trees and a snow scene interior for the lobby that effect was only improved. But when he placed a thermometer registering 20 degrees below zero he attained realism of the highest order. That's an accomplishment.

Traffic Semaphore Directs Passersby To View Screening

Indicative of how a simple little twist can transform an old exploitation stunt into something new and novel, is the latest report on a plan to exploit "What's Your Hurry?" The stunt was planned and executed by Harry Swift, representative at the Albany exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in connection with the picture's run at Proctor's theatre, Schenectady, N. Y.

The use of police semaphores is not new to exploitation men, who adapted them for the exploiting of Wallace Reid's picture by topping the "Stop" and "Go" signs with a circular disc bearing the warning, which was also the title of the picture, "What's Your Hurry?"

Swift adapted the idea by simply removing such a transformed sign from the street intersection to the lobby of the theatre. A lobby, sent down to handle the crowds, operated the semaphore so that passersby were warned by the sign to "Stop." Above them was the query: "What's Your Hurry?"

Once the pedestrian had been stopped the uniformed policeman slowly turned the semaphore so that the sign, pointing to the boxoffice, registered "Go." And, so report says, they went.
Reports Show "Kismet" Duplicating Early Exploitation and Box Office Performance

From all parts of the country are coming to the home office of Robertson-Cole new evidence that "Kismet," the Robertson-Cole production, starring Otis Skinner, is being exploited vigorously and widely. Exhibitors in all quarters are out-doing themselves in their extraordinary efforts to bring "Kismet" to the attention of the public.

Letters, wires and the spoken word of exhibitors to the Robertson-Cole sales organization in the field are reported as proving that the managers putting on such exploitation are being repaid for their work. The record-breaking course of "Kismet" continues uninterrupted among the first run towns of the country.

Exhibitors "of the East," such as the managers of the Strand theatres of New York and Brooklyn, Moore's Rialto, Washington, the Goodwin theatre, Newark, and other big houses exploited "Kismet" to the limit. But other exhibitors keep coming in with new and varied stories of how they put "Kismet" over.

For instance during the Christmas shopping season in Milwaukee, the manager of Saxe's New Strand theatre, took advantage of the very condition which is said to make picture business dull just before Christmas. He tied up with a big Christmas window display in a most effective manner. The Gimbel store in Milwaukee was making a big display on toys. In their window they planned to place a large elephant.

It was a toy several feet in height, to be placed in the center of a most alluring group of dolls, animals, toy carriages, and other things dear to the hearts of children. On the head of this elephant was placed the figure of a rider, and on the body a large poster reading: "Otis Skinner in 'Kismet' now at Strand theatre."

Thousands saw that sign every day. Doubtless many of them went to the Strand as a direct result. At least reports of the business which was done at the Strand indicated that the interest in "Kismet" was universal.

In addition to the many accounts which are coming in of unusual exploitation on "Kismet," reports of record-breaking business done by the feature are still pouring in to the Robertson-Cole home office.

From New Orleans the J. E. Pearce Enterprise wired Robertson-Cole:

"Kismet" playing fourth day Tudor theatre. Breaking all records at advance prices each day. Gross showing big increase. First production to ever accomplish this feat. Arranging to accommodate extended run. Bids to establish record long to stand. Unquestionably largest production ever made. Congratulations."

Howard F. Brink of the Strand theatre, Buffalo, N. Y., is another who has reported capacity business on "Kismet" to Robertson-Cole. His wire said:

Harry Watts, manager of the Strand theatre, Omaha, Neb., obtained excellent results with the initial comedy of the Toonerville Trolley series distributed by First National when he gave the comedy feature position in his advertisements, the "Omaha World Herald," co-operating by focusing public attention upon the fact that it carried the cartoons from which the series takes its name.

William Goldman, managing director of the Famous Players Missouri Corporation theatres, has instituted a policy of promise at the Missouri theatre, St. Louis, Mo. No one is admitted to the auditorium during the progress of any feature, short subject, stage performance or overture.

Five thousand poker chips, red and blue, upon both sides of which were printed details of the Luna theatre engagement of "Passion's Playground," Katherine MacDonald's First National attraction, were distributed in Lafayette, Ind., by Manager Herbert H. Johnson. Twenty-five chips, it was advertised, would be accepted as good for one admission to the theatre.
Star's Gown in Prominent Window Draws Patronage

A bit of exploitation that aided in producing the extraordinary results enjoyed during the showing of "The Devil's Angel" the Clark-Cornelius production at the Hippodrome in Pottsville, Pa., was the display obtained in the largest department store of that town of one of Miss Helen Gardner's gowns in their window. Miss Gardner is the star of the production and made a personal appearance in connection with the showing of the picture.

Charles Hausmann, manager of the Hippodrome is considered one of the liveliest showmen in Pennsylvania and his exploitation stunts are studied with a great deal of interest by many other exhibitors in his vicinity.

In presenting "The Devil's Angel" he pursued the same high class showmanship as has characterized his previous efforts. The advance billing consisted of well written and attractively laid out newspaper ads—with plenty of white space—window cards and specially written stands throughout the city.

This stroke of exploitation brought crowds not only in front of the store window, but also to the theatre and within a very few hours the news swept through the city that a two thousand dollar gown was on display in the department store. Mr. Hausmann considers the showing of "The Devil's Angel" and its exploitation one of the outstanding successful events of his show career.

Dorothy Gish's Double Flies Over City as "Flying Pat"

Airplane exploitation put "Flying Pat," Dorothy Gish's latest starring vehicle above everything else in Denver when the picture made its appearance at the first run house, the Princess theatre, in that city. Fred V. Green, Jr., exploitation representative at the local exchange for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation put the picture over by a sensational exploitation stunt in which a plane, the Princess theatre, the Curtiss-Humphreys Airplane Company and a dead ringer for Dorothy Gish all figured.

The exploitation started a week before the picture made its opening. Plans had already been laid with the result that a tie-up with the Curtiss-Humphreys Company resulted in the loan of one of the company's machines together with an experienced pilot. This was all charged to publicity and advertising as far as the Curtiss Company was concerned and didn't cost the theatre a cent. The Curtiss company got its share of the publicity that exploited the Gish picture.

Contrary to what might have been expected, not a single newspaper story heralded the advent of the plane. Green had thought the matter out logically with the result that when an airship suddenly circled above Denver, without any knowledge as to how, when or where, curiosity was sharpened. The papers took it up, hailed it as a great stunt, forgot such words as "free advertising" and popularized the airship in front page stories.

A plan to extend invitations to various entrants who claimed a resemblance to Dorothy Gish had to be cancelled because of the alleged risks for which the company refused to assume responsibility. The dolled up, wool wrapped waterproof Dorothy Gish of Denver, however, made all flights with audacity.

The plane made its daily trips throughout the entire week before "Flying Pat" played. On the picture's opening day the plane was taken through the streets of Denver before the door of the Princess theatre where it attracted huge crowds. In the rush to get a sight of the plane the advertising sign "Flying Pat"—Princess Theatre" was torn away until only the frayed edges were left. However, the exploitation engine had done its work. The plane was taken in half and the fore half was hung up in the lobby of the theatre where it remained throughout the week that "Flying Pat" played.
EXHIBITORS HERALD

Portland Exhibitors Produce Effective Rural Atmosphere for “Peaceful Valley”

A CLEVER combination of new and old songs, with a stage setting of a farm vista including hay mows, wood piles, and other farmyard decorations, comprised the prologue for “Peaceful Valley,” starring Charles Ray and distributed by First National Exhibitors’ Circuit, Inc., which caused cheering among the audiences at the Liberty theatre, Portland, Oregon, where it was presented.

Paul G. Noble, manager of the theatre, who has created quite a reputation for the house through the prologues he has originated during the past several months, declared the “Peaceful Valley” presentation to be one of the most economical as well as successful prologues ever used at his theatre.

The stage setting consisted of three drops each depicting a rural landscape. Two of these were used at the sides of the stage, set back a few feet from the curtain opening; and the third was used at the back. The effect was one of unlimited space, especially when contrasted with the props.

Directly across the front of the stage was a picket fence which Mr. Noble had gone to the trouble of buying from a farmer some distance outside Portland. He desired the weather-beaten appearance and knew of no cheaper way to procure the real thing. Near the back of the stage on the right side he had piled about two cords of split and sawed wood with a few uncut logs and a saw-buck and saw to give the required atmosphere. To the left rear was a hay mow made up of real hay borrowed for the week from a local feed store for the cost of carting to and from the theatre.

Three actors were used in the prologue. They constituted a trio of male singers. Their costumes were the typical blue jeans and straw hats and cowhide boots.

Just before the curtain lifted, the orchestra played a melody which included instrumental imitations of familiar farm animals and changing into the vamp of “Hayseed Jazz,” as the stage was disclosed. The orchestra vamp was continued for a period of about thirty seconds to give the audience time to fully view the stage before the trio began the singing. Following the conclusion of this number, the trio sang “The Chicken Rag” doing a rooster dance through the choruses. A real old fashioned break down dance by the trio concluded the prologue.

Harold Eschbach, manager of the LaSalle theatre, LaSalle, Ill., who recently inaugurated exploitation when assisted by Dan Roche, Paramount exploitation representative in the territory, in advertising “Idols of Clay,” succeeded so well that he followed up that precedent by persuading the woman editor of the "Daily Post" to run a seven-column streamer on the front page devoted to the story of his "Humoresque" booking.

Bernard Denkin, Jr., manager of the Wizard theatre, Baltimore, Md., sent out New Year’s card in white, black and color to patrons, the copy reading, "This is only a little card but it carries a big Thank You for your business during the past year and cordial wishes for the New Year, Bernard Denkin, Jr., Wizard theatre." A page of advertising might have been purchased for the expenditure that would have been less beneficial.
Animated Cutout Windows Attract for "Humoresque"

Two of the most original and striking window displays advertising the Paramount production "Humoresque," that have come to general notice were designed by Ludy Bosten, manager of the A-Muse-U theatre, Muscatine, Iowa. Ludy is essentially original, so when he booked this picture he made up his mind to make the people of Muscatine sit up and take notice.

One of the windows, shown in the accompanying photograph, was in Schmidt’s Music Store in the most conspicuous location in town and consisted of a cutout of the three sheet, several scenes from that picture in rich gold frames and for the pièce de résistance a big record twelve feet in diameter cut out of compos board and painted black with a blue center like a record, which was attached to a concealed motor and kept revolving at a speed similar to that of a Victrola.

The other window was on the opposite side of the main street, where the populace was shown a cutout of the twenty-four sheet showing a boy playing a violin, with a girl by his side. The cutout itself meant little but after Ludy had sawed the boy’s arm off at the elbow, put it on a pivot, attached a motor and bands and touched it off and the boy began to "fiddle" as though his life depended on it, the crowds around this window stopped traffic. Ludy is a firm believer in exploitation stunts, particularly those which show action.

This is the second or third case on record of an animated window display and shows what a little investment of time will do, for both windows required nothing more than two electric fan motors, two old bicycle wheels, some leather bands, the cutouts and a little "elbow grease,” as Ludy put it.

Dan Roche, Paramount exploitation man from the Chicago exchange, was on the ground to assist and he saw to it that both music stores carried big ads in the newspaper calling attention to “the biggest record every made” and “the giant fiddler” in their respective windows.

Blind Man Figures In “Idols of Clay” Publicity Campaign

"I am blind” was the statement that appeared on the hat of a sandwich man who paraded the streets of Denver preceding the opening of George Fitzmaurice’s third special for Paramount, “Idols of Clay” at the Rialto theatre of that city. “But I would give $10 to see Mae Murray in ‘Idols of Clay’ at the Rialto theatre Sunday,” concluded the signs, two of which he carried, one on his chest and the other on his back in regular bally-hoo style.

The much pitied blind man, it seemed, was in full possession of his sight. As one Denver paper pointed out, he claimed the redeeming feature of one man gifted with perfect eyesight who made a pretense of blindness without endeavoring to mullet the public for charitable purposes. The whole stunt had been devised by Fred V. Greene, Jr., exploitation representative at the local exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, to promote interest in the run of “Idols of Clay” at the Rialto.
“Dinty” Characters Impersonated During Criterion Engagement of Neilan Feature

When Manager Willard C. Patterson, of the Criterion theatre, Atlanta, Ga., bestirs himself to an un-wonted degree to exploit a picture, one may be pretty sure that he counts that picture a winner, and also that he will do the job in a thoroughly efficient manner.

His drive for First National’s “Dinty” began six weeks ahead of the showing of the picture, with brief stories, newsy little paragraphs about Marshal Neilan, his company, his previous productions, etc., and frequent mention was made of “Dinty” and its youthful star.

Thirty days before the showing, he began running a trailer which called attention to the picture, advertised as “Coming Soon,” and which called attention to Neilan’s previous successes, all of which have played at the Criterion, and also to the youthful star, who has been exceedingly well-liked in “Don’t Ever Marry” and “Go and Get It.”

A trio of boys—“Dinty,” “Chinkie,” and “Watermillions”—all creditable imitations, were dressed up and sent out to work the streets, carrying placards on their backs which read “See Dinty—Criterion today.”

Twenty-five people in cigar-stores and cigar-stands in hotels had been engaged to speak a good word for “Dinty” and the results were eminently satisfactory. This word of mouth exploitation was most unusual, and it bore the stamp of originality—therefore, it was successful.

Also, on opening day, one thousand booklets giving the story of Barry’s life were given away to the first one thousand children; and two hundred newsboys wore a little tag, reading “Go and see ‘Dinty’ at the Criterion—you’ll like him—he’s one of us.” And the newsies were so interested in the picture, which, they were told, was about a newsboy, that the older boys, leaders of the newly formed Newsboy League, called on Mr. Patterson and asked him to arrange to let them see it.

A special stage set which depicted a snowy landscape—snow-covered hills—with a wee cottage nestling in a tiny grove of snow-covered fir-trees in a valley. Warm lights shone from the windows of the tiny cottage, and smoke came from the tiny chimney. A double row of snow-covered pines led from the little cottage down across the hill to where, just at the left of the stage, the chimney of a cottage on the lower slope of the hill was just visible.
"The Riddle: Woman" Basis of Adaptable Series-Scenario Newspaper Exploitation

Much of the complaint which is heard almost daily relative to the reluctance of American newspapers to accord proper cooperation to the motion picture industry undoubtedly is due as much to the failure of the exhibitor to cooperate as to any one reason.

A campaign which advances the theatre's interest without benefiting in some degree the newspaper which sponsors it is seldom executed in such manner as to insure its wholly satisfactory fruition.

It is an advertising event of interest that calls attention to these facts, an event which holds high position among the cooperative exploitation stunts of all time.

G. MEYER, feature sales manager of the Des Moines, La., branch of Pathé Exchange, Inc., is responsible for the series-scenario contest which kept the name of the Associated Exhibitors' production starring Geraldine Farrar, "The Riddle: Woman," on the front page of the Des Moines Capital for twelve days, accompanied each day with a two-column photograph, a box of black and white type and editorial matter in single columns below. Accompanying illustrations show the space gained on the first and twelfth days of the drive.

A scenario contest formed the basis of the campaign, and stills from the picture were utilized as illustrations. There are many novel angles which should be generally appreciated, and the whole stunt is eminently adaptable.

With the publication of the first photograph appeared the details of the contest. The prizes offered aggregated $100 and were so scaled as to stimulate general interest, postal regulations, of course, being complied with.

It was announced in that space that twelve photographs would appear on twelve consecutive days, that a synopsis similar to, but not identical with, that which outlines the plot of "The Riddle: Woman" would accompany the photographs and that contestants were to write original scenarios or synopses which were illustrated by the photographs published.

The contributions were to be delivered to the newspaper office and the announcement specified that Pathé reserved the right to purchase any that were considered practical for production purposes upon payment to the author.

So much for the bare outline of the stunt. The outline is sufficient to give exhibitors everywhere working data upon which can be modeled individual contests of similar nature and productivity.

The outstanding merit of the idea, aside from its obvious novelty, is the fact that the newspaper profited by the space devoted to the daily box and photographs. The amount of comment that was created cannot be estimated with any degree of accuracy. But the imagination is not called upon to perform the unprecedented in reaching the conclusion that the number of times the title of the picture and the name of the newspaper were mentioned in the twelve days and in the intervening period before the announcement of prize winners more than justified the efforts and money expended in perfecting and executing the enterprise.

The series-scenario is a new form of theatre-newspaper feature. It can be applied to numerous other features now on the market and others that will be produced. The title of the production which formed the basis of the original campaign was especially suitable, but the idea should outlive the picture and the persons involved in its making. It has practicality, adaptability and dual productivity. Ideas possessing those elements endure.

To Mr. Meyer, creator of the idea, credit is due.

To the newspaper which published the series credit is also due for insight and enterprise not commonly accorded the press of the nation.

To the spirit of cooperation, which made possible this campaign and through it the many similar events which will follow, both theatremen and newspapermen owe much of their success. It is by this agency that worthwhile works are accomplished.

Louis K. Sidney, managing director of William Fox's Denver, Colo., theatres, adopted the double program during the holiday season to offset possible business depression, using "Married Life" and "Even As Eve" at the Rivoli, sharply contrasting First National attractions.
STUNTS

Balaban & Katz, Chicago, obtained a two column photograph of two Riviera usherettes and a publicity story in the "Herald and Examiner" by stating that they had not been able to locate in the vicinity of the new Tivoli theatre, soon to open at 63rd st. and Cottage Grove Ave., young women beautiful enough to hold similar positions at the new playhouse and inviting competition from North and West. A good publicity stunt which may be adapted to local conditions by any exhibitor.

Excerpts from "Topics of the Day" are being published in the excellently made up twenty-page house organ distributed by the Saenger Amusement Company for its New Orleans, La., theatres.

The manner in which stunt exploitation has been utilized in London, England, is well illustrated in the December, 1920, issue of "The Goldwynner," published by Goldwyn Limited.

A prize of $100, with smaller prizes in proportion and the usual provision made for tying contestants, is being conducted by Hugo Riesenfeld, managing director of the Rialto, Rivoli and Criterion theatres, New York, for letters from husbands giving their opinion of the husband in "Midsummer Madness."

 Perfume and sachet bags are being provided at the Chicago exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in connection with the exploitation of "Heliotrope." The story told of one exhibitor, that he sampled the perfume at the exchange, went home with the scent on his lapel and had to book the picture to substantiate his story of its origin, suggests the manifold uses to which the material may be put by exhibitors playing the picture.

The lobby stage for display purposes recently erected by the Garrick theatre, Los Angeles, and discussed recently in this department has been classed in and made permanent, providing opportunity for attractive displays and exploitation playlets.

A teaser campaign of unusual scope has been started in Chicago to prepare the way for "Outside the Law," forthcoming Universal feature. The title offers unlimited liberty to the exploitation man.

He was successful in disposing of most of the territory for these cartoons and for a time was located in New York City where he placed them in several of the first run Broadway houses.

J. L. Friedman, president of Celebrated, in commenting upon Mr. Mintz' resignation said:

"While Mr. Mintz has only been with me for ten months, I have found him a very capable executive and it is with regret that I accepted his resignation. We are still the best of friends and were it not for the fact that his new proposition is so big and of such tremendous possibilities, I would try to persuade him to remain with Celebrated."

Was With Hallmark

Mr. Mintz is one of the best known figures in Chicago filmland. With Frank Zambrino he started U-ity Film Exchange and for three and a half years was manager of that progressive Chicago exchange. He resigned to accept the management of the Chicago exchange of Mutual Film Corporation three years ago and held that position until the Hallmark Company took over Mutual. Frank Hall then promoted him to serial manager, having charge of the entire United States.

Mr. Mintz resigned from Hallmark to become district manager for Republic. Then Mr. Friedman obtained his services.

Supply Musical Settings.

In his new field of endeavor, Mr. Mintz will have charge of sales for Synchronized Scenario Music Company, which is supplying complete musical settings for every feature. These are especially arranged by the foremost musical directors of the country.

Such well known musicians as Carl Edourde, leader of the New York Strand orchestra; James C. Bradford, for seven years director of music at the Broadway theatre, New York, and C. J. Brel, who composed the score for "The Birth of a Nation," are on the professional staff of Synchronized.

Mr. Mintz is preparing an itinerary that will take him in all of the large exchange centers of the country.

Chicago M. P. P. Club

Shows Steady Growth.

From a chance meeting of a trio of Chicago producers it came to the Chicago Motion Picture Press Club, and a goodly gathering of publicity promoters, trade journal men and film critics, hear, hear witness to the stability of this new organization. Not a single Chicago person of prominence in the picture promotion game has been left out of the fold.

The new club gives semi-monthly noonday dinners to which prominent men and women from every walk of life are invited and where the discussion of schemes, dreams, and realities take place.

Richard Robertson, the president, is ably supported by Barney G. Ziv as secretary and Irving Mack as treasurer. The roster includes Frederick W. McQuigg (Rob Reel) of the American; W. K. This time only selected men have been notified to be in attendance at the opening session Monday morning.

Of these, the great majority are from within the Paramount organization, although more than 300 applications were received from outside men. The latter were subjected to the most rigid entrance requirements, with the result that only the best qualified were accepted.

"Good Pictures Will Always Get Crowds"
Joe Brandt Says Depression Will Not Affect Good Box Office Films

When you have a good box office attraction no matter what the business conditions may be people will patronize and buy, in the opinion of Joe Brandt of C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation who has just returned to New York from a five weeks' trip through the Middle West and South.

Many Contracts Made

This opinion is declared to be borne out by the number of contracts obtained for George I. Davis' feature, "The Trail, or the Trail's End," which recently had a successful presentation at the Strand theatre, New York.

The contracts on "Isobel" far exceeded Mr. Brandt's expectations and he was practically swamped with offers for territories on James Oliver Curwood's artistry and spectacular effects of the rugged and virile Great Northwest which features House Peters, Jane Novak and a notable cast.

Announce Territories

The First National has closed for Wisconsin, Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Chicago, Michigan, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming and New England, D. Exhibitors Will Convene in Washington January 26-27
Theatre Men From National Capital, Virginia and Maryland Are Scheduled to Attend Meeting to Be Held at Washington Hotel

\textbf{(Special to Exhibitors Herald)}

WASHINGTON, D.C., Jan. 11.—Everything is set for the annual convention in Washington of the exhibitors from the District of Columbia, Virginia, and Maryland, except the tables and the management of the Washington hotel has promised that even they will be ready on schedule time. Local exchange managers and theatre owners and managers have prepared an elaborate program of events running over two days—January 26 and 27.

Committee appointments have not yet been completed, but President George Fuller of the Washington Exchange Managers’ Association, has put a number of his fellow managers to work and results are beginning to show. Abe Dresser has been selected chairman of the entertainment committee. Associated with him are Sidney B. Lust, vice-chairman; W. A. Mack, S. A. Galanty, Jules Levy, W. L. White and Paul E. Krieger.

The report of the entertainment committee is as follows:

January 26, 12 o’clock noon, congregate at the Washington hotel, at Fifteenth and F streets, where the members of the committee will be on hand to say "Howdy."

\textbf{Will Tour the City}

At 1 o’clock an automobile parade will be formed for a tour of the city. Visiting exhibitors and exchange men are urged to be on hand promptly so as not to delay the game.

Three to 5 o’clock will be devoted to a general meeting and get-together gathering. There will be informal talks by men prominent in the industry and in the public eye.

The day’s big event transpires at 8 o’clock. Get your tickets from Abe Dresser. Don’t tell your wife about this part of the program, but, confidentially, the tickets are for a burlesque show. All of the exhibitors who attended the theatre party last year can tell you whether or not it’s worth while.

\textbf{Will Be Strand Guests}

The morning of January 27, until 1 o’clock, is to be open to permit the visitors to call on their exchange manager friends in the offices of the latter and talk shop if they want to. The period until 3 o’clock is left open for meeting purposes but at that hour and until 5 o’clock the visitors will be welcome guests at the Strand theatre, Ninth and D streets, where they will be the guests of Manager Linkins. A good vaudeville show is booked for that week.

You won’t have to put your glad rags on for the big event of the evening. All you need is a good appetite and a ticket which will be gladly supplied by Chairman Dresser. A lot of surprises are promised and the exhibitors will meet some men who can tell them about national legislation and other timely topics of interest. In addition, there will be something worth while in the way of entertainment.

\textbf{Big Fund Collected}

To make this all possible, the finance committee, under the leadership of Lester Rosenthal, has collected from the exchanges a fund that in dollars represents four figures. Mr. Rosenthal has associated with him Jean Crandall, vice-chairman, and Abe Dresser, G. R. Ainsworth, Louis Reichert, Sam Flax and J. H. Beavers.

The executive committee has as its chairman George W. Fuller, Lester Rosenthal as vice chairman, and Clarence L. Linz, Edward A. Sherwood and Abe Dresser as members.

Other committee appointments will be announced by Mr. Fuller. Invitations will be sent to each exhibitor in the Washington territory within the next week or ten days and it is estimated that there will be upwards of 200 visitors in town for this event.

Seats were reserved for some of the out-of-town parties.

Federated Signs for Distribution of Chester Comedy Productions

Negotiations have been closed by Federated Film Exchanges of America and C. L. Chester Productions, whereby Federated will obtain the present Chester program and additional short subjects for distribution.

In making this announcement J. L. Friedman, president, declared: "Mr. Chester, up to the present time, has only been making one two-reel comedy a month, which, undoubtedly, has gained the reputation of being the highest grade two-reel comedy ever put on the market. Federated will not only secure this comedy, but in addition, have contracted with C. L. Chester Productions to take from them a two-reel comedy of the parlor type, of similar quality to the Chester comedy. This comedy will be known as the 'Federated Chester Special.'

To Make Single Reeler

"Federated have also contracted for a single-reel comedy each week, which promises to be the highest grade single-reel parlor comedy ever offered to exhibitors. "Both exhibitors and producers are fast learning that Federated is not only the most logical film distributing organization in America, but, at the same time, has the most logical method of distribution. The contract with Chester, following closely the contract with Special Pictures Corporation, and the contract with Firebrat & McElroy for their Ford Weeklies, is convincing proof that the large producers recognize the splendid distributing facilities of Federated, and by their selection of Federated for their product, they pay testimonial to the most logical method of buying and distribution ever devised.

Offer Large Assortment

"The Chester comedies are too well-known to require any comment, and we believe it a fair statement to make that when Federated starts distribution of these comedies, they will be able to honestly say that they offer not only the greatest assortment of one and two-reel comedies on the market, but unquestionably the largest quantity and the best quality of one and two-reel comedies ever offered by any distributing organization in film history."

Rubye DeRemer Gets Valuable Advertising From Coast to Coast

When Rubye DeRemer, Arrow star, was selected by Paul Hellen, the celebrated artist, as the most beautiful woman in America, the story was syndicated through various newspaper syndicates in the United States, with the result that stories about the star and her pictures have appeared in more than two hundred newspapers in the United States, in many instances on the front page. This publicity has been widespread, with the result that nation-wide interest has been aroused among the motion picture fans and the exhibitors.

In addition to this publicity, the advertising department has succeeded in effecting tie-ups with several national advertisers who will use Miss DeRemer's photograph in their advertisements appearing in magazines and newspapers during the coming year. The cost of this advertising will exceed more than one million dollars, it is claimed, and it will cover a period of a year. All this advertising will be in addition to the advertising being done by the Arrow for these pictures in the trade papers.

Sculpin Work in Crowds at Newark "Passion" Showing

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEWARK, N. J., Jan. 11.—The success which was accorded "Passion," starring the continental actress, distributed by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., came prominently to public notice during the showing at the New Branford theatre, here. For the last seven days of its ten days' showing there the management was forced to employ special watchmen to guard against ticket speculators who had secured supplies of seats calling for reserve chairs in the balcony.

The production opened there on December 16 as the first attraction at the new theatre and the following Sunday when the theatre was doing turn-away business on the attraction the first complaint "of scalping" was received in the management. The New Branford reserved about 200 selected seats in the balcony and it was the tickets calling for the majority of the complaints that the "scalars" succeeded in getting. This speculation in theatre tickets in Newark is unprecedented. The pipe-line of these seats by single individuals did not arouse particular suspicion.

The charge made by the theatre for these seats is 73 cents, and the speculators, who drifted through the crowds waiting for admission, were asking from $2 to $3 each for them and doing a good business, for as near as the management could determine they succeeded in disposing of all of their tickets for every performance.

Wyoming Theatre Is to Give Presentation

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

LARAMIE, WYO., Jan. 11.—The Express theatre has been reopened after a thorough renovation which took over two months. The theatre was erected about eight years ago and the present renovation was for the purpose of enlarging the seating capacity and rearranging the stage, originally planned for stage attractions, to make it more suitable for the presentation of motion picture productions.

"The Inferior Sex," starring Mildred Harris Chaplin and distributed by First National, was selected by Manager J. A. Lynch for the reopening attraction. Miss Harris is a native of Laramie, her parents still living there and the occasion of the showing of any of her pictures is always a big event.

South Bend Theatre to Open January 22

Maugham, Noted English Author, Joins Paramount Staff on Coast

Writer Already Has Started Work on His First Story for Production by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in West

W. Somerset Maugham, author of "The Land of Promise," "The Moon and Sixpence," "Penelope," "Smith" and other noteworthy books and plays, is the latest famous British author to join the staff of Paramount pictures, according to announcement by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

"Mr. Maugham has already started work on his first story," said Mr. Lasky, "and has become a regular member of the West Coast literary colony which already includes Sir Gilbert Parker, Edward Knoblock, Eleanor Glyn and Avery Hopwood. Knoblock Prizes Him Edward Knoblock, for years a close friend and writing associate of Mr. Maugham, says of his contemporary: "I know of no one who writes more intensely human and completely likeable studies of human kind. Maugham will bring to motion pictures a clarity of viewpoint, a knowledge of people, that should prove of inestimable value.

W. Somerset Maugham was born January 25th, 1874, in Paris, France, where he lived until the death of his father, a member of the British embassy. Before he was 18 years of age he had completed a course in philosophy at the University of Heidelberg, after which he entered St. Thomas hospital, London as a medical student. The urge to authorship however would not stop him, and the young intern jolted on ambulance calls about London he gathered material for his first novel, "Liza of Lambeth," published when he was 21.

Leaves Medical Profession

The novel was successful and it was not strange that after completing his medical work and receiving his doctor's degree two years later, he renounced medicine and threw himself heart and soul into writing. Having proved successful as a novelist he wrote and produced "The Man of Honor," a successful play, that, as he says, "nearly ruined my writing chances." For while successful it was serious and "highbrow," difficult of the light, frothy domestic comedies which were to bring his later triumphs.

His play, "Jack Straw," has been done as a Paramount picture by William De Mille. "The Explorer" also, has been filmed by Paramount.

Served During War

During the early part of the war Mr. Maugham served as a doctor and ambulance driver, bringing back wounded from the Western front. His knowledge of English, French, German, Spanish, Italian and Russian made him invaluable for the Intelligence Service in which branch he spent the remaining years of the war in Switzerland, the United States and Europe.

Since the Armistice, Mr. Maugham has done a serious play, "The Unknown," dealing with the effect of war upon religion, and "Too Many Husbands," a matrimonial farce, both of which have achieved success.

An idea of his views on motion pictures follows:

"I look upon motion pictures as a new and wonderful method of expression with possibilities in many fields of play and novel. What I shall do with the new technique, whether it will be comedy or serious drama, depends upon my own reaction to the profession as I learn it at the studio."

Anita Stewart Company End Its Truckee Work

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 11.—After a week in the frigid, snowbound region of Truckee, the Anita Stewart company has returned to the Louis B. Mayer studio to produce his latest Mayer vehicle, "The Tornado," for issue through Associated First National. With a couple of powerful wind machines to stir up the snow, which is over three feet deep at Truckee at the present time, Director Edwin Carewe obtained some realistic blizzard scenes while on location.

In addition to Miss Stewart and Director Carewe, the company making the trip included: Rudolph Cameron, manager; Madge Tyrene, scenario writer; Walter McGrail, Herbert Rawlinson, G. G. Morse, Robert Kyrle, cameraman; Al Greene, his assistant; Wallace Fox, assistant director, and a number of others.

The story is an original by Jack Murfin. Anthony Paul Kelly prepared the scenario.

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.—Ben Blumenthal, president of Blumenthal and Import Film Company, who signed Pola Negri, the star of First National's production "Joyful Morning," is expected to return here about the middle of the month. Announcement to his plans for Miss Negri will probably be issued at that time.
Associated Exhibitors Giving General Publication to “The Devil” on Feb. 6

According to an announcement from the offices of Associated Exhibitors, “The Devil,” starring George Arliss, will be published to exhibitors throughout the country on February 6. Practically every leading theatre in the country has negotiated for the production following its pre-release showing at the Strand theatre, New York, the week of January 16, it is reported.

Several exceptional presentations are assured, and long runs in important cities are expected. Scores of contracts are daily pouring into the home offices of Associated Exhibitors and Pathé for approval.

Mark Houses Booked

The entire sales force of Pathé, through which the picture will be distributed, reports that the exhibitors who have seen the production have spread the word of its merit and they predict phenomenal success.

Practically all of the houses controlled by the Moe Mark interests will give the picture special presentation with prologue and musical program. Arrangements are under way for presentations in Boston, Buffalo, Brooklyn, Newark, Chicago, Cleveland, Kansas City and Los Angeles.

Use Advertising Signs

With the premiere of “The Devil” at the Strand theatre, unique exploitation aids will be utilized for the first time. Associated Exhibitors has contracted for a large quantity of portable electric signs. These signs are 36 by 22 feet, set in a portable box and carrying a celluloid poster in four colors. Eight switch lights of various colors are set in the box and the ever-changing color behind the celluloid screen gives a beautiful and striking effect.

Several exhibitors throughout the country have been shown the signs on their visit to the Associated Exhibitors in New York and have rented them for use in their theatres during the showing.

Brennecke Winner Of Sales Contest

S. B. Brennecke, office manager of the New York City branch office of Educational Films, was announced this week as the winner of first prize for the largest volume of bookings during December. This contest was inaugurated to stimulate sales during what is regarded as the worst month in the year and it is reported that its result was to bring in the largest total amount of business in the history of the exchange.

Another result of Mr. Brennecke’s activities was his dispatch recently to New Orleans, where he will assist in a special drive through Louisiana and Mississippi.

“Black Beauty” Reaches New York and Is Shown To a Special Audience

The film of “Black Beauty” reached Vitagraph Brooklyn studios recently and Lillian and George Randolph Chester have finally completed its editing.

The first public showing of this film, which features Jean Paige, and has an all star cast, was on the Astor Ballroom on Wednesday, January 5. Albert E. Smith, president of the company; Jean Paige and Lillian and George Randolph Chester, who have been in charge of its editing, were present.

“Black Beauty” was made at Vitagraph West Coast studio under the direction of David Smith, several months having been spent on the production. Essentially, as written by Anna Sewell, the story was the autobiography of a horse. The dramatic incidents were present, but the human element was slight. Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester have supplied the human story.

Clune Has “Toreador” For Western Territory

Irving M. Lesser, general manager for the Western Pictures Exploitation Company in Los Angeles, and who is now in New York, desires to correct a statement that was given the trade papers through his Western offices to the effect that “The Toreador,” a production from Romyane Super Film Company, was distributed in California, Nevada and Arizona by the All-Star Features Distributors.

The above statement, which was inserted in the Lesser advertisements, and which appeared in the reading notices of all trade journals, is an error, as “The Toreador” is distributed in the above mentioned territory by Clune Film Exchange of Los Angeles, who have charge of the distribution of same for many months.

BrackenEstablishes Record in Production

Bertram Bracken has established a record for versatility in the production of “Kazan” as a Selig special.

He is said to have written the scenario as he went along, filmed all of the scenes in twenty-seven working days, and cut and titled the picture. Bracken’s rush was due to the fact that the dog teams used throughout the picture had to be back in snowbound Truckee on a certain date to start in on a hauling contract. “Kazan” is a picturization of the famous James Oliver Curwood wolf-dog story of the same name. The showing of a positive print, brought to New York by W. Wainwright recently, is claimed to have started a veritable avalanche of offers for the American rights to the picture.

Branch Managers Present Gifts to Selznick Heads

As a manifestation of appreciation, affection and esteem the branch and division managers of the Selznick organization tendered Sam E. Morris, general manager; Charles Rogers, sales manager and J. J. Rotchford, assistant general manager, valuable holiday gifts.

Morris was given a green gold and platinum watch; Rogers received a beautiful brass desk set, and Rotchford was the recipient of a handsomely fitted traveling bag.

A pleasing portrait of Irene Rich, the Goldwyn player, whose latest picture is the screen adaptation of the stage success, “A Voice in the Dark.”
Public Is Shopping in Value in Pictures, Says Selznick Official

Sales Manager Rogers Declares There Is No Real Depression in the Theatre Business—Claims "Star" Films Are Here to Stay

Charles Rogers, sales manager of Selznick Pictures Corporation, following a tour of the exchange centers, declared that he found the public shopping for value in pictures the same as in other lines of commercial enterprises.

He also declared that he found no real depression in the theatre business. "Conditions were satisfactory," he said, "and any little hull the exhibitors were having was on account of the holiday season."

Stars Here to Stay

He pointed out that the great number of fine theatres springing up over the country evidenced a general movement of greater prosperity among exhibitors. Mr. Rogers is firmly convinced that the "stars" have come to stay. Confirming this, Mr. Rogers cited that following the announcement of the making of two new Selznick stars, namely, Conway Tearle and Martha Mansfield, the Washington branch office of the Selznick organization signed sixteen theatres in one day to show the new star series of productions.

"I also found," said Mr. Rogers, "that wherever worth while pictures were shown the exhibitor was doing a 'real' business and that the public is shopping for value in pictures just as it does in other lines of commercial enterprises. A very shining example of this condition was called to my attention while I was visiting the big Southwestern cities, where one of the largest film organizations in the business has built a beautiful theatre. They had one of their pictures on view. The picture was playing to about a 'corporal's guard,' while an independent exhibitor, a half block away, was holding them out to capacity business, with a picture released by an independent distributing and producing organization.

Will Outlive Specials

"The exhibitors all over the country, large or small, should show their great enthusiasm; our message that we were going to continue to feature and produce our 'star' series. They are convinced that 'stars' are the thing and will outlive special productions. Stars build the clientele of the theatre the same as a merchant builds a clientele with merchandise. The exhibitor is assured of a certain amount of business on 'stars' which he cannot depend upon with specials, "The greatest proof in the world that 'stars' are the thing is the fact that when you approach an exhibitor with a special they ask you: 'Who is in it?' Stars are here to stay and we are for them. Every branch that I called upon had written business on the new Tearle and Mansfield series the very day the wire announcing them was received. "Big drives were on for volume business and every branch has a particular week designated as 'Sam E. Morris Week' or 'Jubilee Week,' or 'Sam E. Morris Jubilee Week."

Dorothy Dalton Goes West for Production

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.—Dorothy Dalton has departed for Hollywood, Calif., where she will be starred in a George Melford special for Paramount. It will be an adaptation of Sir Gilbert Parker's "The Money Master." James Kirkwood will direct the play, and Miss Dalton will be the first time in nearly two years that Miss Dalton has worked on the Coast.

First Run Houses Book American's "Blue Moon"

Recent first run bookings for "The Blue Moon," including the Royal of Des Moines, Ia., the Nixon of Erie, Pa., the Broadway Pantages of Los Angeles, Cal., the Strand of Battle Creek, Mich., the Orpheum of Detroit, Mich., and other first run houses Garrie of St. Louis, Mo., are being steadily followed by multiple contracts from these and other letter points, the American Film Company reports. "The Blue Moon" is an adaptation of the popular novel by David Anderson, and the book has gone through numerous editions and has been run serially in seven hundred newspapers in the United States. Daniel F. Whitecomb made the adaptation of the story and George L. Cox directed the production, which is a romantic picture of Life in the flatwoods of Indiana.

"You Can't Kill Love"

Has Northwest Locale

"You Can't Kill Love," a tale laid in the Canadian Rockies, on Lake Louise and the international Park, directed by Burton George, is scheduled for January 29 publication by Selznick Pictures Corporation. The story was written by Michael J. Phillips, and adapted for the screen by Edward Johnson. Included in the all-star cast are Hedda Hopper, who played the feminine lead opposite William Fawcett; placed twelve feet from the screen. The reels were run off twice so that the twelve men could pass through the steel-barred doors of their cells.

Productions Shown in Sing Sing Death House

A dozen condemned men had the privilege this Christmas of seeing the first motion picture ever exhibited in Sing Sing's death house as the result of the kindness of Thomas Meighan, Paramout star, and his director, Tom Forman, who recently presented a projection machine to the prison.

The ill-fated men, who receive few privileges, enjoyed their picture show far more than the other convicts did their more elaborate Christmas entertainment. As the death house is small, the machine had to be placed twelve feet from the screen. The reels were run off twice so that the twelve men could pass through the steel-barred doors of their cells.

Charles Rogers

Sales manager of Selznick Pictures Corp., who has just completed a tour of the country in the interests of his company. New George D. Baker Film "Temple Dusk" Considered His Best

The completion of the first George D. Baker Production is announced by Sawyer and Lubin who are presenting "Temple Dusk" as an elaborate special feature on the Metro program. The completed feature is declared by many who have seen it to be the best George D. Baker Production that has so far been made. "Temple Dusk" was enacted by a cast which included Anna Q. Nilsson, Robert Frazier, Charles Lane, Tony Ross, Frank Currier, and Kate Blanke. Andre Barletier, who photographed "Earthbound," was engaged by Mr. Baker to take charge of the camera work on "Temple Dusk."

The story, which was written by Calvin Johnston, has had the most costly production ever given to any feature directed by George D. Baker. The completion of the interiors range from a gambling palace to a Bowery church and from a fashionable modiste shop to a ronder's apartment.

Begins Scenes of Moore's "Divorce of Convenience"

First scenes for the forthcoming Owen Moore production, "A Divorce of Convenience," were shot recently at the Selznick Fort Lee studios under the direction of Robert Ellis. "A Divorce of Convenience," which follows in the wake of Moore's recently completed production, "The Chicken in the Case," is declared to provide the stars with many mirth-provoking situations. In the supporting cast are Katherine Perry, playing the leading feminine role; Anita Naldi, George Lassey, Frank Wonderlee, Charles Craig, Dan Duffy and Matthew Betts. The story was pictured by Sarah Y. Mason. Edward Sturgis is assisting Director Ellis.

Escondido Has New House

ESCONDIDO, CAL.—The new Kiema theatre was recently opened here by A. H. Nelson and N. O. Emeri. The house will seat 1,000 patrons.
W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Film Corporation, commenting on an article published in a New York newspaper in which stress was laid on the curtailment of exhibition by independent distributors and producing organizations, stated that he did not consider this serious from the standpoint of the exhibitors.

He states that while this undeniably would lessen the number of features available through national distribution organizations it would not injure the exhibitors for the reason that they would be able to obtain just as good pictures and just as many on the independent market.

Means Additional Producers

Mr. Shallenberger further states that this would be met and overcome by the independent producers and distributors. In his opinion it will mean perhaps the entrance of many producing companies who will issue on the independent market and it will mean a tremendous increase in the volume of business of the states rights distributors throughout the United States.

"Exhibitors will turn more and more to the independent distributors," he says, "and there is no question but what this increased volume of business is merited by the independents for years past they have battled courageously against heavy odds to make their way in the field, starting from the time when it was extremely difficult to get a good motion picture for independent distributors up to the present date when the pick of the finest motion pictures are offered on the independent plan.

Seek Open Market

"The state right buyer has never lost heart but has continued to consistently work for a condition which has now come about, that is, the absolute open market whereby an exhibitor can book such pictures as he feels are suitable to his house without let or hindrance, without being forced to take a number of mediocre pictures to go along with one good one, but simply choose his product and give his patrons the best of entertainment."

Mr. Shallenberger is optimistic over the situation and states that as further evidence of Arrow's faith in the bright future of the independent producers and distributors it is adding additional representatives to its organization and spreading out in many ways rather than curb.

"The Message" is Title

Of New Ford Weekly

The history of the transmitting of messages from the time of the Indian runner to thirty minutes from America to Europe, is told in the Ford Educational Weekly No. 2, "The Message," which is published through the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., on January 16.

"The Message" goes on to tell pictorially how telegrams are sent, received, sorted, routed, delivered, how operators are trained. It also shows how these almost unbelievable records are made, such as eleven minutes for a message from New York to San Francisco, and the even faster special stock quotations sent across the continent in forty-five seconds, and the speed of cablegrams, how wireless is sent and received and how the radiophone and heliograph are operated.

Frothingham Assembles

Cast for "Other Woman"

J. L. Frothingham, who is making for distribution by W. W. Hodkinson Corporation a series of four productions, has announced a change in the cast of "The Other Woman."

Two additions have been made in Kate Price and Lincoln Palmer. The cast also includes Jerome Patrick, Jane Novak, Helen Jerome Eddy, William Conklin, Joseph J. Dowling and Franklee Lee.

“Every Man’s Price” the First J. W. Film Feature Ready for Distribution

E. S. Mannheimer, one of the organizers of Paramount and known for many years as the "Serial King," the producer of "The Branded Four" and "The Crimson Lash," is the general manager of the newly formed J. W. Film Corporation, with offices at 130 W. 46th street, New York City.

The corporation will devote its energies for the present to supplying elaborate productions of a special nature to independent exchanges. Mannheimer, who has been operating on a large-scale in the foreign market, controlling the foreign rights of "The Great Gamble," "The Civil Eye," and "The Mystery Mind," has been preparing for some time to become active once more in the producing and distributing fields. The new "every man's price" comes into being with its first production ready for immediate issue and four other special features rapidly nearing completion.

The initial offering of the new organization is a Burton King production, "Every Man's Price." Grace Darling is the star and will be given the backing of an advertising campaign worthy of the excellent work she is said to do in this latest vehicle.

Monkey Impersonator in Boston Exploits Picture

A unique publicity tieup was recently put over in Boston by Harry Asher of American Feature Film Company, distributer of Universal, in connection with the occasion of the issue in that territory of the two reel Universal Jewel, "A Prohibition Monkey," featuring Joe Martin, the orang-outang.

Patrick Walsh, known in theatrical circles as the best "monkey-man" in the impersonation field, was appearing in Boston at the time. Asher arranged a tradescan showing the screen appearance of "A Prohibition Monkey" in three of the leading theatres, the Beacon, Loew's Orpheum, and the Mod-"o." At the same time an eight-column spread in the magazine section of the Boston Sunday Post, comparing Walsh and Joe Martin, with pictures and interviews of each. The publicity story caused much amused comment in Boston and assured crowded houses for the three theatres.

Conway Tearle Feature Is Staged Elaborately

An elaborately appointed reception room, with conservatory and a big drawing room was one of the big sets built and filmed for the forthcoming Conway Tearle production, "The Sifter," which is directed by Henry Kolker at the Selznick Fort Lee studios.

In addition to this large set, a twelve piece jazz orchestra music, and more than 100 extras took active part in the scenes. Two soloists from the Metropolitan Opera Company imparted the vocal touch. The cast includes Winning Westover, Warburton Gamble, Robert Ellis, George Stewart, Warren Cook, and Helen Lindon. "The Sifter" is a melodrama in which Terhune wrote the story, and the R. Cecil Smiths picturized it. Harmon Weight is assisting Director Kolker and Mike Badaface is in charge of the photography.

Curwood in Warning

As to Screen Rights

Urges Producers to Consult Him Before Purchasing

Any of His Novels

James Oliver Curwood is urging the producers of the country to get into direct communication with him, or with his authorized agents, Robert E. Davis Corporation, when screen rights to stories of his are offered from outside sources.

"I have never heard of Joseph Ziden, and he has no screen rights to novels of mine. The Screen Guild has been several times foist upon producers original, one old and two reel scenarios of mine, and old short stories, which have been advertised by various vendors as 'novels' and 'big feature stories.'

Wants An Understanding

'The producers are my friends. I want them to understand the situation, and to get into direct communication with me or my authorized agents, or with my attorneys either in New York or Los Angeles, before confronting stories of mine from outside sources. We will give prompt and honest facts in every instance, facts which may save the great deal of money and trouble, and which cannot be a detriment to any honest and legitimate sale.'

"Parish Priest" on Stage

Fororunner for the Film

While Herman J. Garfield is seeking to make "Parish Priest," an adaptation of in a screen version of the famous old Dan Sully vehicle, "The Parish Priest," which opened just twenty years ago this month, and is still bringing big royalties, its author, Daniel L. Hart, can enjoy a run on Broadway, the stage version is drawing its usual big crowds to a New York theatre.

On this occasion the twentieth successsive season of this remarkable play's appearance in "The Parish Priest," has been presented at the Yorkville theatre. Where the film version will be presented will depend upon what arrangements Garfield makes for a Broadway house, as he is particularly desirous of finding a theatre where the drama will be allowed to run without interruption as long as its proven popularity promises that it will run. Whether "The Parish Priest" will be handled like "Way Down East" and presented in all of the large cities for runs before being distributed in the regular manner is an announced, and announcement will be forthcoming at an early date, it is promised.

First of New Hayakawa Series Will Have Strand Premiere January 30

The first of a new series of specials, "The First Born," which Sessue Hayakawa is producing for Robertson-Cole, will have its premiere at the Strand theatre, New York City, on January 30.

The picture will be put on by Joseph Plunkett, managing director of the Strand, with an elaborate campaign of exploitation, so that its opening will be comparable to that of "Kismet," the Robertson-Cole special, which also had its initial showing at the same theatre.

Advertising To Be Realistic

All the rich Oriental atmosphere and the human appeal of "The First Born" will be utilized in the advertising and exploitation, so that its New York showing may not only commend it to the public, but exemplify to exhibitors what can be done with the picture from the showman's angle.

"The First Born" is adapted from the stage play of the same name which was written and acted by Francis Powers.

No expense or effort was spared on "The First Born," and plenty of time was given to its preparation, in order that it might be a wonder of artistic and dramatic merit. The difficulties of depicting, in California, the scenes in the quaint fishing villages along the shores of the Hoang-Ho river in China, were surmounted through patience and perseverance. The scenes reproducing San Francisco's Chinatown as it appeared before devastated by the earthquake, called for much research work and a big outlay of money, but the settings are perfect.

Colin Campbell Directs

Colin Campbell directed. There is a great diversity of locale in the story. But at no time did Mr. Campbell find anything "made to order" for him. There was always some building to be done or some landscape to change. In the interior settings, in Frisco's Chinatown, there is a wealth of decorations, props, etc., all of which were brought direct from China, to effect an atmosphere of realism. The picture is elaborate on a large scale.

Following the usual custom, Robertson-Cole has not given the public a picture which contains only a star and a good story, but an excellent cast as well. Supporting Hayakawa are several well-known screen actors and actresses. Helen Jerome Eddy plays the woman lead opposite Hayakawa; Marie D avis has an important role; Wilson Hummel is strong in a character portrayal, and the two Japanese actors, Goro Kino and Frank Seki are highly entertaining. Charles Willard, "Sonny Boy" Ward, the little 5-year-old chub who appears as "The First Born," gives a worthwhile performance.

Hodkinson Exchange Men Meet in N. Y. Declare Conditions in Their Respective Territories Are Prosperous

Six of the branch representatives of the W. W. Hodkinson organization of the Atlantic division, who were in New York at Christmas time, formed the basis of an informal meeting at the Hodkinson office. Those attending were W. H. Dunbar of Boston, H. E. Thompson of Albany, Norman H. Moray of New York, S. A. Galanty of Washington, John R. Lynch of Philadelphia and J. G. Fater of Charlotte.

Each of these has made a splendid record in his field. Mr. Dunbar and Mr. Thompson have been Hodkinson "stand-bys" several years, and in New England.

Tell of Southern Conditions

Mr. Moray was formerly manager of the New York exchange for Select. Mr. Galanty, who was salesman at the Hodkinson Washington branch, was promoted to representative last summer. Mr. Lynch, who was previously with Pathé in Pennsylvania, took charge of Philadelphia branch last fall. Mr. Fater, formerly a "special" with Benjamin Hamilton, later represented Hodkinson in Baltimore, and was made branch representative at Charlotte, N. C., last fall.

The views of Mr. Galanty and Mr. Fater as to conditions in the South are interesting. Both say that business has been affected in spots only; that in the large towns and cities the maximum volume of motion picture attendance continues.

Confer With Hodkinson

Mr. Thompson and Mr. Dunbar report the same general state of affairs in New York state and in New England.

Each of these representatives report that the demand for Hodkinson productions is steadily increasing, particularly among the largest exhibitors.

W. W. Hodkinson held conferences during the week with these representatives and they were conducted by H. S. Beardsley, supervisor of the Atlantic division.

Levey Begins Work

On Enlarging Space of His New York Studios

Work has begun on the enlargement of the Harry Levey studios at 230 West 39th Street, New York City. An entire new floor is being added, making the building one of the largest and most fully equipped modern studios in New York City.

The property is directly opposite the site upon which the new Times Square post office is being erected, and new inventions and contrivances are being installed in the new floor of the Levey studios to facilitate the study of the big businesses and educational problems in which the company specializes.

New executive offices, production department offices, cutting rooms, editing department rooms and rest rooms are being installed.

Another distinguishing mark of the Levey studios is a special room for the building of "mechanographs," contrivances invented and perfected by the Harry Levey Service Corporation. Much of the work of the company lies in showing on the screen the mechanism and operation of various kinds of machinery.

Lewis' "The Sage Hen" Tops List Of Pathe Issues for January 23

Gladys Brockwell Plays Title Role in Production Which Was Adapted From the Story Written by Harry Solter

Pathe Exchange, Inc., in accordance with its plans for bigger productions for the new year, has scheduled the new Edgar Lewis production, "The Sage Hen," to head its schedule for the week of January 23. Like a majority of Edgar Lewis' Pathe features, "The Sage Hen" is an outdoor drama with a powerful emotional appeal. Arizona in the days of the '50s furnishes a background for the story.

"Sage Hen" was a term applied to women of doubtful character in the days of the Old West. Such a reputation had unjustly been given to Jane Croft, played by Gladys Brockwell, who courageously suffered every persecution of spirit, mind and body and faced every sacrifice. First for the protection of her own son, and then for a young girl over whom her wonderful mother's heart yearned.

Theme Is Mother Love

Mother love is the theme that throbs throughout the story, written by Harry Solter, humanized and visualized by Edgar Lewis and characterized by a remarkable cast of feature players. The action of the production transpires in Arizona from 1850 to 1900, when towns thrived only when there was gold in the hills and grazing land for the cattle. Accordingly the picture is filled with the virile atmosphere of the plains, of the dance hall, the gold rush and the lawlessness of the old West. The entire company camped out at Searchlight, Nev., and there Mr. Lewis and everyone concerned in the picture's production imbied the atmosphere that they have so successfully transferred to the screen.

Fine Cast Chosen

Edgar Lewis, who maintains that a chosen cast is the best recipe for a successful photo play, has outdone himself in selecting players for this new Pathe feature. The role of the young mother affords Miss Brockwell's emotional ability great opportunity. Lilian Rich, whose charm was greatly in evidence during her support of H. B. Warner in "Felix O'Day" and "Dance of Destiny," and with Maillon Hamilton in "Half a Chance," upholds the romantic end of the story. Wallace MacDonald, star of both productions, and other pictures, plays the part of the grown-up son of the "Sage Hen." As a child this part is played by little Richard Headrick.

Important parts in the large cast are Helen Case, James Mason, Alfred Allen and Arthur Morrison.

Charles Edison Praises 'The Old Swimmin'-Hole'

"It's as big a thing in celluloid as Riley's poem is in literature." This is the verdict placed upon Charles Ray's picturization of the Hoosier poet's classic, "The Old Swimmin'-Hole," by Charles L. Edison, well-known versifier and newspaper paragrapher. His estimate of this particular film is of special value, because, in addition to his literary qualities, Mr. Edison is something of a child of the soil, born and bred on a Kansas farm, and knows the life that "The Old Swimmin'-Hole" mirrors.

Mr. Edison was one of a party that had a pre-view of this fourth independently-produced picture of Mr. Ray's, in which the star is presented by Arthur S. Kane, for First National. The picture has been set for February 7. It was the unanimous verdict of those that saw the film that in this vehicle the popular actor is "destined to score a knockout."

Sargent Will Direct

Vitagraph's New Star

George L. Sargent, who directed Corinne Griffith in her last three Vitagraph productions, "The Broadway Bubble," "The Whisper Market" and "It Isn't Being Done This Season," among the most successful and popular of all her pictures, will direct Alice Calhoun in her next Vitagraph production, on which work has begun.

Miss Calhoun, who was recently raised to stardom by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, already has completed one picture as a star. This was "Princess Jones," which was made under the direction of Gustave V. Seyffertitz, and which will be published early in the new year.

Al Christie Directs

Single Reel Comedy

As evidencing the attention that is being paid the single reel Vanity comedies which are alternating in weekly release with the Gayety brand, Educational announced this week that Al Christie himself is directing "Hubby, Beloved," which will be released late in January. Irene Dalton, Earl Rodney, Bessie Delitch, Harry Morduck, Harry Edwards and Francis Fenney are in the cast.

According to Educational the demand for Vanity and Gayety comedies promises to establish a new record among single reelers.
Mary O’Connor Sails for London to Join Famous Players Scenario Staff

Mary H. O’Connor, formerly scenario and film editor in the Lasky studio in Hollywood, Cal., sailed from New York recently for London, where she will join Robert E. MacAlarney’s staff at Paramount’s new London studio. She will remain abroad several months.

“The biggest event in Los Angeles film circles in years,” said Miss O’Connor at the Hotel Algonquin before sailing, “was the announcement by Jesse L. Lasky of the new Paramount policy of merging its production department into a vast stock company, and the visual evidence of the inauguration of this policy in Cecil B. DeMille’s new picture, ‘Five Kisses,’ in which Mr. DeMille has assembled a cast including Wallace Reid, Gloria Swanson, Elliott Dexter, Agnes Ayres, Theodore Roberts, Wanda Hawley, Bebe Daniel, Dorothy Cumming, Monte Blue, Raymond Hatton, Theodore Kosloff and Julia Faye.

Interested in Progress

“The film colony in Los Angeles is looking at the project of Los Angeles is looking with a greater interest than has been shown in any production ever made on the Coast, and everybody is expecting that Mr. DeMille will produce a picture which will be the most sensational thing in the history of the screen.

“There has been nothing but praise among all the film people I know, for Mr. Lasky’s plan to change it to make superior pictures. Everybody seems to think that the future of the motion picture as an art has been assured by this radical change in policy.

“The literary center of the United States, formerly Boston, and later New York, Chicago and Indianapolis, has once more moved westward and is now in Hollywood. Really, Los Angeles has become quite set up about it, what with the presence of such notables as Elinor Glyn, Edward Knoblock, Sir Gilbert Parker, Avery Hopwood, Elmer Harris, W. Somerset Maugham, Penrhyn Stanlaws and Paul Irbe.

“It’s rather amusing to see the way some of the people of Los Angeles, who have been in the habit of more or less looking down upon film people, now try to become acquainted with some of our literary lions. And the fact that all of these people are together in the Lasky studio makes it very chesty, indeed.”

Max Roberts Will Be Star
Of the Pinnacle Comedies

Eddy Eckels, president of the Independent Films Association, announces the obtaining of a contract to distribute Pinnacle comedies, starring Max Roberts, French comedian. The company has produced four two reelers thus far, and upon resumption of production will work with a view of delivering one comedy every two weeks.

The Pinnacle company is headed by Samuel Klein and Julius Heinsius as vice-president and treasurer. Production will be resumed upon his arrival at the Balsheinoff studio, where the Neil Hart productions are made.

The Rivoli Observes
Its Third Birthday
Programs at N. Y. Theatre
Have Taken Forefront
in Artistry

(Special to Exhibitors Heralds)

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.—The Rivoli theatre, Hugo Riesenfeld, managing director, last week celebrated its third birthday, having been opened on December 27, 1917.

Because of the holidays the celebration was postponed one week. Last week Cecil B. DeMille’s "Forbidden Fruit" was presented on the birthday program. In conjunction a special festival program was also represented.

Style Copied Over U. S.

When the Rivoli, a sister theatre of the Rialto, opened in 1917, an audience composed of the most famous figures in American literature, music and the stage and photoplay were present. The house has been copied in all parts of the United States and Canada, and has set not only the standard for photoplay theatre construction, but has created programs which have taken the front in arts policy.

To the Rivoli falls the honor of housing some of the most progressive movements in photoplay presentation under the direction of Mr. Riesenfeld. It was at the Rivoli that the ballet had its first showing in a photoplay theatre. Special stage settings, not only for stage shows but also for orchestral overtures, a pretentious innovation, also had their birth at the Rivoli.

Selections from grand opera, with costumes and special appropriate settings, are still another institution which found full development under the direction of Mr. Riesenfeld.

Will Present Novel Dance

The development of the dance, reflecting all nations and periods, has reached such a stage at the Rivoli that Mr. Riesenfeld has been planning the next step, that of introducing masks with the terpsichorean art. He has been working out a series of mask ballets with W. T. Benda, the noted artist. The first of the mask ballets will be shown in about a month.

Martha Mansfield Soon
To Begin Star Feature

Martha Mansfield, who was recently added to the Selznick array of screen stars, will shortly begin work on her first starring vehicle. Alan Crosland will direct her.

According to present arrangements she will begin work as soon as a forthcoming Eugene O’Brien picture is completed. Miss Mansfield is playing the leading feminine role in the O’Brien production, exterior scenes for which were taken in and around Miami and the Everglades of Florida.

C. H. Rosenfeld Forms
New State Right Firm

Charles H. Rosenfeld has formed the Tri-Star Pictures Company with offices in the Hoover Building, 117 West 46th street, New York. Murray F. Beier is associated with him.

Their first offerings to the state right market will be two five reel features produced by McClure Productions, Inc., featuring Alice Mann and Donald Hall, and a series of two reel Ko-Ko-Knott comedies.

Increasing Business On Vanities Comedies

With the Vanity and Gayety series of single reel comedies offered to exhibitors less than a month ago, Educational Film Exchange, Inc., reports that the bookings have already exceeded first estimates and that each exchange is reporting increased business with each week.

One of the strong points cited by Educational is that the same theatres which have been showing the two reel Educational comedies are contracting for the greater portion of the single reelers. Where there are two or three houses under the same management, the greater portion of the cities, both one and two reeleres are being booked by the same circuits and given a first showing at one of the houses in competition with the longer pictures.

Production of these pictures is well ahead of schedule and prints of the various pictures are in all of the exchanges.

The Vanities which are available include "Tea For Two," "Without a Wife," "His Four Fathers," "Mind Your Business" and "Quija Did It." Among the first Gayetys are "Aint Love Grand," "Sand Witches," "Rest in Peace" and "Blondes."

Sells New York Rights To "The Devil's Angel"

Following his trip in which he disposed of ten territories on the LeJaren Hiller production, "The Devil's Angel" starring Helen Gardner, S. J. Rollo, secretary of Clark-Cornelius Corporation, which is distributing this picture on the state right basis, disposed of the rights for New York state to Benjamin Weiser & Company of Utica. This sale did not include the cities of Buffalo and Albany, which will be handled by Jelver Exploitation Service of 117 West 46th Street, New York City.

The Weiser Company also purchased from Mr. Rollo the rights for the same territory of Climax Film Corporation production, "Love's Battle," starring Joe Moree and Eileen Sedwick. Benjamin Weiser Company is one of the newer state right exchanges operating in the state of New York. In selecting "The Devil's Angel" as its initial publication to the exhibitors of the state.

"It Might Happen to You" Has New Haven Premiere

"It Might Happen to You," the five part comedy sponsored by S. & E. Enterprises, began an engagement at Poli's Palace theatre, New Haven, the week of January 2.

This engagement marks the initial presentation of "It Might Happen to You" in New England. The presentation will be marked by an especially staged prologue under the direction of O. H. Edwards, manager of the Palace theatre, together with an extensive publicity campaign in the New Haven newspapers.

atre, January 2, 3, 4 and 5.

Fred Harris Successor to Reed at Lasky Plant

Fred Harris, for four years location director at the Realart studio in Los Angeles, has been appointed to the same position at the Lasky studio, succeeding Walter Reed.

Harris formerly worked at the old Morosco studio when it was known as the producing plant of Bosworth, Incorporated, when Hobart Bosworth was a producer.

New Vehicle for Shirley Mason Is Filmed in Chinatown in Los Angeles

Howard M. Mitchell Directing Story Written by Pearle Doles Bell—Production Will Be Published As "Wing Toy"

When "Wing Toy," Fox Film Corporation's newest vehicle for Shirley Mason, is published the public will get a 100 per cent Chinese subject done in 100 per cent Chinese style, according to Fox officials.

With most of the action transpiring in Chinatown, the Los Angeles Chinatown has been the target of a battery of Fox cameras for several months, with many real Chinese players, wearing costumes imported from China solely for this production.

Howard M. Mitchell, who has had charge of the direction, enlisted a local Chinese intellectual at the outset of the filming to pass upon every bit of business and detail in order that the production might be consistent throughout. The result is said to be one of the most correctly staged pictures ever offered to an exhibitor.

Written by Miss Bell

Pearle Doles Bell, who wrote Shirley Mason's two greatest successes, "Her Elephant Man" and "Love's Harvest," wrote the book for "Wing Toy" and has turned out an exceptionally strong story.

James Wang, the Chinese entrusted with the selection of the Oriental players used in the production, scoured the nearby Pacific Coast for several weeks prior to the filming and gathered a corps of players embracing all the most experienced and intelligent of the Chinese mummers. Every piece of lettering used in the signs and decorations of the dif-
f erent sets passed under Wang's critical eye, and every bow and nod of Miss

Mason in the part of Wing Toy has had to undergo his close scrutiny as well before being filmed.

Is Choice of Fox

The selection of the role of the supposedly Chinese girl for Shirley Mason was, according to advices from the Fox offices, the choice of William Fox himself, who figured that the locale of an American Chinatown, so long a goal of big city slumming parties and curiosity seekers, would be particularly attractive to the theatre-going public.

The action of "Wing Toy" is not confined entirely to Chinatown, but suficient of the narrative is placed in Chinese surroundings to make it distinctly a Chinese picture and to afford its charming little star an opportunity of appearing in a role absolutely unique on screen annals.

As many of the scenes depict life in Chinatown's gambling dens and haunts of the illicit dealers in habit-forming drugs, with plenty of melodramatic action in the way of fights between the almond-eyed denizens, it was necessary to use a large corps of Chinese auxiliaries. This was the cause of great difficulty by Director Mitchell at the outset of the filming.

NEW YORK, Jan. 11, 1921.

Times are hard and money is so tight that Sandow couldn't raise a nickel. However, the famous character actor Jules Cowles, being a particularly imaginative young man, took up himself a wife on Jan. 6. Lavilla Seichert was the girl of his choice. Jules and Lavilla are each on their second marriage, and if that could be sweeter than to have them settle down on a farm and raise a large family of Jules?

"When is Martin going to be in town?" is a question frequently asked of the local advertising staff of the Moving Picture World last Monday.

ROBERT SCHAELE, whose work in a big color play called "The Little Wife," a special Fox picture, has won the commendation of the critics, has completed work as the heavy lead in "Temple Dusk," a George D. Baker production. Schale plays the role of a man about town, a gentleman gambler, and a deal of polished acting is demanded. He delivers in his usual style. Ten years of stage experience as stage director for John Drew, and association in a similar capacity with Ethel Barrymore, Marie Doro, Annie Russell, Hazel Frazee, and others, in addition to several years in motion pictures as a director and actor prove of especial value to Schale in his work today. Among the latest productions in which he plays apparent roles are "On With the Dance," "The Romantic Adventures," "The Stolen Kiss," "Pay the Piper," "Blind Wired," and lastly, "Temple Dusk."

VINCENT COLEMAN, leading man for Constance Talmaide in "Good References" and for Alice Colburn in her first starring vehicle, "Princess Jones," is back in New York. Vincent hints at something big to be announced very shortly.

Bert Lytell expects to complete work in this week in "The Messenger from Mars," directed by Maxwell Karger, to be issued by Metro as a Maxwell Karger Production starring Mr. Lytell. The other day at the studio Bert was all mussed up. He rescues the girl from a burning house. A closeup was to be taken of the dramatic event. Which explains Bert's appearance.

LUcretia Belle, whose work with Norma Talmadge in "The Branded Woman" brought forth much favorable criticism, has decided that most of her fun in entertaining at the city hospitals with some character songs and dances of her own originatiom, and now that the holiday season is over Miss Belle is coming back to the fold. An interesting announcement of her next production will be made within a few days.

GORDON COOPER, who has been responsible for the splendid direction of the Chief Flynn series and the Benny Leonard serial, has completed his contract for the direction of three features for the West Art Film Company. Mr. Cooper arrived in New York a short time ago and is listening to some interesting offers, the decision on one of which will be made within the next few days.

Lucy Cotton, whose loveliness has been transferred to the canvas by such celebrated artists as Harrison Fisher, who pronounced her the ideal type of Southern beauty, Charles-Hung Gibson, Alonzo Kimmel and Howard Chandler Christy, posed last week for E. O. Hoppé, the noted English artist whose work and travel are enjoying considerable favorable comment.

WALTER CAMPBELL started to shoot scenes for his first directorial venture "The Correspondent," which stars Corrine Griffith at Vitagraph's studio.

Joe's Charade

Her first is in pretty, but never in cute,
Her second is always in dear
In movie her third, is a part of the word
And her fourth is in sweet, never fear.
Her fifth you will find, in cunning and cute
And her sixth must be used for a thrill
Her seventh and eighth, are in will and in well
And her ninth comes in packages still.
Now her tenth is in darling, likewise in tens
Her eleventh is a part of a meal
The twelfth of her name is in shadow and sane
Her last is in knoll, not in heel.
Her whole is a name that is famous around
The world, for she's pretty and sweet.
What is the name of this beautiful star
Who has millions of fans at her feet?

credit upon himself, his theatre and his industry.

January 26 has been set aside by the European Relief Committee as a Motion Picture Day. Speakers will be provided, special motion pictures will be available, numerous equally promising provisions have been made.

The exhibitor who realizes fully the importance of the opportunity will start now to pave the way for the event. He will first obtain from his newspaper a genuine news story such as he has probably never been given in the past.

After that every advertisement that he uses will contain at least a line regarding the approaching date. And this line will increase in size and import daily until the date settled upon.

Within the theatre announcement will be made upon the screen and, by the more progressive showman, by that immensely more effective method, personal announcement.

Enthusiasm Essential

Where the preparatory campaign is properly conducted the amount obtained for charity on January 26 and January 29, when it is planned to hold special matinees for children, will far exceed present expectations.

A record like that is good for the industry. It is worth striving for and should be striven for by every individual exhibitor and every chain management in the field.

The credit that results upon the motion picture will not only justify the effort involved and every individual will share in that reflection.

Charity will be served. That is the first consideration. But it will be served more adequately by reason of the enthusiasm with which the exhibitor has worked, an enthusiasm directly dependent upon his appreciation of the facts outlined.

The motion picture will be advanced.

The exhibitor, the industry and the world will benefit by that.
He Won a Bride

By George Blaisdell

IN THIS changeful world the old becomes the new every so often.

This is a fact that the motion picture exhibitor of America has overlooked in his long sustained belief that the American picture public would not patronize costume plays.

It remained for S. L. Rothafel to demonstrate the falsity of this theory in convincing fashion by playing the spectacular costume production "Passion" for two weeks straight at the Capitol, New York, selling out every performance, and breaking all house records.

"The Tavern Knight," a picturesque love story of the Cromwellian period, when Puritan hordes were ravaging under direction of the lord protector and the lives of men were cheap, is underlined for early publication by Stoll Film Corporation of America under its one a week schedule.

The title role is played by Eille Norwood, a widely known and capable actor, while Cynthia is acted by Madge Stuart, a beautiful woman of the English speaking stage. The drama is superbly set and its locale involves some of the most wonderful scenery in the world. Historical accuracy has been obtained by Director Maurice Elvey.

The huge battlemented castles and vaulted interiors of the Stuarts, displayed in this picture are the real scenes in which the fighting and lovemaking depicted actually took place, and the staunch old walls have hardly changed at all since 1600. The photography by Paul Burger may be said to equal any ever seen on the screen.

* * *

The play is one of those roistering romances of a period when battles were fought with swords and pikes, and the cost of mail was still the most essential part of every gentleman's wardrobe. The romance of those riotous days lives on through the centuries, and "The Tavern Knight," by Rafael Sabatini, presents it after a fashion that is certain to prove delightful to the present generation, for the whole world loves a lover, and the photodrama directed by Maurice Elvey is above all a love story.

Most of the action takes place in and about storyed Worcester, and has to do with the fortunes of Roland Marleigh, Lord of Marleigh Castle, who has suffered the loss of his young wife through the Puritan assassins and, who, bent on revenge, offers his sword to the king for greater freedom of action in pursuit of his private vengeance. The story follows "The Tavern Knight," as he came to be known, through a series of wild adventures, imprisonments, escapes, duels and battles, to the romantic climax which follows his long lost son's tragic death, when the lovely Cynthia declares her love for him and no other.

The cast includes, aside from Mr. Norwood and Miss Stuart, Conway Booth, who plays Cromwell with intelligence; J. E. Wickens, Cecil Humphreys, Clifford Heatherly, Teddy Arundel, Lawrence Anderson, C. H. Croker-King and Lionel Scott.

Only the Cheaters

Chicago Chain Head

"Nineteen twenty-one holds no place for calamity howlers," said Aaron J. Jones, head of the Jones, Linick & Schaefer string of theatres.

"The howlers are their own worst enemies because they are experiencing a condition of affairs which does not apply to those who legitimately sell entertainment to the public. We have reached an era when the general public expects and demands full measure. To those who are honest with the public, the predicted slump will prove no bugaboo. The cheater will suffer just as he has always suffered in the past."

"I look forward with great anticipation to a most prosperous year for the American stage and screen. During my recent sojourn in England and France I became convinced that the American amusement industries are twenty years ahead of Europe. In spite of our pre- eminence, the houses on the continent give greater consideration to the comfort of their patrons. This thoughtfulness is seeping through and in all American theatres we find a tendency to improvement in the manner of atmosphere and comfort for patrons."

DIGEST of PICTURES of the WEEK

GOLDWYN Pictures has introduced something novel in its presentation of "The North Wind's Malice" that will doubtless meet with the approval of the majority of motion picture patrons.

Hitherto it has been the universal practice to use up the first hundred feet of each picture introducing the various characters and their relation to the other characters. In "The North Wind's Malice" the entire cast appears at the end of the feature, after the final fade-out and the story has been told.

In many of the large New York theatres this extra footage is eliminated by printing the casts, director's name, cameraman, author and other matter in the program. Of course, those theatres that do not print programs have to carry the casts on the screen, but what company will go a step further and carry the extraneous footage devoted to the art title writer, the assistant to the assistant director, and the assistant cameraman at the end of each feature instead of at the beginning where it only tends to confuse the audience and dull interest in what is to follow.

"THE LOVE LIGHT" (United Artists) returns Mary Pickford to the screen in a winning romance of war and Italy. An eight-reel production crowded with exciting incident and thoroughly wholesome entertainment. Star unquestionably captivating in every way. A feature that will more than please and certain to go big everywhere. (A full review of this feature will be found on page 32.)

"TWO KINDS OF LOVE" (Universal) is a Western "thriller," crude in spots, but redeemed by others, among them the work of a juvenile, "Breezy" Eason. The story of a woman's misplaced love and her rescue by a manly hero and sweetheart. Scenically good. Offers excitement and interest.

"THE LURE OF CROONING WATER" (Stoll) presents the English stars, Ivy Duke and Guy Newall in a simple but human triangle story that becomes absorbing through fine playing, excellent direction and unique technical handling.

"THE RANGER AND THE LAW" (Capitol) is a typical Western feature carrying a generous measure of those elements of speed, bitterly contested fights and beautiful exteriors, which delight followers of this class of picture. Lester Cuneo is the star.

"THE MISLEADING LADY" (Metro) brings Bert Lytell forward in the role of "cave man" hero. Lively and humorous, and concerned with a man's revenge for a trifling sweetheart. Lucy Cotton leads a capable supporting cast. Should score a hit universally.

"WHEN WE WERE TWENTY-ONE" (Pathe) presents H. B. Warner in a society feature. Story of a guardian's sacrifice for his ward when the two love one girl. Star's popularity should make it go big. A well played, smoothly developed drama.

"THE PLEASURE SEEKERS" (Selznick) with Elaine Hammerstein at her prettiest. A comedy-drama of youth and romance played with sound and wholesome humor by an excellent cast. The story of a young bride's triumphs over the objections of a stubborn father-in-law. Attractively set, and should please everywhere.

"SHE COULDN'T HELP IT" (Realart) is a screen translation of "In the Bishop's Carriage." A society story starring Bebe Daniels. A pleasantly presented romance of a young woman crook redeemed to become a successful artist. A brisk and bright feature that should be universally acceptable.

"HUSH" (Equity) is Clara Kimball Young's interpretation of the conscience-tortured wife who reveals a secret of her past to a jealous husband. Star beautifully gowned and exceedingly attractive of looks and art. Luxurious settings. Capable cast. Will be received with enthusiasm by the star's wide following and will please generally.

"Big Five" Reviews

Reviews of the "Big Five" pictures to be distributed by First National will be found on pages 36 to 40, which are devoted to a complete account of the recent convention of that organization in Chicago.
ELAINE HAMMERSTEIN IN THE PLEASURE SEEKERS
(SELZNICK)
The story of the marriage of a rich youth to a poor girl against his father's approval. A brisk domestic comedy drama with romance a-plenty. Star at her prettiest, with a splendid cast. Much heart interest. Directed by George Archinbald.

Here is a picture—simple of itself and played in straightforward, unassuming manner—that an audience at the State-Lake theatre liked so well that they applauded at its end. It is wholesome, realistic romance; the love story of two typical American young people. The lad chose to marry the ward of a poor clergyman when death bereaved her of his care, and by so doing lost the favor of his father, who refused to meet the bride. To help finance the home that the lad establishes in defiance of the father's attempt to buy his desertion of the bride, she takes a position as the elder man's stenographer. He fails to learn her identity until the youth falls into the clutches of a swift set with whom he moved before his marriage. Then the wife's loyalty and worth are revealed to the father and his favor turns to her as he learns of the boy's escapade. It is how effects the reconciliation after threatened disruption of the happy home, and all comes to a happy ending.

Comedy touches are delicious and afford effective contrast to the serious scenes. The work of the star is of the highest grade and she is winning of ways and beautiful of person. Closeups reveal this latter fact very well. Settings are well chosen and titles are good. The plot develops easily and naturally and action is brisk. Webster Campbell makes an appealing young husband.

H. B. WARNER IN
WHEN WE WERE TWENTY-ONE
(PATHE)
A society drama excellently enacted by a good cast. Star has fewer opportunities than in past roles, but plays with his usual appre- Warner's growing popularity should make this go well, particularly with the high-grade patronage. Christine Mayo, James Morrison and Claire Anderson are in the cast. Henry King directed.

A stage play made successful by Nat Goodwin comes to the screen in this late H. B. Warner vehicle. This star, growing more and more solid as a screen idol each day, particularly with feminine patronage, achieves the unique accomplishment of making the rather conservative role excellent when opportunities offer, but does not stress their limitations. James Morrison, in the part of Richard Audine, is more frequently the central figure than the star, and he plays creditably.

The star appears as Richard Carewe, uncle and guardian of Richard Audine. His desire is to bring about a romance between the lad and Phyllis Ericson. She is really in love with the elder Dick, but, desiring to make him happy, pledges herself to the younger man. The youth's wild ways lead him to a marriage with an actress siren who spurns him when she discovers his reputed wealth is not in his own control. Discovering the marriage, the uncle, to shield the boy, allows suspicion to fall upon himself. The lad awakens at last to his folly and the uncle learns that the girl has loved him, rather than the young man, the whole time.

The settings are attractive and there is an air of luxury about the whole. The title and opening birthday party suggest the employment of a candle-lighted birthday cake in advertising and exploitation.

SPECIAL CAST IN THE LURE OF YOUTH
(METRO)
The story of a worldly wise actress' efforts to find happiness through helping an unsophisticated country boy become a successful playwright. Has some effective dramatic moments and human comedy touches, which make the offering fairly pleasing but not wholly satisfying.

Luther Reed, who is credited with having written the original story and scenario for this picture, seemingly wished to draw the moral that success without love is not really success at all. His approach to this point, if indeed it is his point, is involved and the end leaves one in a quandary as Scene from the Universal production, "Two Kinds of Love," presented with a special cast.

Meaning that the boy is worshipping the god success to the exclusion of love, which she now craves. A few moments later she accepts the man-about-town by handing him her latchkey and telling him that he can duplicate it if he places a hand of gold around it. It is a puzzling business. Technically, it is satisfactory. Cleo Madison, William Cooklin and Garret Hughes are respectively the actress, the man-about-town and the youth. They give good performances. Leylia Knott, William Courtwright and Helen Wear contribute good bits as small town types. The production is in six reels.

SPECIAL CAST IN TWO KINDS OF LOVE
(UNIVERSAL)

A Western with many of the tricks of the trade of the old five-cent show day. Interesting, despite its triteness, with "Breezy" Eason, a juvenile actor, carrying off the honors. Distinctive scenery. Directed by Reaves Eason.

About the work of a little fellow, Reaves Eason, Jr., billed as "Breezy" Eason, most of the interest and appreciation of this feature will be centered. It is a Western, but not as well presented a picture of that type as the average offering of the day. It has a semblance of the old days of the crudely made picture but, for all that, has its redeeming qualities. It tells the story of the Watson family who have migrated to the West. They seek shelter on the plains in the cabin of a worthless miner and make it their home. Their host proves a villain, and the interventions of the younger several times save the woman from harm. It develops that she is a sister of the man, and an aunt of his boy, when his death occurs. Ben Mason, a miner, is brought along to redeem them from the rascally miner's power and there is buried treasure dug up conveniently at the end to financially establish the new family.

The work of the youngster is exceptionally good, and that of the cast is pleasing.

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG IN HUSH
(EQUITY PICTURES)

An elegantly produced picture with a domestic entanglement theme. Should score success with every patronage and be received with great enthusiasm by the star's devotees. Star is exceptionally beautiful, elegantly gowned, and in certain bits does what is probably the best work of her career. Strong cast affords excellent support.

Followers of Clara Kimball Young—and they are legion—will doubtless accept with uncompromising enthusiasm this latest of her features. It is one which her producers claim her masterpiece. Certainly it is as compelling a role as she has ever lived on the screen in the course of her career. The gorgeous gowns for which she made a special trip to New York last summer, which have been magnificently displayed—a great many of them. This is a point not to be ignored in advertising. Miss Young has an everlastings attractive face and dress which appeal strongly to the average feminine patron, and they are presented to excellent advantage in this production.

The story of the picture centers about the question of the wisdom of a wife keeping silence about past experiences that would endanger her husband's respect for her. The marriage is threatened by the disclosure of an early indiscretion—a basis for the crucial scenes of the picture. The disturbing element in the married tranquility of Vera Stanford, played by Miss Young, is a compromising element of her past, an incident of a May fete. Her torturing conscience compels confession, against the advice of the false friend. Like she tells only part of the secret, withholding the identity of the man in the case. She marries the man, and is forced to pass as the woman he had suspected to have been her partner in the pre-marriage incident. When he learns the truth, he has been living with a woman friend, through persuasion of the latter and of his own enlarged vision, he seeks her out to beg forgiveness. There is reunion and renewed love.

Settings are particularly ornate and atmospherically there is one that impresses with the beauty of a Mayfield Petrak— a scene set for a society tableau. Backgrounds in homes of wealth and their surrounding gardens are highly artistic and richly done.

The star carries the emotional role of the conscience-tormented wife with an appeal that is honest and skillful. I. Frank Glenden as the husband is unusually agreeable in every way. Kathryn Williams supplies excellent contrast and support as the wife, and others of the cast, who play with ability, include Bertram Grassby, Jack Pratt and Gerard Alexander.

This is an extremely promising suggestion in the question raised by the story's problem: when to talk and when to keep silent. A parrot is prominent in the picture and could be used to interesting exploitation.
LESTER CUNEO IN THE RANGER AND THE LAW
(CAPITAL FILM CO.)
This is a typical Western, carrying a very generous measure of those elements of speed, bitterly contested fights and beautiful exterior views which delight the followers of this class of picture. It is well produced and acted throughout and through his work in it Lester Cuneo leaps into a conspicuous position among the stars of Western pictures.

The initial Capital Film Company feature offering "The Ranger and the Law" is an absorbing one in every respect. Exhibitors with patrons yearning for red blooded action, swiftly and decisively delivered, will find in this picture just what they are looking for. Lester Cuneo demonstrates considerable physical prowess which works in very satisfying fashion with the handling of the story which has to do with the adventures of the son of a Chicago meat packing magnate who deserts the office and slaughter house for the freedom and excitement of the life of a forest ranger. Cuneo is a good type for the role he has essayed; and credit is due to the same producer of good work in the then very little known Jack Holt which is considered by many as the greatest of slam-bang action into the production. Francesca Billington, a featured player of considerable prominence, plays the feminine lead and is the only woman part in the picture. Miss Billington's work is of a high order and she contributes a great measure to the total effectiveness of the production.

The minor roles are capably portrayed and on the whole a very excellent quality of photography is offered... The production should have a strong appeal for certain classes of house, as it ranks well up with recent productions of the type.

The story is based on events concerning Dawson, who goes West as a forest ranger. During an argument with Slim Dixon, a well-known bandit, Dick knocks him down and incurs his undying enmity. Dixon makes the acquaintance of Ann Hobbs, daughter of "Red" Hobbs, the leader of an organization of bushy-legged men. Hobbs tells his daughter that unless she stays away from Dawson he will punish her, and she is told to warn Dawson, but is discovered. She is bound and thrown into a mine, where Dawson goes to rescue her. He blows up the cave, frees Ann and in a big fight bests five bootleggers. Three more roughs attack him as he escapes to the mountains, and in a fight with Hobbs they roll down the mountain and into a river, where Hobbs is drowned. He wins Ann's hand and all ends happily.

BERT LYTELL IN THE MISLEADING LADY
(METRO)
A comedy-drama that gathers speed as it progresses and will provoke a succession of laughs anywhere. Bert Lytell has a "cave man" role and Lucy Cotton appears in the feminine lead. The scenery is a noteworthy item. The picture was directed by George Terwilliger and George Irving.

While this is an adaptation from the stage play by the same name, and may be disappointing at times to audiences who laughed over its abundance of humor on the legitimate stage, there is no doubt but that it will be well received by those who enjoy a good laugh.

The story is that of a young bachelor. Goaded to sudden decision by the confession of the girl to whom he had proposed, that she had encouraged him only to win a wager, he makes off with her to his cabin in the mountains and tames her, by "cave man" methods, into submission. She finally admits her real love for him when he is injured through her means, and all ends as happily as the usual screen romance.

Some of the best humor is supplied by the nearby insane asylum patients. One who believes himself to be Napoleon Bonaparte is the stellar comedian of the lot.

The star plays with a vigor and vim that is most effective and will increase his popularity despite the fact that the role is a widely different one from any in which he has previously been cast. Lucy Cotton does good work as the leading feminine player and others of the cast lend able support. Scenery is an item worthy of note and the cave man idea suggests exploitation that should command attention.

IVY DUKE AND GUY NEWALL IN THE LURE OF CROSSING WATER
(STOLL FILM CORP., OF A.)
A simple but human triangle story that becomes absorbing through fine playing, direction and technical handling.

It is to the credit of the players and the director and his technical assistants engaged in producing "The Lure of Crossing Water" that this newest Stoll picture becomes an absorbing story. A measure of praise belongs to the author, Marion Hill, because she has dealt with human beings and not puppets. Yet her work is so simple that without the eloquent acting and direction and the appropriately colorful backgrounds that dominate the offering, the story never could have made itself as forcefully felt as it has.

No sooner are introduced the butterfly musical comedy star, the phlegmatic rustic and his work-hardened wife, than one knows that the author is dealing with the triangle. But these three characters are so well contrasted and at the same time are so readily recognizable as of the flesh that they immediately catch the interest. And they hold it except for an instant when an unnecessary sequence is drawn in to mark time while the butterfly briefly explains how she became a woman of "lights and laughter," as the sub-title puts it. As it somewhat flauts the orthodox triangle formula the story has a twist to give it a new start after its temporary lapse.

The conflict that is to develop between the musical comedy star and the imper- turbable rustic gets a capital start when the musical comedy star arrives at Crooning Waters to recuperate from a breakdown. Pampered and spoiled she is angered to run across a man who is so indifferent that he refuses to even listen to her commands. After a while he begins to interest her. He is different than any of the men she has ever met. So she proceeds to arouse him, and sees the difference between the London woman and his own over-worked last but he can no longer contain himself. He capitulates. And in a forcefully dramatic scene he tells his wife that he loves the actress, that his soul has been awakened, and that he will follow his new found love to the end of the earth. The scene is excellently done. But his blind battle is halted when the actress's physician shows him what sort of a woman has wove him into a net and he returns to his former, thoroughly contrary, but as phlegmatic as ever. And then the actress tries to right a wrong—she reaches Crooning Waters when the household is further disturbed by the illness of one of the children. Beside the woman whose life she had almost ruined she watches over the child's bedside. All thoughts of hate vanish under the moment's greater trouble. But relief comes when the child is pronounced out of danger. And after it is thought of the earlier trouble return. "Take him back," the actress pleads to the wife, "He is your man: I haven't harmed him." The final touch is a reconciliation.

contribute capital performances as the members of the triangle. The rest of the cast are excellent. The English settings are all that can be desired while in other technical respects the work is most satisfactory. "The Lure of Crooning Water" is a first rate program picture.

BEBE DANIELS IN SHE COULDN'T HELP IT

(REALART)

Screen version of "In the Bishop's Carriage," a popular novel of ten years ago. Story of a girl made a thief by one man and an artist by another. Society setting. Interesting and entertaining. Star is clever and pretty and plays excellently. Good supporting cast. Directed by Maurice Campbell.

Here is a pleasantly presented picture in society setting that brings Bebe Daniels from the front in a role of which she makes a great deal. The vehicle itself, a screen translation of "In the Bishop's Carriage," offers nothing more than a commonplace little tale of a young girl, Nance Olden, trained to clever thievery by Tom Dorgan, expert crook. Simulating an unbalanced mind, she permits herself to be taken into the home of the Ramseys, society people, following a theft from the man of the house in which she has been an aide. In the Ramsey home she meets Latimer, Nellie Ramsey's fiance. He learns her true position and befriends her, inspiring her to exercise talent that she has displayed for art, until she achieves success in an honest way. With Dorgan's escape from prison and his coming to Nance's studio comes the climax. Nance is accused of theft, a plot framed upon her by the envious Nellie. She is cleared of the suspicion, however, and finds happiness in Latimer's love for her.

Emory Johnston, Herbert Standing and Ruth Renick are others of the cast which gives capable support. Settings are artistic. Bebe Daniels is a favorite with picture patrons and her good looks, smartness of costuming and skilful work will carry the feature's popularity far.

Capital Officials Predict Cuneo Will Rise Rapidly in Popularity

With two pictures already completed and ten more on the way, officials of the Capital Film Company predict that Lester Cuneo will be one of the most popular western heroes on the screen within the course of a few months.

"Lone Hand Wilson," the first of the series, was regarded as more or less of an experiment. It exceeded the expectations of the Capital officials. "The Ranger and the Law" is hailed as an even stronger attraction.

Is Veteran in Pictures

Cuneo entered pictures while they were still in the early stages of development. He made his debut with the Selig Polyscope company doing bits in various types of pictures.

He was selected as the leading male support of Kathryn Williams, then the "star of stars." After three years with Selig, he went with Essanay Film Company to appear with Bryant Washburn and Francis X. Bushman.

When Bushman left Essanay to go to Metro, Cuneo also went to Metro.

Serves in The War

Cuneo's climb towards stardom was interrupted by the world war. He enlisted in the United States army and fought in France, returning to this country gassed and wounded after the battle of the Somme.

LOUISIANA THEATRE

NEW ORLEANS, LA.

December 20, 1920.

Vitagraph, Inc.,
City.

Gentlemen:

We had the fortune to play "DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES", for one week, beginning Sunday December 12th, and are pleased to say that we broke the record. The title was a very good one, which permitted a lot of publicity which ordinarily could not be obtained. The picture itself was full of thrills and surprises, the action being of a superior kind, and the acting of a high order. The campaign you carried out was, indeed, very commendable, and if producers with the proper pictures would manipulate their features as you have done in this instance, it would prove a great advantage to the exhibitor.

I will be very glad to negotiate with you at any time you have a real feature, and I am able to use it at the Louisiana Theatre.

Yours very truly,

Arthur E. Leopold,
Manager, Louisiana Theatre.
First National

Dangerous Business, with Constance Talmadge.—We certainly packed 'em in on this picture. Everybody was pleased with it and said it was Connie's best so far. Every house should play it. It's peppy, but not vulgar at all.—C. E. Power, Power's theatre, North Branch, Minn.—Country town patronage.

THE FAMILY HONOR, a King Vidor production.—I really take pleasure in presenting pictures like THE FAMILY HONOR. Stevenson, Princess theatre, Des Moines, N. M.—Small town patronage.

Sunset Sprague, with Buck Jones.—This is a good Western. Lots of pep and without the usual dance hall business.—P. Krauth, Denison theatre, Denison, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

THE ORPHAN, with William Farnum,—I could feel the sway of the stage coach as J. Raymond Nye swung the six around the turns on the trail. Bill's there, too, as usual. Say, boy, here's a real-honest-to-God Western, if you want Westerns. They eat it up.—Dr. F. M. Childs, Cozy theatre, Vinton, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

From Now On, with George Walsh.—It's another triumph for George Walsh, and should receive special advertising from any exhibitor who has it under contract. It is in seven reels, and really could be called a special. Pleased a New Year's audience.—Harry M. Palmer, Liberty theatre, Washington, Ind.—General patronage.

The Virgin of Stamboul, with Priscilla Dean.—Opinion divided. Some liked it very well, others said it was poor. Personally I do not consider it a super picture. It had a good cast and the general atmosphere was not such as the average fans enjoy. It may have cost a half million dollars to produce, but the cost of a picture is no indication of its merit. ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN, with Dorothy Phillips.—If all pictures were as good as this one we would have nothing to worry about. Without a doubt Miss Phillips' greatest work. Star Comedies (Universal), with a special cast.—Usually very poor comedies. Some have a few laughs.—H. B. McFarling, Tokio theatre, Morehouse, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

His Royal Slynx (Pathé), with Harold Lloyd.—This was the poorest comedy we have had this year. Not as good as his old single reels. Lloyd can't get by on his reputation. He handed us a real lemon in this one. Leave it alone.—L. C. Farquhar, Opera house, Guide Rock, Neb.—Family patronage.

Hank Mann Comedies (Arrow), with Hank Mann.—Have run quite a bunch of them. Find them very good. My audience likes them. Running today Naughty Nurses. Good.—William Thacher, Royal theatre, Salina, Kan.

Young Buffalo Series (Pathe), with a special cast.—Poor entertainment. Furthermore, on account of mechanical defect, the picture jazzed and shimmered on the screen in a most disagreeable manner.—Fahney & Elson, Electric theatre, Curtis, Neb.—Country town patronage.

Betty's Romeo (Arrow), with Muriel Ostriche.—This was the first one run. They ate this one up. Nice clean comedy. Subtitles are great on this one. They went as big as the picture.—William Thacher, Royal theatre, Salina, Kan.

Equipment Progress

Theatre equipment means in a word—the theatre.

Few things outside the films themselves and the advertising accessories are provided for the exhibitor by the producing companies.

The balance, the big task of providing the theatre with practically everything that has given the public the comforts it now enjoys and the exhibitor the countless devices which facilitate his business, has been left to the equipment industry.

These manufacturers have been alive to this situation. They have been "on their toes" designing equipment which, in addition to appealing to the eye, has a practical money value to the exhibitor.

New theatres always reflect improvements for the comforts of patrons and also the latest devices, designed by the equipment industry.

This new department of Exhibitors Herald will, therefore, set before the exhibitor, from time to time, photographs and descriptions of the latest innovations in theatre construction showing the possibilities and progress in this connection.

Exhibitors Herald feels that it can be of distinct service in this connection, presenting the activities of this important branch of the industry in a crisp, readable manner in such a way that the busy theatre man may, in a glance, obtain information of this nature.

This, in brief, is the thought back of the inauguration of our new department "Theatre Equipment."

Mission Is an Innovation in Film Theatres

New Motion Picture House Erected in Los Angeles Was Designed by H. O. Davis

In the construction of the Mission Theatre in Los Angeles, its management believes that something new has been produced in the realm of cinema activity—something hitherto not realized has been accomplished wherein to use a metaphor, the frame has been made to fit the picture.

A building has been completed that has been designed for the one purpose of housing motion picture audiences and exhibiting motion picture productions in an atmosphere congenial to the former and appropriate to the latter.

"Formerly," points out H. O. Davis, who conceived, designed and supervised the construction of the Mission Theatre, "motion picture playhouses were crudely made over or out of theatres designed for the spoken drama, just as in the beginning, automobiles borrowed the form of horse-drawn vehicles. It took some time for the automobile to assert its own form and to discard its inherited; so it has taken some time for the motion picture theatre to discard the form of the so-called legitimate theatre and assume its own identity.

Break Attendance Records

This, it is claimed, is the accomplishment of the Mission Theatre. Its success as a theatre, aside from its opening presentation, "Douglas Fairbanks' "The Mark of Zorro," has been acclaimed for a period of three weeks by audiences that have broken all existing records.

"Most theatres," Mr. Davis added, "defeat themselves and their own object by a garish display, a loud color appeal and an ostentatious show which, combined, rob the visitor of powers of concentration on the picture, diverting thought rather than leading it and bewildering the attention rather than centering it on the screen."

In its interior, the facade, except for the marquee, might be that of an historic Spanish-Mexican Mission. Richness and plainness conjoin. The lobby accentuates ancient American and Mexican features since it presents a triple fountain designed after extant remains of Aztec architecture. Inside, the charming foyer is colored in soft, rich browns and reds, emanating richness without severity and a sense of hospitality without noisy display.

Lobby Lends Atmosphere

The scheme of Mr. Davis was to lead attention through the lobby with its Aztec fountain, through the foyer with its beautiful colors, into the theatre proper. This latter might be compared to the great banquet hall of some Don Carlos of Baja California. Its walls are pierced at intervals between the large pilasters with latticed windows through which light, changing in hue to follow the scheme of day from dawn till dark, streams softly into the theatre. The case-ments are paneled to suggest the thickness of old adobe walls. Thus the attention of the visitor is drawn from the lobby through the foyer into the theatre and there becomes focused on the glowing pair of curtains whose function seems not so much to reflect as to give forth color.

With the drawing of the curtains the whole scheme stands revealed and the visitor's attention has been drawn as was planned, from the activities of the street into the quiet of a house devoted to the presentation of the masterpieces of the picture art.

The orchestra is situated immediately behind the ornamental pool of water that reaches clear across the theatre. Into this pool two cascades flow in graceful curves from hidden sources on either
NOVEL PROJECTION BOOTH

In designing the projection room of the Palace Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, both Managing Director Meyer and Architect Frederick G. Mueller have taken into consideration size, comfort and handiness, which all make for the best efficiency of the man behind the shutter.

The size of the projection room itself is most surprising, the length being 24 feet the depth 13 feet, with a nine-foot ceiling. It is built of hollow tile and concrete with sand finished walls. The projection room equipment consists of two latest models, type S, Simplex Projector, a Martin Rotary Converter with a capacity of 775 k.w., or in other words, giving an amperage range of from 60 to 100 amperes per arc. The converter is also equipped with an emergency A.C. Service that can be brought into use merely by throwing double-throw switches, which has effect on one arc independently or the entire number of lamps.

A crescent spot lamp, equipped with six space color wheel, is also part of the equipment. Films which go to make up the performance for any particular program are kept in air-tight, fireproof Gilmore safety film cabinet. This film cabinet has been improved in a novel way. The original film cabinet was one of the hanging wall type, but believing that this would be slightly unhealthy, the following feature was added. A special stand was secured and the film can be stored on the top of this stand, thereby allowing the projectionist to roll this cabinet to any part of the projection room where it is to his best convenience. It usually stands directly behind and between the two projectors.

Above the projection room there has been installed an exhaust fan similar to the larger type manufactured by the American Blower Company for auditorium ventilation. To this fan is connected a 12x14-inch metal pipe, which in turn connects with the projection room and also the lamps on the projectors, thereby delivering all of the heat from the projection arcs and the room itself to the roof of the building. As a result of this feature it is no common thing for the projectionists to be on duty in white shirt, collar and tie.

EFFICIENCY OF OPERATION COMBINED WITH COMFORT IN THE PROJECTION ROOM EQUIMENT

The beds of the cascades are set with jewels which glow in multicolored beauty as they reflect the changing, shifting hues of lights set beneath the opalescent watercourse. From this fairytale emerges first the music of the orchestra and of the soloists, completing the influence which the theater till then mutely ascertained to carry the mind and the vision forward to the screen—the heart of the picture which the Mission Theatre exquisitely frames.

MOTIOGRAPH INSTALLATION

Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company Reports Activity in Demand for Machines

Considerable activity is reported by the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company of Chicago, manufacturers of the Motograph. Some of the recent installations include the following houses:

IMPROVE POSTER FRAME

Improvement of its combination easel poster frame, a product of the Newman Manufacturing Company of Cincinnati, is announced by that firm. By hinging the backings to the frame proper it is not now necessary to remove the backings when inserting posters. The improvement saves considerable time and much aggravation when inserting a poster and saves tacking. A poster can be inserted and removed quickly under the new arrangement.

GUMM MANAGING BRANCH

An exceptional sale was made to Luna Amusement Company of Lafayette for the complete equipment of the Mars theatre, which opens on about March 15. The equipment includes a large Minusa Gold Fibre Screen, 2 Type-S Simplex Machines, also a 2-Unit ticket-selling machine.

The Mars will be one of the finest theatres in Indiana, as it is being built at a considerable expenditure of money and is equipped with the finest and most modern theatre equipment, making for the comfort of its patrons. Luna Amusement Company operates the Luna at Lafayette, the Lyric at Fort Wayne, Ind., the Luna at Kankakee, Ill., and the Nelson at Logansport, Ind.

In addition to selling this equipment to Luna Amusement Company, Mr. Gumm is making another just for the Minusa Gold Fibre Screen to the Arc at Lafayette, and two Simplex machines to the Wallace. The last two Simplex machines mentioned are replacing two other projectors of well-known make.

Mr. Gumm can see no reason for the pessimistic outlook for 1925, as he foresees the prospects for business in the Indiana territory are extremely good for the next year.

Chicago Firm Invents A Unique Projection Device That Saves Film

Plans are being completed by the Exhibitors Machine Corporation, Chicago, for the presenting of their new projection device to the trade within a short time. The device will be adaptable to both portable and professional machines and embodies many new features that are the result of over six years of experimenting.

The principal advantage of the patent is the reduction of tension on film as it is run through the machine. The pull on the film is reduced to less than one-quarter of a pound through the use of a double sprocket, and double contact intermittent. The intermittent sprockets are actuated by pinwheels, which engage with a separate cam, the two cams being driven from one shaft, insuring perfect synchronization, as the pinwheels engage two of the pins in each of the two cam parts.

All friction on the film is done away with by the use of two intermittent sprockets with three-eighths of an inch play between the sprocket, up and down. The lower sprocket is stationary, and the upper one held normally apart by means of a spring. If the film is placed in the usual way, the two sprockets are pressed together and the film engages with the teeth of the lower sprocket. The film is held taut by means of the spring and there is no chance of surface rubbing. Pictures and a complete description of the device will be published in an early issue of EXHIBITORS HERALD.

TOURS THE NORTHWEST

Minusa Supervisor of Distributors Makes Extended Trip in Northwest in Interests of Company

Exhibitors of the northwest are keenly interested in the latest and most modern theatre equipment, according to Grant Heth, supervisor of distributors of the Minusa Cine Screen Company, St. Louis, who recently returned from an extended trip through that territory.

Mr. Heth says that he found the exhibitors of this section willing listeners in connection with his product, the Minusa Gold Fibre projection screen, and is optimistic over the outlook for the year.

"Minusa Gold Fibre Projection screens are marketed through authorized distributors who in turn appoint dealers," said Mr. Heth in explaining the policy of his company. "This makes it possible for the exhibitor to consult a Minusa representative with little or no inconvenience regardless of where his theatre is located.

"While Minusa screens have always been an exclusive product and constructed from a scientific standpoint, it is not generally understood that each and every screen is of special construction which is determined by light conditions that are created according to the dimensions and architecture of the theatre in which the screen is to function."

"Nevertheless, this is the concrete constructive foundation of the Minusa product and the several interesting discoveries of their research department in this direction justifies the present heavy demand for this particular projection surface."

Carl Harthill Names Reelcraft Managers
Lou Anger Will Have Charge at Milwaukee With Stiles at Kansas City

G. L. Stiles has been transferred from Milwaukee to Kansas City as manager of the branch office of Reelcraft Pictures Corporation. Carl Harthill, district manager, with headquarters in Chicago, has appointed Lou Anger to succeed Stiles as manager at Milwaukee.

Stiles is well known in the picture industry, having entered through the position of location manager for the old Vitagraph Company in Brooklyn over twelve years ago. Later on he was transferred to the executive force, and eventually into the sales department, serving both as exchange manager and district manager for several large distributing companies. The list of firms he has worked for is selected by R. C. Cropper for the management of the Bee Hive exchange in Milwaukee.

Anger has been star salesman of the Majestic for the last ten years, when he began to establish several new records for that office that enabled it to keep close to the top of the Reelcraft list. He has been with Reelcraft ever since its organization.

Goldwyn Staff Guest Of Manager Maberry At New Year's Dinner

The Chicago office of Goldwyn ushered in the New Year in an auspicious manner when Manager Cecil E. Maberry called in all his salesmen and played the host at a luncheon held in the lobby meeting at the Winter Garden on Monday, January 3.

After participating in a general talk and excellent luncheon, topped with cigars donated through the courtesy of F. J. Godsol, chairman of the executive Goldwyn board, Mr. Maberry, Manager Maberry announced that his personal prize for the best scrapbook made up by a member of the sales force had been awarded to Frank Young, Chicago city salesman.

The presentation were Sales Manager Charles E. Knickerbocker, Ben Reingold, Sam Shurman, Harry Charness, R. A. Alberts, W. E. Weinschenker, J. E. Amsgard, Frank Young, H. E. Schottmueller and Publicity Manager Harry S. Lorch.

Burglars and a Fire Hit Frank Zambrano

Frank Zambrano, owner of the Unity Film Exchange, who is also interested in a number of wholesale and retail paint markets, sustained two losses shortly after the arrival of the new year.

Early New Year's day, a riot market at 1027 West Madison street, was broken into, the burglars obtaining $1,500 in cash and taking about $700 worth of goods. January 5, a fire inflicted a damage of $35,000 on three packing companies at Sangamon and Fulton streets.

Lee Herz Purchases Two Reel Pickfords And Three Features

Lee Herz, president of the Interstate Film Service, has opened the new year with the announcement that he has obtained rights to a series of fifteen two-reel pictures starring Mary Pickford and three feature productions, purchased from Aywun Film Corporation.

The Pickfords are selected from her early pictures directed by D. W. Griffith, and in them she is supported by a number of people who today are stars in their own name. The titles have not been changed. Art subtitles have been inserted. Mr. Herz will offer the first of the series, "Beast at Bay," January 31.

Rights to "Woman Above Reproach," featuring Florence Chase and William Finley; "The Woman of Mystery," with Grace Cunard, and a five-reel comedy, "When Dr. Quackel Did Hide," with Charlie Joy and the Miami bathing beauties, a travesty satire on "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" have also been obtained.

These features will be published later.

Paramount's Advertising Appropriation Increased

Paramount's advertising campaign for 1921 started off with a big shot on Sunday, January 9, when a full page advertisement appeared in the Herald and Examiner. Several hundred theaters, booking Paramount pictures for the week, were listed in the ad, which announced the attractions and policy of Paramount for the coming year. It is said Paramount's advertising appropriation for the new year has been made twice as large as last year's.

Aschers Open West Englewood Theatre
Playhouse Costing $800,000 Attracts Record Crowd On Opening Night

The opening of Aschers West Englewood Theatre, which was erected at a cost in excess of $800,000, marks an epoch in the theatrical history of Chicago. This big new house, declared to be second to none and the most beautiful and up-to-date theatre in Chicago, is located on 63rd street at Ashland avenue.

The opening performance of the West Englewood Theatre was attended by upwards of 6,000; those compelled to wait formed long lines, which at times stretched from the theatre entrance to Ashland avenue.

Convenient and Beautiful

Convenience and beauty are combined in the West Englewood Theatre to make it one of the most attractive and comfortable places on the south side. The building is a handsome three-story structure of brick and terra cotta.

Nate, Max and Harry Ascher, Lewis F. Newhafer, general manager of Ascher Bros, Harry Beaumont, booking manager, and Walter Russell, resident manager, acted as a reception committee.

Many Flowers Received

A feature of the opening was the presentation of floral decorations, consisting of elaborate set pieces and baskets and vases of flowers—the gifts of admiring friends and exchange people in Chicago. Telegrams of congratulation were received all through the performances from all parts of the country from friends who could not attend the opening performance in person.

At 6:45 p. m. every artist in the theatre was given a flower which Mr. Stricker and his fifteen-piece orchestra started the performance with a syncopated overture. The steel curtain was raised, and the dedication film was projected. Then came the feature picture; George Ade's "Just Out of College," featuring Jack Pickford.

Ed BRICKETO of the local Stoll Films exchange has just returned from his prima trip through the Hoosier territory and if that bundle of contracts that he brought back to MANAGER BEASLY signify anything, it looks like the Stoll product has gone over with a vengeance.

With the return of SAM RIEGER to the Interstate Films exchange as city salesman, the fourth floor of the Consumers Building looks like olden days again. This should give Emmie Herz an opportunity to pack his grip and get out in the “sticks” again.

C. R. REDLICH, district rep. for the Special Pictures and C. S. SMITH, were a busy duo the past week getting the Special prints and various advertising accessories located in their new home at the Central exchange, which is now releasing all Special comedies.

HARRY JONES, son of Louis Jones, manager of the Randolph theatre, has made his debut to the film business, affiliating with the short-subject department of the local Reeler exchange. Well, here’s hoping the youngster will soon mount the ladder of success with a seat up along side of his well known uncle, AARON JONES.

We note the arrival of GEORGE LEVEY, who is to cover the southside for the Celebrated Players exchange, having resigned as secretary of the Famous Features Film Co. of Indianapolis, Ind.

With the Orpheum theatre, Clinton, and the J. Lieber & Co. building of Indianapolises visited by serious fires, looks like the Hoosier state rushed old 1920 out with excitement plenteous.

With the recent acquisition of “Madonnas and Men,” Perry comedies featuring “Ambrose” Mack Swain and the Minta De Free (Mrs. Roscoe Arbuckle) comedies, Weiss and Alken of the Superior Screen exchange anticipate a considerable array of bookings for these live subjects from the Indiana and Illinois theatremen.

FRANK J. FLAHERTY, manager of the Unity Photoplays, has his sales organization in for a special sales conference during the week of Dec. 20. Sort of getting plans completed for their next big serial, “Mystery 33” which follows “Thunderbolt Jack” serial now playing. The first episodes will be ready in early March. Manager Flaherty further states, his company has acquired the Star Ranch Western from A. C. Gun Film Sales Corp. These snappy two reelers, have nothing but action from start to finish.

Didya lamp JEMMIE MUSTAGH of the Unity all dolled up ariding that waterwagon that’s been traveling about the Loop since January first. Understand he’s getting one hundred bucks for the job. For a couple of weeks ride we’ll admit the reward is worth it.

MAX SCHWARTZ of the Masterpiece Film exchange has been receiving oodles of well wishes from his host of friends the past week or so. Yes, a certain young lady arrived at the Schwartz domocile on the eve of Dec. 30 and has agreed to have all mail addressed to her, Miss Flora Jane Schwartz.

FRANK LOUIS, the Goldwyn director, thinks the Venice fire was a lucky episode for him. He was just concluding shots of a "boxer uprising" in his new Chinese play, "The Water Lily," when the fire occurred. He dashed there with his extras and his camera men, Don Short and Norbert Breden, and secured several thousand feet of fire film which he will use for the "burning temple" scenes in his picture.

Approximately on February 7, FRANK UNISON will commence work as director of WALLACE REID in a picture entitled "Watch My Smoke" for Paramount. This is another of Byron Morgan's famous stories, and it will be recalled that Mr. Morgan has written a number of Mr. Reid's previous starring successes for Paramount.

RUTH ANN BALDWIN of Metro's scenario department, has joined the ranks of Southern California's author-ranchers. Miss Baldwin has sought the isolation considered so desirable by writers on a desert ranch a mile long and nearly as wide.

WILLIAM WORTHINGTON, the well known director who has been added to Universal's formidable list of producers, is already busying himself on the manuscript of "Three at Table," a story by Bennett Cohen in which Edith Roberts is to be starred.

EDWARD CONNELLY, veteran Metro character actor, has been granted special permission by Metro to enact one of the leading roles in the Anita Loos-John Emerson production of "Wife Insurance," which Victor Fleming is directing.

EDWARD CECIL, one of the prominent members of the Metro stock company, has returned from a two weeks' visit in his home town, San Francisco. Mr. Cecil will be cast in one of the forthcoming Metro productions.

ROBERT THORNEBY, who has recently been added to Universal's directorial staff, will make his debut at the "Big U" studios by producing a feature with Frank Mayo in the stellar role.

The Anita Stewart Company has left the Louis B. Mayer studio for Truckee to film snow and blizzard scenes for the star's latest Mayer offering through Associated First National.

GEORGE BLAIR, the original Montana kid and famous as the fastest two-gun man in the world, visited Harry Carey at Universal City the other day and showed the popular star a few new tricks in quick drawing. Blair gained his fame early in life and was made sheriff of Douglas County, Montana, when he was fifteen years old. He is a personal friend of Jaccard, who is directing Carey in "If Only Jim."

EDWARD LAEMMLE is preparing to start a series of two-reel Western photodramas, starring Jack Perrin. Laemmle has just finished directing Hoot Gibson in a snappy western drama, "The Little Maverick."

A cablegram from J. P. McGowan, commanding the Universal Expeditionary Force which is in Cuba to film "The Seal of Satan," an Eddie Polo serial, states that the Cuban authorities and business people are giving them every assistance in their work and that they have already secured many scenes that are sure to be knockouts. Polo is being supported by Ines McDonnell and Magda Lane.

Life is a pipe—one after another—to WILLIAM DUNCAN now. He received a set of seven in a neat case, one for each day of the week, from the members of his cast as a holiday token.

Casting one last mournful, lingering look at the sumbit landscape, JESSE LASKY, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, returned to New York, where he will spend several weeks looking after the affairs of his company. Mr. Lasky has timed his eastern visit so as to work in the Long Island studio just at the beginning of a period of activity there, an activity which he says will increase through the months to come.

In using a dirigible "blimp" as a camera platform at Glacier Park, Montana, recently for the production of "Bob Hampton of Placer," MARSHALL NEILAN gave his players and photographers a few thrills. To get a particular effect, Mr. Neilan, with two of his players and a cameraman, flew to a high mountain ledge on a perpendicular wall with no trail leading to it. The players were landed on the shelf and with the camera set up in the body of the ship, the dirigible flew off to a distance of some two hundred feet when the motor was killed, allowing the "blimp" to remain stationary directly opposite the players. This gave the photographer a clear "shot" at the players and offered something new in motion picture production, eliminating many hours of preparation in the building of ladders, camera platforms, etc.

ALICE LAKE, VIOLA DANA, BUSTER KEATON, LOUISE DANCY and DAVID MORTENSEN were the Metro celebrities who participated in the Christmas benefit recently held for the poor children of Los Angeles.

ROBERT CHANDLER has been engaged by Metro for an important part in "Home Stuff," Viola Dana's new starring vehicle which was written and directed by her and Agnes Johnston and Frank Dacey.

Even Japanese maidens have fallen for the charms of the Mack Sennett beauties. Miss Sanjirô Kawaguchi, who gives her address as No. 51 Mimamikatsushika- gun, which is somewhere hidden in a Tokyo street, writes her sentiments: "To the Manager Mack Sennett thus: "Allow me the liberty of writing to you. I have honor to make the expression of your company. I am found of collection photographs of famous to shall them is it album. I believe that many famous actress attach to you of company. As I want photographs of them to make my album complet and handsome, please give me of your company famous beautiful actress of photographer Marie Prevost, Phyllis Haver, Harriet Hammond and Ben Turpin. "I am obliged to you to remain your most humble servant."

In all the motion picture theatres of the Nation where big pictures and good pictures are being shown—there you find patronage heavy and exhibitor profits assured.

In every city where the amusement business has been "off" it has been in the $2.00 or $3.00 theatres, and not in the motion picture theatres. Out of 2,000 Associated Producers' exhibitor-customers we have not heard twenty complaints of poor business.

$9466.15

ONE year ago, at the Superba in Los Angeles, “The Great Air Robbery” grossed the unequalled total of $5,259.00 for 670 seats in only one week. This year, week ending Jan. 1st, “OUTSIDE THE LAW” grossed $9,466.15 in the same theatre. In other words, for every dollar you took in on “The Great Air Robbery,” that great record-smasher of a year ago, you stand to gross two dollars on “OUTSIDE THE LAW”.

SCENARIST BY

CAMERAMAN

Harry Valleys

AS A WHOLE

Much bright comedy and many tense situations make it a thoroughly desirable offering.

STORY

Humor and suspense evenly balanced. A tale that has a wide appeal.

DIRECTION

Good for the most part. There is a slight tie-down near the end.

PHOTOGRAPHY

LIGHTING

Admirable

CAMERAWORK

Clare Adams, Robert McKim, Joseph Dowling and Niles Welch, handles parts of the rest good

EXTERIORS

Several good westerns

INTERIORS

Sanitary

DETAIL

Might have put more of Wilson's lines to use

CHARACTER OF STORY

Old Western gung-ho types in Wall Street crooks who are burning his grandam's $6,000 feet

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION

It will be conceded by a large majority of picture patrons that Harry Leon Wilson's imagination makes this the most exciting picture it has seen in the last two months. Nothing deeply profound about it, but it is made merrily, the sort of entertainment that makes men on both ends laugh.

Box Office Analyses for the Exhibitor

You need not be afraid to make pruning of a half-hour cut. This extra 15 minutes of pictures becomes, if a reasonable cut, the story of the show itself in the first half, although you also have several known names in the cast, of Robert McKim, Clare Adams, and Joseph Dowling. Tell them what's shown, as the idea of the crude old west street cleaning up the Wall Street sharks carries an appeal. Harry Leon Wilson is a well known and popular writer, and from the whole circle of readers who enjoy his stories in current magazines, his name will be valuable to your advertising.

What is in store for the exhibitor in 1921?

Now watch 1921! Study Goldwyn's productions for January, just to start things off.

A NEW star—the beautiful, the talented Betty Compson is introduced. Her first, personally produced vehicle, is Prisoners of Love, a tense drama of sex. Reginald Barker's production, Godless Men, is also featured. Godless Men has been styled by advance reviewers as “the greatest sea story ever filmed.” Right!

We're Throwing Our Hats in The Air!

And this means all of us—in the offices of the chief executives, at the studio and in the home office, in the thirty-odd exchanges throughout the United States where the Selznick organization rubs shoulders with exhibitors, and throughout the foreign field where Selznick product is rushing on to new heights of power.

Managers, salesmen, stenographers and office boys are shouting. Actors, directors, cameramen and loyal “extras” are wild in their elation.

And there’s the most splendid reason in the world for this more or less undignified conduct.

The Selznick organization has struck its stride.

We’re hitting on all six and going like hell!

We’ve worked out the system. We’ve found the way that makes for rip-snorting success.

We’ve caught the pulse of our buying public. We’re registering one bull’s-eye after another.
We're making the kind of pictures that pull at the box office—and we're reaping a golden harvest of appreciation from exhibitors everywhere.

Selznick Stars are winning new laurels with each production.

We've found the type of stories best suited to EUGENE O'BRIEN, most popular photoplayer of his time. ELAINE HAMMERSTEIN is daily proving our contention that here is a "screen beauty who can act." OWEN MOORE is giving the cinema world a kind of comedy entertainment that is equally acceptable in the million-dollar theatre and in the "shooting gallery." CONWAY TEARLE and MARTHA MANSFIELD have been made Selznick Stars because the public wouldn't have it any other way.

We're making "specials" what are "specials"! It will be years before the all-around success of WILLIAM FAVERSHAM in "THE SIN THAT WAS HIS" is eclipsed. "RED FOAM" has already created more interest as a Selznick Picture than it did as a feature story in the Saturday Evening Post with its millions of circulation.

And we're just coming to bat with VERA GORDON in "THE GREATEST LOVE," and "THE HIGHEST LAW," a Ralph Ince Production with Mr. Ince as Abraham Lincoln. This pair will give the industry and the general public two more high tension shocks of genuine pleasure.

And what does this all mean to you?

Well, it's the best business in the world to be hooked up with a live one!

The exhibitor with the Selznick Pictures habit will sleep a lot better nights during this Happy New Year of 1921. He'll know that he's in line for the best screen products that are being made—and he'll know that he's dealing with an organization that has been founded upon my little slogan that will be adhered to as long as there's a Selznick left in the picture business, namely, "I consider myself a failure unless the exhibitor is a success."
THE STORY—the last word in selection for a player with Miss Gordon's talents. Offering abundant opportunity for character acting, but swift and tense in its dramatic movement. An excuse for tears a-plenty and laughs galore. A perfect picture in light and shade. An appeal as sure as sunshine.
THE STAR—without an equal in this specialized field of character portrayal in which she has worked for years. Known wherever theatre-goers assemble—in the legitimate, in vaudeville, and in pictures—and known always as an artist with almost uncanny emotional power.

Selznick Star Series Pictures are the Sure Anchor to Windward for Any Motion Picture Theatre in the World. They're A Business Guarantee.

Big special productions—real specials—have their well-deserved place on every worthwhile program. But the producer who makes both high-grade specials—real specials—and a program of Star Series Productions of uniform excellence is the one who provides the exhibitor with all the wares necessary to the successful conduct of his business. That's why Selznick Pictures form the biggest single unit of photoplay service on the market today.

Never Before Was a Picture So Deserving of Praise!

JULES E. MASTBAUM, president of the Stanley Company, controls more theatres than any other exhibitor in America, and we believe that he has never before given an endorsement of a picture over his signature. About “Forbidden Fruit” he has wired as follows:

“I have just had the pleasure of witnessing CECIL B. DEMILLE’S Paramount masterpiece, ‘FORBIDDEN FRUIT’.

“It is the unanimous opinion of the directors of the Stanley Company and myself that it is the crowning achievement of the cinema art.

“It is therefore gratifying to inform you that we will open our magnificent $2,000,000 Stanley Theatre with this production for an extended run, as a fitting and appropriate testimonial to this picture, which, we believe, reaches the pinnacle of art in motion picture production.”

Some Exhibitors Say:

IT would not be doing the right thing were I to let the year end without sending a few words of commendation for Famous Players and what their pictures have done for this theatre.

We have tried to divide our programs among the better class of producers and find after going over my records that Famous Players pictures have dominated each month. There is but one answer: Paramount Pictures are in a class by themselves and for that reason, and no other, this house has shown Paramount Pictures to the exclusion of practically all others.

I wish to place on record as one exhibitor who can conscientiously advocate the exploitation department for exchanges. Your assistance has materially helped in many ways, and I firmly feel that without your timely assistance results would not have been so good.

With every best wish for Paramount Pictures, every employee of Famous Players and the hope that 1921 will see your success even greater than you have dreamed.

Frank A. Salisbury,
Manager Theatre Visalia, Cal.

Let me congratulate you on the great productions you have given me during the last year. We have had a year of top-notch success and we attribute much of our profits to Paramount Pictures. Without them we could not satisfy the demands of our public for high class pictures. We cannot refrain from commenting on the splendid quality of your "first 26" pictures. "Humoresque" and Wallace Reid in "What's Your Hurry" set records we will have a hard job of beating. Such beautiful pictures as George Melford's "Behold My Wife" make new friends for moving pictures.

A BRILLIANT box-office achievement!
That's my reason for insisting upon a consistent showing of Paramount Pictures at our ten theatres in Toledo.

\section*{Some Exhibitors Say:}

\textbf{THANKS} to Paramount pictures I am beginning on the New Year with confidence that Paramount will carry me through another successful year. I have found the past year, when I showed a Paramount Picture and said so, I made money. My patrons know the Paramount trade mark means the best pictures. When we are to have better pictures Paramount will make them.

ROYAL THEATRE.
MILFORD, IA.

\textbf{THE Paramount program taken as a whole, in my estimation is the most consistent for quality and box office receipts of any pictures on the market today. The program features are as good as other companies so-called specials. And when I play a Paramount Special I just naturally have the confidence in the picture that I am not afraid to advertise to the limit; but even go so far as to guarantee the production or refund the admission price. And I have the first patron yet to step up to the box office and want the refund; and believe me we have some people in Rocky Ford that would avail themselves of the opportunity.}

Paramount pictures are my one best bet. One thing which is certain in this little city, we must put on clean pictures and when I have a Paramount on the program I can feel at ease. They are all clean and there is something in each and every one of them that is entertainment of the highest degree.

After all, the box-office is the best referee; and the receipts on Paramount days hand all other programs a knockout.

Just tell the Paramount bunch for me to keep them coming in the future as they have been coming in the past year, and we won't need any red ink.

No one can help enjoying it and it sets a standard difficult to live up to.”

A First National Attraction
THE immediate prosperity of the motion picture industry depends upon one thing and one thing alone: Theatre attendance. It is well to bear this indisputable fact in mind in the midst of a great deal of loose conversation on the subject that is now going about.

If any substantial lessening in theatre attendance in the country as a whole occurs it will be the exhibitor that may be held to accountability. The producing branch of the industry has created a calibre of production that is now available to the exhibitors of the nation which represents the one indispensable thing necessary to maintain and even advance theatre attendance under existing circumstances.

Largely through certain newspaper accounts of glaring inaccuracies the exhibitor in various places has gathered the impression that the producing centers, notably Los Angeles, have been plunged into the depths of a practical shut-down. This is interpreted to mean that hard times has overtaken the producing branch of the industry and that it is gradually creeping up on the other factors of the business.

* * *

THIS publication reported accurately the change in the Los Angeles situation last Fall when it took place. In our survey of the Los Angeles situation at that time no indication of a financial smash-up was apparent and none is apparent now. The change in the producing situation that has taken place simply means that producers very wisely have taken steps to see that the volume of production is kept within the limits of the visible demand. Any other course simply leads to disastrous overproduction and the fact that such a thing has been avoided is a hopeful rather than a discouraging indication.

Aside from a few centers which have been hit by a severe readjustment affecting those industries upon which these centers almost exclusively depend, the exhibition business never was in a better or a more encouraging condition. During the past few weeks attendance records and receipt records have been broken in many places. Theatres opening recently have found huge ready-made audiences waiting to get in. If these are indications of a panic they are wearing odd disguises!

There has been no depression in the exhibition branch of the industry and the one question now open is concerned with whether or not there is likely to be one. This question can only be answered by the future actions of exhibitors.

* * *

THE public is gradually recovering its normal buying attitude. The wild spending days of the period immediately following the war is past. From now on the public will spend, but it will spend more wisely. The theatre that will maintain and build up its patronage is the one that will improve and better its program. The one great danger that faces the exhibitor is the temptation, in the face of the general business readjustment that is taking place, to retrench by cheapening his program. This is a course that inevitably will lead to disaster in the present situation.

Instead of retrenchment, instead of looking for cheaper pictures the wise course for the exhibitor is to overlook no opportunity to give to his patrons the very best obtainable. There are certain presentation expenses that may be curtailed without danger but a cheaper picture will be found to be the more expensive eventually.

Fortunately there are now available for exhibitors an unusually strong list of attractions of exceptional drawing power. These attractions constitute the one necessary protection of the industry against any possible depression. These pictures and many that already have been before the trade constitute, at the theatre prices customarily charged, the best value the public is able to obtain for its money—and that is just what it is looking for.

Again, the exhibitor is the crux of the situation. Any laxity, any apprehension that finds expression in cheaper shows will constitute a real menace for the entire industry. On the other hand, it is within the power of the exhibitor by maintaining and improving the quality of his show, and thereby maintaining and improving theatre attendance, to safeguard and advance the interests of the entire industry even during a period when general business faces the tasks of readjustment.
in the Congo or elsewhere it is entitled to the acclaim of the world.

While on the subject of foreign pictures the question might be asked: Is there any common sense basis for the amount of space certain trade papers are devoting to the purpose of permitting persons who seem to enjoy the limelight to predict blantly that the artistry of the foreign producer will excel that of the American producer and as a consequence American supremacy will be lessened if not destroyed? This is an understandable attitude to be assumed by a foreigner but in the case of a native what good purpose is served is not plain.

The combination of three new-weeklies into the new Kinograms issue, to be distributed by the Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., is a development of importance to exhibitors. The appeal of a news weekly, properly made and properly edited, is tremendous. The preparation of this feature necessarily entails a vast organization of practically world-wide extent. To achieve its greatest effectiveness it must have the advantage of extensive equipment and must be backed by strong resources. The combination of three single issues into one greater feature is therefore significant to exhibitors everywhere.

In the face of a picture of unusual merit exhibition precedents mean nothing. Witness the announcement from the Marcus Loew offices that "The Mark of Zorro" will play each of the several Loew houses for a week. The merit of a picture and not any predetermined policy of a house must determine the run. This, and this only, is the policy which the public will back up.

Re-Takes

J. R. M.

Don't forget the starving kiddies. The week of January 24 is Motion Picture Week everywhere. With the blue-nosed Sunday reformers attacking in the rear and the censorship advocates springing up on all sides the infant industry has its hands full these days.

Assistance! Assistance!

It's going to take a pretty good cameraman to photograph "A Voice in the Dark." George Spoor had better hurry along with that new camera of his.

Stars Are Slipping

It begins to look as though the star system must go. Vitagraph is featuring a horse in "Black Beauty" and a French company has a film, "The Rose of the Red," in which a locomotive is the heroine.

More Women

Add to the "Women" films "Thoughtless Women" (Pioneer) and "Reckless Women" (Independent Films).

P. A.'s Are Eligible

The Northwestern University confers the degree of "B. S." on graduates of its journalistic course.

Tells All About It

Zion City officials have printed a complete "Handbook and Guide to Hell" which will be pleased to send to anyone contemplating making the trip.

According to the handbook "a drinker will pass his term of purification in a matatorium filled with beer, wine and whisky. No doubt the passport industry to Havana will fall off as soon as the hooch hounds learn of this terrible punishment. Havana was never like this."

'Twill Be Some Affair

That lineup of stars for "The Affairs of Anatol" looks like a page out of the "Who's Who of Filmdom."

A Film, Not a Tip

Ben Schulberg wired the First National heads, "Trust Your Wife in Chicago," which put everyone at ease as they went into executive session at the recent Congress convention. Of them left, their wives at home, however, and anyway. Ben was referring to his Katherine MacDonald picture.

Speaking of nifty catch-phrases, how does this one strike you: "See Frank Mayo in a fight that makes the battle of the Marine look like a tango tournament." Must be some fight, as our bookkeeper says the Marine affair was awfully rough.

An Undertakers' Matinee

The Queen theatre, Marshall, Texas, booked "Dead Men Tell No Tales," and to make everything right played "Rest in Peace," an Educational comedy, the same day.

I see "Life" is going into pictures. Well, that ought to add a little more life to some programs.

Will Operate in Arizona

In the business plans of the new incorporation are also included immediate activities on the magnificent new 4,000-seat First National cinema palace to be erected at the corner of Mercantile place and Broadway in Los Angeles.

The policy of West Coast Theatres Company will be the expansion and enlargement of business by erecting and operating picture theatres on the Pacific coast and in Arizona.

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 18.—Hiram Abrams, president of the United Artists, who has been in conference several days with Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, stated that he believes the whole matter of the amalgamation of the interests of the Associated Producers and the United Artists is off.

It is the intention of Mr. Fairbanks and Miss Pickford to make four pictures each annually, two in this country and two abroad. Miss Pickford will make "Little Lord Fauntleroy" in England this year, and film a feature with Holland as the locale.

It is reported that Marshall Neilan may direct Fairbanks in "The Virginian" and that Allan Dwan may direct Fairbanks in "The Three Musketeers."
Request Denver Exhibitors to Give Data on Children's Attendance During January

Public Amusements' Inspector Declares Youngsters Under Sixteen Years Old Should Be Accompanied by Adults
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

DENVER, COLO., Jan. 18.—Denver exhibitors are facing to face with additional burdens imposed by city authorities.

Theatrical men have been notified that they must submit on February 1, a statement showing the number of children under 16 years of age who will have attended the house during January.

Must Submit Statements

This data must be submitted to Mrs. Margaret D. Conway, inspector of public amusements.

Mrs. Conway declares that she believes that children under 16 years of age should not be permitted to attend motion picture theatres unaccompanied by adults.

Sees Great Improvement

Motion pictures, she declares, have shown a tendency toward improvement during the last five years. Occasionally, however, pictures are screened, she says, which are very bad.

To comply with this order of the city authorities has meant additional work for each exhibitor.

Bill Is Introduced to Bar All Outlaw Films in Oklahoma
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA. Jan. 18.—A bill has been introduced in the state legislature which would prohibit the exhibition of motion pictures, still pictures or any kind of photographic representation, painting or drawing purporting to show the conduct of any person of a criminal reputation such as a former convict, desperado, bandit, train robber or murderer.

The measure would make it unlawful to take such pictures, prepare them or manufacture them within the state. Penalty for ignoring the law would be a fine of from $1,000 to $5,000, or a sentence of from one to five years in the penitentiary.

The law would become effective immediately upon passage.

Protests Against Films Lodged With Washington Commissioners
(Washington Bureau, Exhibitors Herald)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 18.—Charging that motion picture interests were blocking censorship legislation, protests against "some of the scenes in moving picture films now appearing throughout the country" were lodged with the commissioners of the District of Columbia today by officials of the International Reform Bureau, the Methodist Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals and other organizations. The reform bureau announced for the first time that it had been making an investigation of theaters here and in other cities since Thanksgiving "with a view to an impartial report of what has been pictured, that commissioners and public may make their own estimate of the real influence upon the audience and so upon public morals."

Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts, superintendent of the Reform Bureau, observed in a speech that the "president of the national capital" had three times appeal for protection against motion pictures of criminal and vicious tendency. He said that increasing criminality made city regulations imperative, "pending federal regulation which film interests are blocking in a mysterious change of policy from the previous unanimous request for one of federal censorship as better than many petty censorships by states." Witnesses before the commissioners declared federal regulation could not be waited for. Some urged a "buyers' strike," so-called, to bring about the elimination of improper films.

Dr. Manning Scores Plan to "Legislate People Into Heaven"
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—Energetic opposition to the proposed blue laws was voiced by Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity and potential successor of the late Bishop Burch, at the annual dinner of the First Panel of the Sheriff's Jury at the Waldorf-Astoria recently.

"I am opposed to them from every point of the compass," he declared.

"I am certain that any legislation of that sort would give people a totally wrong idea of religion and drive people away from religion instead of toward it."

"What we want in this country is just a spiritual life of good old country American vanity and common sense. We must get away from the idea that we can legislate people into the kingdom of heaven."
Circuit Court in Indiana Prohibits Charity Program
(From Staff Correspondent)

PRINCETON, IND., Jan. 18.—Fifteen minutes before the beginning of a Sunday afternoon show advertised to be given in the Noble theatre for charity, the management was served with a temporary restraining order from the Posey circuit court preventing United Theatres and Amusement company, as defendant, from giving Sunday shows pending final hearing of the case. The order was granted on petition of the Princeton Law and Order League represented by Robert H. Clark, prosecuting attorney.

The complaint alleged that the defendant proposes to conduct motion picture shows on Sunday for profit, contrary to the Indiana Sunday laws. It alleges that giving Sunday shows for profit is to charity just as effort to evade the spirit of the law, and that certain persons over the age of 14 years are employed and paid to work during the Sunday opening hours, following their week-day daily avocation.

The complaint also charged that the defendant company had failed to pay the state license fee of $5 a year, although it had been operating more than five months, and that each show conducted without the fee being paid was a separate offense. For this reason the complaint asks that the charter be taken away from the defendant company and that the corporation be dissolved.

The Blue Laws

"Melancholy streets in a pestilent garb of soot, steeped the souls of the people who are condemned to look at them out of windows, in dire despondency. In every thoroughfare, up almost every alley, and down almost every turning, some doleful bell was throbbing, jerking, tolling, as if the plague were in the city and the dead-carts were going round. "No pictures, no unfamiliar animals, no rare plants or flowers, no natural or artificial wonders of the ancient world—all taboo with that enlightened strictness that the ugly South Sea gods in the British Museum might have supposed themselves at home again."

Pastor Believes That Publicity Should Be Given to National Body by the Theatre Men of the United States
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

WESTMINSTER, MD., Jan. 18.—George Osborne, proprietor of the Star theatre, has conceived a scheme for winning patronage and prestige for his house and dispelling censorship talk.

In recent issues of local papers he carried a halve page advertisement. In this space he called to the attention of the public of Westminster that all productions screened at the Star are passed by the National Board of Review of the Motion Picture Industry.

Personnel is Published

The personnel of the review board was published in full. In conjunction was an explanation of the activities of the organization, its origin, and its purpose in co-operating with the motion picture industry.

The day following publication of the information, a minister of Westminster made the following comment to Mr. Osborne:

"I am glad to know of the National Board of Review. I did not know that such a wonderful body existed. I feel sure that it will be welcome news to the mothers in this country if it were made public by all exhibitors."

Now Against Censorship

Previous to this time this pastor had favored censorship. Now he does not.

All the Pictures shown at THE STAR THEATRE have been Reviewed and Passed by the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures in New York City

This fact was explained by the People's Institute at New York City recently. These men have been selected by the United States to audit the pictures. And by so agreement with all the boards of review in the United States, that any picture shown in the United States can be shown only if it has been passed by the Board of Review in New York. Why The Small Town Exhibitor Is a Failure

An Interesting Article on Conditions Which Prevail in Many Communities

By LEO PETERSON

If a survey were to be made of the small town theatres, I doubt if it would average in one out of ten being classed as a success. The small town exhibitor blames his community - everyone but himself.

He is trying to manage his theatre in the old rut, the way it was years ago. He has never cleaned it up or made alterations in keeping with the progress of the industry. He still uses the old ancient equipment, and will think it an honor because no repairs have been put on the machine. It runs, and that is enough!

The modern screen generator, ticket machine, comfortable chairs, proper lighting and ventilation do not concern him. He shows the best pictures made, uses lots of advertising and thinks that should bring the people. When it does not, he blames everyone but himself.

The small town people travel and the theatres in the city enthrall them, and they will not be satisfied with the "old dump" at home.

There is no reason why the small town cannot have everything that the big town theatres have. I know when I make that statement there will be a howl of "too costly."

The most costly thing is not being up to date!

It drives even the regular patrons away in time and will not make new ones. If you can't get the business, which is the more costly, "a small patronage that has to go for a little amusement and seldom is pleased, or increased patronage and pleased patrons?"

Your patrons will pay for every cent you put into your house to give them the same class of shows that they see in the cities. By that I do not mean costly prologues. I do mean a clean, bright and comfortable theatre and modern machines that project perfect pictures. Take pride in the fact that you have spent several dollars in repairs every year.

Any kind of machinery will keep running, but to run properly means repairs. A motor generator and modern screens will solve that poor picture. Don't kid yourself that you have good projection without them. It can't be done. I tried to kid myself!

Another great mistake made by both small town theatres and larger theatres is in the matter of music. A cheap orchestra or a monotonous piano deadens the effect of everything else you can do to please. As a rule, the small town orchestra cannot play pictures, and every time there is a dance or social, some member must get off. They play two minutes and watch the picture fifteen, and then play "The Flower Song" during a Sennett comedy.

You pay the price and want the best pictures, but the very thing that puts it over properly is neglected.

Get a little backbone. Step up and junk those old machines. Get modern equipment. Dress up the old joint. Clean it and keep it clean. Spend all you have and borrow some more. Give your townspeople a real theatre, real pictures and real music and they will pay for it, as you will be entitled to advance the admission.

They will kick at first, but when they find that your theatre delivers the goods they will boost. It's a grind, but a pleasant one, and when paid out you will have that grand and glorious feeling that you have been a benefit to your town and yourself.

Your people are no different than those that live in the city. They want the same luxuries and necessities - and demand them.

You can't make them come to your old-fashioned theatre any more than your merchant can push off an inferior grade of goods on you.

The sooner you see the light and take a plunge the sooner you will be a success, as the world is traveling fast and soon leaves you behind. It has been done and you can do it. You will benefit by more patronage, less chance of competition and you will be able to increase or hold increased admission prices. You will have property holdings that are worth more and you will have the satisfaction of being the biggest.

Take a trip once in a while. See what the world outside is doing. Observe and benefit by your own

Minnesota Reform Element Supporting Drastic Censorship

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., Jan. 18.—A rigid state censorship of films, which would cost exhibitors of Minnesota more than $7,000 annually, is sought in a bill presented to the legislature here by seven hundred women of Le Sueur county.

The bill provides for three board members at $3,000 per year and for twenty-one employees of the board to be appointed by the governor. It provides for a fee of $2 for each 1,000 feet or less of film viewed. It is practically a copy of the Pennsylvania censorship bill with more rigid provisions.

This is in addition to Senate Bill 18, introduced by Senator Peterson, which is a copy of the bill of two years ago.

Allen's Cleveland Theatres to Open Late in February

First of Chain to Be Constructed in United States by Canadians Near Completion—Larger House Will Seat 4,000 People

CLEVELAND, O., Jan. 18.—The two motion picture theatres being constructed in this city by the Allen Enterprises, which are the first of a number to be built by the Canadian corporation in United States, are rapidly nearing completion and will be opened to the public some time late in February.

Larger Theatre to be Called Allen

The Allen at Euclid avenue and East 14th street will be one of the "show places" of Cleveland, the very latest in amusement places. The second Allen theatre at Detroit avenue and West 65th street will be thrown open one week after the Allen. It has been given the name of Allen's Capitol.

Frank Zartman of Dayton, Ohio, a former newspaper man and for a long time manager of the Strand in that city, is representing the Allen company in Cleveland.

The capacity of the Allen will be approximately 4,000. Among innovations will be a tea room for women, arranged so that it will be convenient in every way and for the patronage of the city's best persons. Special maid service will be afforded.

In the theatre proper the balcony will project just a short distance over the lowest seats giving the immensity of the building in full sight of the audiences. The entrance to the house will be from Euclid avenue into a large lobby, this giving way to a rotunda of magnificent arrangement and appointment. The woman's tea room is to the right of the rotunda, while a men's lounging room is to the left.

To Have 30-Piece Orchestra

Great pillars will reach from floor to high ceiling. An information desk in this rotunda will be another innovation. Box seat arrangements will be along strictly new lines. An orchestra of thirty pieces, conducted by one of Cleveland's best known musical directors, will be employed, while the largest Kimball organ in the country will also be used.

A battery of four of the latest pattern projectors will be installed, the projection room being one of the modern arrangements of this great house. Every convenience possible will be installed. A battery of projectors will be operated in connection with the theatre also. The Allen is located in a part of the new Bulkley block. Two large electric signs will be used along with an attraction sign board. The marquee will be somewhat different from the usual marquee arrangement, in this case it being semi-circular and oval.

Capitol Will Seat 2,000

Allen's Capitol theatre, at Detroit avenue and West Sixty-fifth street, is also a theatre of which Cleveland will be proud. Of 2,000 seating capacity, the theatre is constructed in connection with the Gordon Arcade market building. There are many innovations in this house also. One of these will be an arrangement for the parking of automobiles, thus keeping traffic on the street in this section from becoming congested.

The drapes and furnishings are rich in design and colorings, and the same is true of the decorations. There also will be two large electric signs. An orchestra will be employed and a Hill, Green & Lane organ is being installed. Nothing but pictures will be shown in the two Allen theatres.
Need Better Films to Combat Competition in South America

Representative of Paramount Declares Entirely New Situation There Due to Deflation

A NEW SITUATION confronts the American film exporter in South America as the result of changed conditions brought about by deflation, according to John L. Day, South American representative of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who have returned to the home office after a six months' business trip to South American countries.

Brazil, Argentina and Chile were visited by Mr. Day, considerable time being spent in the offices of Peliculas D'Luco Da America Do Sul, a Famous Players-Lasky subsidiary in Rio de Janeiro.

"The day when the American exporter could dump any kind of film into the South American market has passed," said Mr. Day. "Falling exchange values have crippled the export and support business through South America to a large extent, with the result that the harbors are glutted with merchandise which importers are unable to accept because of falling prices and lack of markets.

"In addition new factors have entered into the situation through the competition of German and Italian film exporters. German exporters have become important competitors and are making all sorts of inducements to the Latin-American exhibitors and importers to take their films.

"The only manner in which the American film industry can successfully fight this competition is through the production of better pictures for South American distribution. The old rule of the survival of the fittest is certain to apply to trade conditions in the Southern republics from now on, with the result that the brunt of the foreign competition will be borne by the cheaper grades of films.

"American companies producing and exporting the highest grade films are in a far better position to fight European competition because of the tremendous popularity gained by the high grade American pictures. Price cutting and the offering of special inducements to the importers and exhibitors by German companies will not endanger the prestige of the best American films, but it will make competition a serious matter for the cheaper films from this country.

"The South American business of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has shown an important increase during the past year. Two Paramount productions, which stored great hits in Brazil are John Barrymore in 'Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde' and 'Everywoman.' Both established new box office records for Brazil.

"The Cinema Avenida, the first run house for Paramount in Rio, is doubling its seating capacity.

Quebec Censor Board Stands Pat on Ruling

Will Not Rescind Order to Permit Showing "Way Down East"

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—The three members of the board of censors for the Province of Quebec, Canada, have so far refused to rescind their order forbidding the exhibition of D. W. Griffith's "Way Down East" in that province.

A. L. Grey, general manager of D. W. Griffith, Inc., was in Montreal last week and through the corporation's attorneys, Meredith, Holden, Hague, Shaughnessy and Howard, placed the matter before the prime minister, the secretary of the province and the premier. Mr. David Undurraga, these three intervene the ruling of the censor board is final and subject to no appeal.

Picture Is Endorsed

Mr. Grey said that "Way Down East" was shown to about 2,000 students of Notre Dame and 1,400 at St. Mary's, two educational institutions of Montreal, and that the heads of both had endorsed the picture. He also stated that the Metropolitan pictures had denounced the action of the censor board editorially and that the paper's dramatic department had received between two and three hundred letters protesting the board's ruling.

Will Await Developments

The Griffith offices do not plan any summary action but will await the development resulting from the influence created upon the Quebec public through the exhibition of the picture in Toronto. It is felt that if the Quebec public wants to see the production they will have it passed. "Way Down East" is scheduled to open in Toronto at the Royal Alexandra Theatre on February 28, the Ontario censors having passed the picture.

"Everything Going Great," Says Selznick

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—With the leasing of the Peerless studios, R. Dev Lee, N. L. Lewis, president of Selznick Industries, began this week to produce pictures for his Five-Star series. This makes three studios wherein Elaine Hammerstein, Conway Tearle, Eugene O'Brien, Owen Moore and Martha Mansfield are working on Selznick productions.

The Universal plant at Fort Lee was the first studio leased when Mr. Selznick decided to confine his operations to the East. Later it became necessary to lease the Paragon studios in New York, and now the Peerless plant becomes the third link in the Selznick equipment of studios.

"Everything's going great!" with the Selznick organization is a slogan that is declared to reflect a condition extending into every nook and corner of the establishment. Studios are humming, laboratories are busy, salesmen and branch managers are on their feet and the final result of efficiency is attained in pictures reaching the showmen promptly on schedule.
Gaynor on Censorship

A statement which remains as one of the most definite and conclusive on the subject of censorship was incorporated in a message of the late William J. Gaynor, mayor of New York City, to the board of aldermen, which vetoed a proposed censorship ordinance. The message was issued on December 27, 1912.

Believing that where censorship agitation is alive exhibitors may make good use of the Gaynor arguments and conclusions, EXHIBITORS HERALD herewith reproduces the important sections of the message:

"It has hitherto been the understanding in this country that no censorship may be established by law to decide in advance what may or may not be printed or published. Ours is a government of free speech and a free press. That is the cornerstone of free government. The phrase, 'the press,' includes all methods of writing or pictures. * * * So universal has been the opinion that constitutional provisions abolished all censorship of the press, and forbade them in future, that I have been able to find only one attempt in this country to set up such a censorship before this one of yours. Our constitutional provision plainly is that publication whether oral or printed, or by writing or by pictures, shall not be restrained in advance, but that everyone shall be free to speak or publish what he sees fit, subject to being prosecuted afterward for libel, immorality, obscenity or indecency. * * *

I do not believe that the people of this country are ready to commit any censor to decide in advance what may be published for them to read, or what pictures may be exhibited to them. Our laws forbid the publication of any libelous, obscene, indecent, immoral or impure picture or reading matter. Is not that enough?

"These moving picture shows are attended by the great bulk of the people, many of whom cannot afford to pay the prices charged at the theatres. They are a solace and an education to them. Why are we singling out these people as subjects necessary to be protected by censorship? Are they more in need of protection by censorship than the rest of the community? That was once the view that prevailed in government, and there are some among us, ignorant of or untaught by past ages, who are of that view now. Are they better than the rest of us or worse? * * *

"The truth is that the good, moral people who go to these moving picture shows, and very often bring their children with them, would not tolerate the exhibition of obscene or immoral pictures there. A place in which such pictures were exhibited would soon be without sufficient patrons to support it. At all events, the criminal law is ample to prevent the exhibition of such pictures. I have asked these people who are crying out against moving picture shows to give me an instance of an obscene or an immoral picture being shown in them, so that the exhibitor may be prosecuted, but they have been unable to do so. What they insist on is to have the picture examined in advance, and allowed or prohibited. That is what they are still doing in Russia with pictures and with reading matter generally. Do they really want to recur to that system?"
OPTIMISM!  Brunet Says There Is No Ground For Reported Paralysis of Industry

In every industry there are certain members who take every occasion offered to disseminate pessimistic reports concerning the conditions in such and such an industry. From time to time recently there have been rumors that the motion picture industry is suffering from paralysis. Paul Brunet, president of Pathé Exchange, Inc., who has just returned to New York from the West Coast, sees the present condition of the industry in an entirely different light. He is highly optimistic. He declares there is no ground for the pessimistic reports of great depression.

By Paul Brunet

It is true that there has been a falling off in the output of pictures at most of the Pacific Coast studios, but that is a healthy reaction due to a period of overproduction. It was not influenced by any pessimistic attitude on the part of exhibitors, for it is not true that any such attitude has existed. It simply was good business to slow up for a little while and prepare for the season of greater general prosperity presently to arrive, and which was foreseen.

Much of the misinformation regarding production that has been printed came from sources that are not entirely reliable. At these production centers there is a constant ebb and flow of people working and seeking work as "extras." They are employed for mob scenes and work of that sort. Naturally enough these people call themselves "movie actors," and usually are willing to express their views for publication.

Their employment always is irregular, and whenever production lets down temporarily for any cause whatever they are the first to feel the effect. Whereupon they view the general situation with much pessimism—and often these views are printed in good faith as coming from bona fide members of the profession.

I myself was considerably disturbed by these reports, but I have returned from a personal investigation of the actual conditions on the Pacific Coast in a most optimistic frame of mind. There is, and has been, no "paralysis." Conditions are more fundamentally healthy than ever before in the history of the industry. Picture producers have taken a leaf out of the book of other manufacturers, and of dealers in staple articles of general consumption and luxury, and have cleared the way for renewed activity under brighter auspices with a general tendency toward an advance in quality.

My investigations were broadened and rendered simpler by the presence on the Pacific Coast at this season of the year of a large number of visitors from the East and other sections of the country. Without exception, their views and their plans for the immediate future reflected the same feeling and the corresponding actions of the picture producers as I have stated them.

The picture studios have passed through their period of preparation for the promising near future and exhibit no more signs of retreatment. But I was struck by indications everywhere of a determination to proceed hereafter on lines assuring a higher quality of productions. Emphasis was placed on this policy at the various centers where serials and features are produced for the Pathé distribution. It was in the air at the Brunton and the Hal Roach studios, and in hardly less degree elsewhere. Even the merchants of Los Angeles are sharing this optimistic attitude.

Returning from this visit to the Pacific Coast producing centers personally so fully reassured respecting existing conditions and immediate prospects, I feel that I am discharging a duty to the public, as well as to the picture industry, in making this unqualified statement of convictions, and I entertain no fear of appearing unduly optimistic.

TOLEDO, O., Jan. 18.—William (Billy) James has sold his interest in the Sun & James Amusement company of this city to Peter Sun, former owner of Sun Brothers circuit. It is believed that the change was brought about on account of Mr. James entering his interest in several theatres at Columbus.

Goldwyn Praises Chaplin Picture

Los Angeles.—Samuel Goldwyn gave a private showing at the Goldwyn studio of "The Kid." Charlie Chaplin's latest picture, to the most distinguished group ever gathered to see a play photoplay. Mr. Goldwyn entertained twenty-five guests at dinner before the picture was screened. It was the first time the picture has been seen and the noted guests were highly enthusiastic. Mr. Goldwyn called "The Kid" "the greatest picture ever produced by a single artist."

There were many favorable comments on the spirit of Mr. Goldwyn in paying such unusual tribute to an author and producer in no way connected with his own organization.

Among those present were Gertrude Atherton, Sir Gilbert Parker, Charles Chaplin, Samuel Goldwyn, Madame Elinor Glyn, Leroy Scott, J. G. Hawks, Gouverneur Morris, Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Hughes, Clayton Hamilton, Edward Knoblock, Abraham Lehr, Will Rogers, Mabel Normand, Reginald Barker and Elsie Ferguson.

Joe Hopp Opens His New Fort Armstrong Many Notables Present at Premiere of Imposing Picture Playhouse

Peoria, Ill., Jan. 19.—The Fort Armstrong theatre, one of the most beautiful and imposing picture playhouses in the United States, is a reality. Before a notable assemblage it was opened to the cheers of telegrams arrived from prominent film men who were unable to attend.

One of the many features which attracted unusual comment is the beauty of the interior with its excellently blended Indian colors on Indian designs. The cast plaster work is really marvelous in its portrayal of Indian handicraft. The theatre is of sufficient size to place more than 2,000 seats, but with a thought to the comfort of patrons, it was decided to sacrifice seating capacity and only 1,000 seats were set. Joe Quinn, manager of the Majestic and Fort Armstrong theatres, will have as his assistant Percy Spencer.

Blue Law Agitators Active In the Indiana Legislature

Rigid Censorship Is Asked in Measure Introduced by Senator Steele—Women Oppose Change in Present Sunday Enforcement Laws

From Staff Correspondent

Indianapolis, Ind., Jan. 18.—With the Indiana general assembly in session there is more than the usual agitation against Sunday motion pictures.

Although the exhibitors are depending to a great extent on public sentiment protecting them against blue law agitators, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Indiana are working quietly on means for defeating any adverse legislation.

North Judson Citizens Want Rigid Censorship

Claude S. Steele, senator from Starke and Laporte counties, has introduced a petition signed by 100 citizens of North Judson asking that a law be enacted to provide for the rigid censorship and to prohibit the showing of films in which barroom, robbery or burglary scenes are shown.

The petition states that present "moving picture exhibitions are responsible, largely, for the amateur crime wave that is sweeping over the state and nation."

Women Agitators Busy

Organized opposition to any attempt to change present Sunday enforcement laws is to be offered in the general assembly by the legislative council of Indiana women, according to resolutions adopted at a meeting in which women from all parts of the state, leaders in large state organizations, took part.

The resolutions have reference particularly to attempts to legalize Sunday motion picture performances. The women will oppose such attempts and will make an effort to introduce legislation that will "improve motion pictures."

A special committee was appointed to take up the matter of Sunday pictures and to prepare such bills as may be deemed necessary.

A warm discussion of the whole question brought out that many of the women are strongly in favor of a state censorship law while others favor legalizing the National Board of Review.

Oppose Sunday Opening

Mrs. Felix T. McWhirter of Indianapolis, chairman, spoke of the tendency, especially in public offices, to work seven days a week, saying:

"We shall return to conditions in the dark ages if Sunday in America goes as flagrantly as it seems now to be going. If we continue the present trend the next generation will work seven days a week. This is a responsibility on every one who is interested in the homes of the future."

Mrs. Cull J. Vayhinger of Upland, a leader in favor of a state censorship law, asserted motion pictures are largely responsible for immorality among young women. "I haven't a bit of patience," she said, "with the gray-haired woman who sits around and says, 'Girls aren't as modest as they were when I was young.' When she was young she never dreamed of buying her entertainment at a motion picture show. That is where the standards are set for young women today. The best way to obtain national censorship is to agitate state censorship."

Metro Receives the First Print of “Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse”

“Million Dollar” Picturization of Ibanez’s Story Took Six Months to Make—12,000 Persons Used in Undertaking—125,000 Tons of Material Used in Settings—An Entire French Building Erected—More Than 500,000 Feet of Raw Film Exposed—In Taking Scenes Fourteen Camera-men Make Shots—Two Dozen Principal Players Are in the Cast

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—Rex Ingram, the director, and June Mathis, the adaptor, arrived in New York on Sunday, bringing with them the first print of the picturization of Vicente Blasco Ibanez’s novel “The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse.” In their eagerness to view it without a moment’s loss of time Metro executives gathered Sunday for a private showing of the picture. Metro claims the picture to be the biggest thing done not only by its own organization but by anyone. Its cost is said to be over a million dollars.

The production will be shown as a two-day attraction opening simultaneously in New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston and Los Angeles, the middle of February. Negotiations are now on for the Astor theatre in New York. The general publication date for the picture has not been decided upon.

In transferring “The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse” from the pages of the novel by Vicente Blasco Ibanez to the motion picture screen, Metro Pictures Corporation undertook an artistic task of which the magnitude was apparent even before the opening scene was shot. Now, after six months of painstaking labor at Metro Studios in California, the final touches are being put on this production, and its sponsors discover that practically every known record of the picture industry has been broken.

In the story its characters work out their destinies on two hemispheres. From the Argentine to the capitals of Europe, Senor Ibanez carries the readers of his master work with breathless interest, whilst he unfurls a human drama against the back ground of a world in arms.

South America, England, France, Belgium—these lands and multitudes of their people are depicted before the camera for the colossal Metro production. As a result, the “million dollar picture” not only has been realized, according to its producers, but has been eclipsed to an extent that will not be definitely known until Metro auditors have made final tabulations before the formal publication.

Statistics compiled at the Metro studios indicate, according to the company’s officials, that the production will prove the most gigantic photo spectacle in the history of the silent drama.

More building material was used in the making of the picture than was required to erect the Woolworth building, 125,000 tons of steel, concrete and lumber being used, it is claimed. A village capable of housing 6,000 persons was erected in the foothills of the San Bernardino mountains in Southern California, and destroyed for the purposes of the production.

Of these eighty-five miles of thin enough to reach to the top of the Woolworth tower and back 617 times—it is probable that not more than ten or twelve reels, or a maximum of 125,000 feet, actually will reach the eyes of the theatregoers who view the picture. The task of editing this mass of material of eliminating the duplicates and all but the perfect reproductions of the scenes enacted before the camera, probably will consume weeks. The mere running of 300,000 feet of film through one camera, at the rate of sixty feet to the minute, would consume sixteen days of eight working hours each.

Vast quantities of food were provided by Metro to feed the 12,000 persons appearing in the picture while they were working on location.

“The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse” was picturized under the direction of Rex Ingram. It was prepared for the screen from Senor Ibanez’s novel by June Mathis. John Seitz of Metro’s West Coast camera staff, was in charge of the corps of cameramen employed in the making of the picture. The leading roles are enacted by Rudolph Valentino as Julio Desossy; Alice Terry as Marguerite Laurier; Pomeroy Cannon as Madariaga, “The Centaur”; Nigel de Bruiiller as Tchernoff, the Russian visionary; and Mabel Van Buren as Elena, while other prominent parts are taken by Joseph Swickart, Brinsley Shaw, Wallace Beery, Alan Hale, Bridgetta Clark, “Smoke” Turner, Edward Connelly, Jacques d’Auray, Mlle. Dolores and Harry S. Northrup.

REALISTIC SCENES FROM “THE FOUR HORSEMEN OF THE APOCALYPSE”

Metro has finished and will present shortly its wonderful screen adaption of Vicente Blasco Ibanez’s novel, two scenes from which are presented above. It is said to be a stupendous production and one which will mark an epoch in picture making.

Reformers in Michigan Draft Bill Giving Regulatory Power To Superintendent of Public Instruction

Exhibitors in Parts of California, Missouri, Maryland, Minnesota, Oregon and Iowa Are Menaced by Existing Situation

State legislatures throughout the country are now in session. With the convening of the legislators it is significant to note an increasing agitation for the adoption of laws which would further burden the motion picture industry.

Censorship is the outstanding issue in a majority of the cases. Reformers have been noticeably active during the last few months. They have their supporters among the legislators. In many cases they already have drafted bills and have placed them in the hands of their legislative sponsors. In several cases, perhaps, the measures have been introduced.

The thirty odd exhibitors organizations throughout the states have been mindful of the influences working against them. They have appointed their legislative committees, and these in turn have been active in framing methods to counteract the reformers.

An insight on the censorship situation may be gained by a perusal of the news notes which follow.

Measure Drafted by Michigan Reformers

LANSING, Mich., Jan. 18.—Censorship is a real issue in Michigan. Various organizations, including the women's division of the Lincoln Club at Grand Rapids, have been agitating for their cause for some time. Sponsors of a censorship measure in the legislature are Senator Eva Hamilton of Grand Rapids and Senator John W. Smith of Port Huron. This measure would place legal regulation in the hands of the superintendent of public instruction.

Censorship was introduced in Michigan in 1919. In both houses of the legislature the majorities consist of members reelected for the 1921 term.

The measure drafted by the Lincoln club of Grand Rapids provides for a censorship board of three members, one of whom shall be a woman. The governor would appoint the board, one to serve one year, one for two and one for three years. The headquarters would be maintained at Detroit. Two dollars would be taxed for the review of each reel. The chairman of the board would receive $7,000 for his services and the other members would receive $1,500.

Drastic Measures Are Now Being Favored

PORTLAND, Ore., Jan. 18.—In making a report on motion picture conditions at the monthly meeting of the ministerial association here, Ralph C. McAfee, secretary of the Portland federation of churches, declared that present censorship methods here are considered inadequate by many citizens and that efforts would be made to bring about better conditions.

The agitation is due to another move, a bill introduced on the floor of the House by Representative A. J. Wescott, declaring that all excesses in the exhibition of motion pictures be suppressed. The bill, if passed by the House and Senate, will become law.

Baltimore Reformer Declares Censorship Board Is Inefficient

BALTIMORE, Md., Jan. 18.—The present censorship board is inadequate in number and is inefficient, in the opinion of Mrs. Richard Tillman, president of the Parents' League.

In making this statement, Mrs. Tillman declared that the league is determined to get a modification of the law which will assure adequate protection for the public. She said, "If the state legislature next year is to see the present methods used in the enforcement of the law, that the league will demand a change." Mrs. Tillman further urged that the board be increased in size and given more power to make regulations.

Theatres Celebrate With Christie Film

Already two theatres in different states have completed their anniversary weeks by playing "So Long Letty," and it is likely that many more special openings and anniversaries will be celebrated with the same film before the runs are over.

The Eckel theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., picked Christie's "Letty" as its special attraction for the anniversary week, as did the Walnut theatre, Louisville, Ky.

"So Long Letty" was also used on the second special bill, the week after the opening of the New Howard theatre in Atlanta, said to be the finest theatre in America.

Mammoth Exploitation Used at Premiere of Beban Film

Campaign Conducted by Paul Gray at Newark, N. J.

Packs Branford Theatre—Hundreds Greet Producer on His Arrival

NEWARK, N. J., Jan. 18.—An exploitation campaign as comprehensive as any executed for any picture was conducted by Paul Gray, director of publicity and advertising for the Branford theatre, for “One Man in a Million,” George Beban’s feature.

The results of his efforts are significant. Two hours after the doors of the new 3,500 seat theatre of which A. M. Fabian is managing director, the house was packed. Hundreds greeted Beban at the depot on his arrival in Newark. Mayor Charles P. Gillen temporarily relinquished his title, conferring upon the producer a huge floral key to the city.

World Premiere Is Given in Newark

This was the world premiere of “One Man in a Million,” which was written and directed by Beban, who also is the featured player. Robertson-Cole will distribute the production.

After being greeted at the depot by a mayor’s committee of 500 of the prominent citizens, Beban was whisked through the center of the city at the head of a parade of fifty automobiles, followed by a crowd of 500 people on foot. A twenty-five-piece band furnished music for the march to the steps of the city hall.

Speeches Are Delivered

After speeches by the chairmen of the various reception committees that had been appointed and after a general hand-shaking and bowing before a battery of movie picture cameras, Beban responded with a speech of acceptance and thanked the mayor and the dozen or more reception committees for their greeting. From the reception Mr. Beban went to the Branford theatre to see the opening performance of his picture.

The general chairman of the George Beban reception committee was Mayor Gillen. In his work he was assisted by numerous other groups. The first and most important considering the fact that a theatrical celebrity was being welcomed was the committee representing the cities of Newark. Dean Arthur Dumper of the Trinity Cathedral was the chairman of this committee. Several minutes on the committee promised to use the Beban film as the theme of their usual Sunday sermons. All of them endorsed the film.

Business Men Cooperate

Miss Elsie Greenwood, who conducts the most prominent dancing and election school in Newark, acted as chairman of the Junior Hostess Committee.

A committee of twenty-five of the leading business men cooperated with Mayor Gillen and greeted Mr. Beban. They were present at the ceremonies which were held at the city hall and assured the actor that they were in accord with his plans for cleaner and better pictures.

A general committee of newspaper men included Richard Kirschbaum, dramatic editor of the Newark Star Eagle; Gus Falzer, dramatic editor of the Sunday Call; Walter Flanagan, dramatic editor of the Evening News, and Farmer Smith, dramatic editor of the Morning Ledger.

Others Are Subpoenaed

Paul Gray was not satisfied with a reception committee of 500 for George Beban and employed a stunt that has been used seldom before. Each specialty advertising him.

Better Screen Stories Badly Needed in Opinion of Holubar Producer Declares That It Is a Fallacy to Pay High Prices for Stage Plays
By HARRY POPPE

For months whispered words were persistently dropped upon the hard surface of credulity that on the Coast, amid the swirl of production activity, there was in progress of creation a photodrama that for its profound thought, its keen artistry, its sweeping drama and its physical magnitude, stood out head and shoulders over its less ambitious contemporaries.

New York, blase and skeptical, listened paternally and patronizingly. Such whispered morsels of information had come out of Los Angeles time without number. But the skeptics leaned back in their chairs in a "Show-me" attitude to await more convincing information.

Thus it was that the film world generally became absorbingly interested in the latest reports on Allen Holubar's newest production, "Man, Woman, Marriage," starring Dorothy Phillips. Then Associated First National Pictures, Inc., exploded its bombshell. In disclosing the identity of the "Big Five" they announced the Holubar production as a component part of the group.

The announcement was unaccompanied by detailed information. So Allen Holubar was sought out to supply the missing data.

"I believe that 'Man, Woman, Marriage,' pays the finest tribute to woman that has ever appeared on the screen," he said. "The story is based on the misunderstanding of the sexes, which is the reason for unhappy marriages. In paying its tribute to woman it shows the spiritual influence of woman on man throughout his entire life. First it is his mother; then his wife."

"'Man, Woman, Marriage' cost over $100,000 to produce," Mr. Holubar remarked. "Enough probably to buy a couple of grade papers," he added with a laugh.

The inception of the story of "Man, Woman, Marriage" is interesting. Mr. Holubar was seated in a cozy corner of the Hotel Alexandria in Los Angeles, his mind running to story matters, when the idea embodied in the picture suggested itself. Then he gathered the idea on the back of an envelope. Bit by bit he enlarged on it until it took definite form.

While on the subject of stories Mr. Holubar said that he thought it a fallacy to pay high prices for stage plays thus making rentals higher for exhibitors.

"And we'll have to have better stories," he went on. "In traveling around I have met a number of people who have deplored the lack of originality in screen material. "Screen stories ought to represent life. The action should be mental rather than physical. This mental action is in 'Man, Woman, Marriage' in the metamorphosis of a woman's soul."

"New blood must be developed. It is being developed now by a few companies. Of course it isn't easily found. Everybody is trying to write scenarios."

Nevertheless, in his opinion, the prospects for the motion picture were never brighter. "In 1920 the motion picture is facing its finest year," he said. "The decrease in production will eliminate the calamity hawlers, the ones who are not competent to keep up with the march of progress.

It will also mean longer runs for deserving pictures. In fact, I think that the time will come when the motion picture, which fails to please will be put on the shelf just as the spoken play is withdrawn and placed in the store house when the public refuses to be attracted. Under existing conditions, the producer continues to get money out of a failure. And the business suffers generally."

"I also believe that the time will come when the really big productions will be presented just as stage plays are presented. They will be shown twice a day and run as long as patronage warrants their showing."

Renting Films to Churches Must Stop Warns Crandall
Washington Exhibitor Declares Effect of Competition Is Already Felt and Urges Industry’s Leaders To Take Immediate Action

EXHIBITORS HERALD has pointed out the danger of church competition repeatedly and vigorously in its editorial columns during the past two years.

Declaring that the renting of motion picture films to churches, clubs and other non-theatrical organizations is of far more concern to the exhibitor than censorship or Sunday closing, Harry M. Crandall of the Crandall theatres, Washington, D. C., has issued an open letter on the subject for the purpose of opening a general discussion.

In substance, he declares that the renting of films to these non-theatrical organizations at a cheap rental is cutting heavily into the attendance at theatres and unless curbed will result in a general demoralizing of the entire industry.

Declares Producers Will Feel Loss

Producers, he says, will be severely hit if the condition continues, as a falling off in attendance at theatres will force a reduction in film rentals, and may put many playhouses out of business. He states that the competition of the pictures is especially dangerous on account of the heavy taxation on theatres as against no taxes on churches.

Mr. Crandall addressed his letters to Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary to E. J. N. May; Sydney S. Cohen, president of the M. P. T. O. A., Martin J. Quigley, publisher of EXHIBITORS HERALD and other leaders in the industry.

Calls It “Great Menace”

His letter is as follows:

“One of the greatest menaces, as I see it, to the future of the motion picture industry, and a thing that is of far more importance to both producer and exhibitor than censorship or Sunday closing, is the furnishing of shows to non-theatrical organizations, such as churches, clubs, etc.

“In the first place, many of these organizations pay no taxes, while the exhibitor has to pay anywhere from ten to fourteen taxes to pay. In addition to this, they can nearly command their congregations or members to attend their shows as against the picture theatre, and even if they do a very moderate business, it has a tendency to cut down the business of the theatre that may be in their territory, and may eventually put him out of business.

“The producer’s first thought may be that he will benefit by this, and let the exhibitor worry. In this I assure you he is wrong, for the reason that these accounts are usually furnished at a very moderate rental, and if this continues to occur, the exhibitors will have to have a reduction in their service that will more than offset any rentals paid by these non-theatricals. Eventually the exhibitor may have to go out of business, but whether he does or not, you will find that these churches and other organizations will make so much money out of the picture business that they will decide to produce their own pictures, and this is where the manufacturer will be hurt; and after all, why should churches and other organizations be supported off the motion picture industry any more than off anything else?

Industry Fought for Years

“It must be remembered that the motion picture industry has been fought from all angles for years by most everything. Despite this fact, it is successful, and has become one of the most popular forms of amusement in the world. Why should those who have fought us be allowed to come in now, after we have invested millions of dollars, and reap the harvest? I feel that the motion picture industry should be independent and stand on its own footing, and should discourage the encroachments of non-theatrical organizations just the same as the legitimate show-houses have done for years.

“It may be that I stand alone, or it may be that I am looking further in advance than some others, but I do feel that a lively debate on the matter will do no harm.”

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)
OMAHA, NEB., Jan. 18.—The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Nebraska, with headquarters at 214 South Fourteenth street, Omaha, has launched a comprehensive campaign to combat censorship protagonists in the state legislature.

A petition is being circulated throughout the state. A. R. Danner, president of the state association, believes the petition will contain 400,000 names when presented to the legislators.

An editorial printed in the Omaha World Herald has been copied and forwarded to every exhibitor in the state as a means of arousing them to the necessity of fighting the menace.

At the time of the state convention in September the exhibitors voted opposition to censorship. It every theatre man in the state will cooperate with the officials it is believed that the agitators can be defeated.

Zukor Lauds Al Lichtman as Big Factor in Building Up Paramount
President of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation Expresses Regret at Losing Services of Former Manager of Distribution

In accepting the resignation of Al Lichtman as general manager of distribution, Adolph Zukor, president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, expressed regret at Mr. Lichtman's decision to leave the company. President Zukor said:

Is Executive of Ability
"Although I have long known that you desired to go into business for yourself, I cannot accept your resignation without telling you how deeply I feel at the severance of business relations which have extended throughout all the years that have seen the growth of this company."

You have been one of the principal factors in building up our organization and during our association I have found you an executive of integrity, vision and rare ability. But, more than that, I have always counted you as one of my closest friends. I sincerely wish you the best of success in your new venture.

Will Enter Business
Mr. Lichtman resigned from Famous to enter business for himself. He will announce his plans for the future shortly.

Mr. Lichtman was in active charge of the distribution affairs of Famous for a number of years. He probably numbers among his friends more motion picture men than any other man in the industry.

Atlanta Clergyman Favors Blue Laws
(From Staff Correspondent)
ATLANTA, GA., Jan. 18.—One of the prominent clergymen of Atlanta, Bishop Warren A. Candler, in the January 9 issue of the Atlanta Journal, takes a strong stand in favor of the blue laws.

Bishop Candler's attitude has gained considerable publicity, partly due to the fact that three other prominent ministers in Atlanta—Dr. C. B. Wilmer, rector of St. Luke's Episcopal church; Dr. Ashby M. Jones of the Ponce de Leon Baptist church, and Rabbi David Marx of the Jewish Temple—have held more liberal views. While none of these three have expressed themselves as in favor of Sunday pictures, their genorous and liberal-minded attitude on the subject of harmless Sunday diversions has been most encouraging to the opponents of the blue laws.
Rivalry Developing Among Exhibitors in Hoover Drive

Cohen Reassures Chairman of Charity Campaign That Theatre Owners Will Place Their Screens at Disposal of Cause

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—Rivalry has developed among the exhibitors of the country who are endeavoring to make exceptional records in raising funds for the Herbert Hoover campaign to relieve distress among the children in Europe.

Reports reaching headquarters of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America at 1482 Broadway are encouraging. They have prompted Sydney S. Cohen, president, to write a letter to Mr. Hoover reassuring him of the cooperation of the exhibitors.

Believe Public Will Respond Generously

Exhibitor officials are still forwarding letters to the theatre men in order to assure a 100 per cent result. According to letters received from showmen the motion picture public is in hearty sympathy with the cause. Because of these optimistic reports it is expected that a generous response will result. January 26 has been designated as Motion Picture Day.

In a letter to Mr. Hoover, Mr. Cohen says:

"True to the solemn pledge we have given you, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of the country will place their screens at your disposal to cooperate with you in your noble work of relieving the distress among the little innocent victims of the war in Central and Eastern Europe.

Theatre Men Enthusiastic

"Reports are coming in from every section of the country showing that exhibitors are vying with each other in promoting the humanitarian work which you have undertaken.

"I beg to assure you that the Motion Picture Theatre Owners are going about this work with the utmost enthusiasm and that their zeal will be exerted to the last minute. The Motion Picture Theatre Owners will not fail you but prove once more conclusively that the screens of the country are forever at the disposal of men engaged in work of public service.

"The conviction is deep among our members that no public welfare work has at this time a more urgent appeal than that conceived by you and conducted under your active supervision. If at any time hereafter, either before or after the 26th of January, the motion picture theatre owners of the country can be of any service to you, please do not fail to appeal to them directly and they will not be slow in responding."

Letter Sent Exhibitors

The following letter has been sent to all motion picture theatre owners:

"Mr. Herbert Hoover has appealed to the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America to cooperate with him in his campaign for the raising of money to save the starving children of Central and Eastern Europe. We have pledged ourselves to respond to this appeal.

"We have thus an opportunity not alone of showing that our hearts are in the right place, but of demonstrating to the world the combined power of the screens of America.

"Do not fail the children on the 26th day of January and advertise the day well.

"Fraternally yours,

Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America"

Educational Moves Its Executive Offices to Penn Terminal Building

8,000 Square Feet of Floor Space Gained by the Transfer—Present Quarters in Godfrey Block Retained by Concern

Educational Films Corporation of America and its subsidiary distributing organization, Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., has moved its general executive and departmental offices to the new Penn Terminal building at the corner of Seventh avenue and Thirty-first street, New York. Some 8,000 square feet of space on the twelfth floor is occupied.

Present quarters on the eighth floor of the Godfrey building have been retained. The production, accessory, shipping and film storage departments remain at that address as well as the projection room. The remainder of the space vacated by the executive departments has been given over to the New York exchange for its expansion. Complete re-arrangement of these offices has been made.

Staff Greatly Enlarged

This addition in office space has been made necessary by the remarkable growth of Educational. Some idea of this can be gained when it is stated that there are now twenty employees of the executive departments of the home office alone for each one just a year ago. This number includes only the headquarters forces and does not take into consideration the sales and distributing forces through the United States and Canada.

Inauguration and completion of Educational's enlargement plans have consumed less than a year. The first of its own exchanges began operation on June 28, yet the 1st of October saw the completion of the system with twenty-eight branches in the principal distributing centers of the country and six in Canada. Along with the rapid growth there has been vast increases in sales, distribution, exploitation, supply, advertising, publicity and various other branches, and many departments representing entirely new activities.

Force Highly Organized

An example of the company's organized effort is shown by the fact that in the matter of moving offices only five hours' time was lost by any member of the force and during that time each department was functioning on a somewhat limited scale.

"Our move," commented President E. W. Hammons, "has been forced on us because of our volume of business over our greatest expectation with the inauguration of our own distribution system. For the past two years the enlarged staff and so crowded in our present quarters that we have been working under handicaps, and since service has been one of the foundations of this organization we have immediately set about to obtain space where each department could attain its utmost efficiency."

"We have been compelled for the past few weeks merely on account of lack of office space to hold back some developments which had been planned and which will immediately be put into operation."

Remodel Michigan Theatre

GREENVILLE, MICH.—Work of remodeling the Silver Family theatre is progressing rapidly and is expected to be completed soon. Messrs. Silver have its management.

Charlie Chaplin’s "The Kid" in Chicago

There was any doubt in the minds of First National officials as to whether or not Charles Chaplin's drawing power had been affected by his long absence from the screen, for the opening day afternoon, when his latest comedy "The Kid" was shown for the first time anywhere at the Randolph theatre, Chicago. The vast crowds waiting to gain entrance to the Jones, Linick & Schafer house attested that the little comedian has lost none of his box-office attraction. He is still as popular as ever and the smiling multitudes that streamed out of the theatre only made the standees the more eager to get in.

The Chicago Herald-Examiner Jan. 17 had the following to say regarding Chaplin's newest feature-length comedy:

"Yesterday morning about 9 all the film comedians who have been taking Chaplin's place took their leave and themselves out the back way. Along with them went those who have been accusing themselves that Chaplin had lost out by staying away from home so long. Nobody掩盖 good. Everybody was in the pardon feeding hankers, fiddling to Charlie himself; yes, sir, Charlie himself, home now from a year's absence on leave."

"The pardon was a Randolph theatre, and when, in the course of things they called 'The Kid,' around an alley wall there suddenly appeared a little man with big feet and a small mustache; people burst out clapping their hands and laughing, and some of them not at all sure whether they were laughing at a comic or a thought."

E. W. HAMMONS

President of Educational Films Corporation, whose remarkable growth has necessitated larger quarters.

Shallenberg Opens

NEW YORK Exchange

Arrow Exchanges, Inc., Will Serve Theatres in N. J. and Metropolis

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—W. E. Shallenberg, president of Arrow Film Corporation, has organized a new company, Arrow Exchange, Inc., to deal in film exchange in New York. The theatres in Northern New Jersey and Greater New York will be served by the branch.

Mr. Shallenberg has applied for the license, and, if granted, will operate the exchange with friends, W. Ray Johnston, treasurer, and E. R. Champin, vice-president and manager.

Arrow Exchanges has taken over Empire State Film Corporation, which formerly was owned by Arthur G. Whyte. The new company will retain the Empire offices and contracts.

Champion will manage the Arrow exchanges. It is also expected the company, having no connection with the national distributing organization.

Plan Missouri Reopening

SPRINGFIELD, MO.—According to E. C. McManus, owner of the Springfield Theatre and Investment Company, operators of the Electric theatre, the company has virtually decided to reopen the Jefferson theatre in January.

Halliwell in Waterbury

WATERBURY, CONN. — George Sellman, for some time past manager of the Strand theatre, has given up his position to go into the business of a former owner of the Star and Life theatres.

Charlie Chaplin is in Chicago in it does some of the lowest of low comedy, at which you rock and writhe, but he also does some of the funniest, most delicately shaded acting you ever saw anywhere, and his playfulness is a delight. If you have never seen Chaplin before in it there is a classic, exquisite scene which only the greatest of painters will fully appreciate."

"Chaplin, in his garret with a fumbling baby, has moments, which make the Folies Bergere baby scene crystal pure. The actions are coarse, but never unpleasant. The shut-eye is practicable. The young sightless world will burst a midriff bending to them. On the street, where the bricks fly and where Chaplin and the wonderful Jackie Coogan, his adopted son, flee from cops and thugs, the action is rousing, physical, convulsive."

"But the next moment the officers will be taking the weeping, pleading baby from Chaplin and you will see in the panic-stricken eyes of Charlie something that will convince you that you are in the presence of the best potential Hamlet alive today. And who knows where this cherubic Jackie Coogan may end. He starts out as the best child actor you ever saw. Women wept just to see him yesterday."

"The Kid" is two-fisted. Its right glove is packed with the plainer parts of tears, its left with horse-shoe of laughter. Chaplin swings both like Dempsey, with Sir James Barrie in his corner. The picture is perfection, with a minimum of subtitles; with everything told simply, plainly, magnificently. As in earlier pictures, Chaplin indulges his imagination with a dream. This time it's a little naive, but it has its Jackie and herself wearing wings, but the comprehension of both children is well put in the dirt of the slums, a tracer and bequest that will haunt you like a tune months after."

"Six reels of it seeming no longer than one. Six reels in which two lone figures are featured. Of any other human being, six reels that are sadder and more poignant than the Others who will store for anything the movies in their earliest and last yearnings."

"Chaplin is home obviously. But as a matter of fact to any mortal who knows the difference between Shakespeare and Harold Bell Wright he never was away."
OLIVER MOROSCO, producer and co-author of "So Long Letty," the stage play picturized by Al Christie for Robertson-Cole, personally supervised the construction of sets and rehearsal of talent used in the presentation of the screen version at the Kinema theatre, Los Angeles. Mr. Morosco's opportune presence in the city and a natural interest in the engagement were solely responsible for his cooperation, according to report.

The advertising material thus placed at the disposal of the Kinema staff was invaluable. The genuine news value of the event will be appreciated by all exhibitors. And every exhibitor will fashion mentally the advertising campaign he would employ were coincidence to place a similar opportunity at his disposal.

Every exhibitor should be given such opportunities. Although it is obviously impractical to suggest that authors of novels and stage plays personally supervise presentation of the picturized works at every theatre, a thoroughly satisfactory substitution for actual personal presence can be and should be made.

The advertising capital such an arrangement would place in the exhibitor's hands is material to which he has every right.

PRODUCERS long ago demonstrated their valuation of stage and novel originals by bidding for motion picture rights until the prices asked for these mounted to figures beyond the most optimistic anticipation of playwrights and novelists. The prices paid were not without effect upon rental prices. Competitive bidding has caused less comment of late, but the price of production rights remains at a high figure.

Exhibitors gained greatly by the movement. In advertising screen versions of stage plays and printed works of the indicated caliber they overcame in great measure the public feeling which had existed heretofore to the effect that the screen represented a class of entertainment far inferior to the older mediums of expression.

The box office records of early productions picturizing stage and book successes proved the wisdom of the departure. It would be difficult to estimate the material benefit that the theatre has experienced.

INDICATIVE of the satisfaction with which producers regarded the results obtained by this step are the recently announced plans of certain companies to go a step further, employing novelists and playwrights for studio work ranging from supervision of adaptation to direct writing for the screen. Several writers of international fame have already taken up residence at production centers and are devoting their whole time to learning studio methods through first hand contact.

When the first attractions produced by this arrangement come to exhibitors another step upward in popular estimation will be recorded for the motion picture theatre. The exhibitor will do all in his power to make the screening of his initial attraction under this classification an auspicious event.

None can reasonably doubt that the engagement will attract persons who even now refer to the theatre as a "movie" and find their entertainment elsewhere.

IT IS a singularly incongruous fact that in the voluminous comment that has been made upon the subject of the new production methods no mention has been made of new steps to be taken in helping the exhibitor acquaint his patrons with the new order of things. No doubt press books of more than customary elegance will be provided, but something more than this is due the man who is responsible for the success or failure of the move.

Oliver Morosco, Rex Beach, Sir Gilbert Parker, James Oliver Curwood, Zane Grey, Vincent Ibanez, a representative few, are men whose presence at the theatre of an exhibitor advertising one of the attractions made under their supervision should be sufficient to bring patronage surpassing in volume and class any ever experienced in the past. But none of them can be present in many cases, if in any. Which does not mean that the value of their participation in production is therefore unavailable.

A little thought upon the subject will suggest to any of the producers engaged in production of the type a plan which can be utilized to excellent effect at a cost insignificant in proportion to the gain accomplished.

TWICE in the past year pretentious announcements have been made of organizations launched with the sole purpose of providing presentation fea-

Showmanship Suggestions in the Stills

WORLD'S Apart" Eugene O'Brien's forthcoming Selznick production, contains the set and incident reproduced above. Familiarity with production methods leads to the conclusion that considerable footage will be devoted to the sequence in which it occurs, which authorizes use of a prologue or interlude in which a similar stage setting may be employed. Because of the set construction a number of amateurs may be employed for the background, three professionals or adepts for the prominent positions being adequate for purposes of effectiveness. The type of music suitable for the occasion is plentiful and a well delivered bit of dialogue by the players represented as visiting the cafe should serve to make clear the connection between plot and presentation.

"THE Devil," the Associated Exhibitors' picturization of the stage play of the same name, which created a sensation a few years ago, with George Arliss in the stellar role, contains the above scene. Those familiar with the stage original will recall that much of the action transpired within an artist's studio, which warrants use of such a stage setting. Vaudeville offers the theatre man many acts in which one or both principals do rapid black and white or color drawing, many of which also include singing, playing or patter. One of these, properly rehearsed for the purposes of the occasion, should satisfy excellently the requirements of the prologue which is suggested in the still. The subtitles of the picture should provide material for dialogue, or the press book may contain information which can be utilized in this connection.

ANTONIO MORENO, as Convict No. 777, in "Three Sevens," a forthcoming Vitagraph feature. Convict stuff in exploitation has been used frequently and with reported success. Practically any of the established stunts, with alterations to give freshness, should serve the exhibitor in stimulating interest in the picture.

GEORGE BEBAN'S classic stage number, "The Sign of the Rose," should be used as presentation by every theatre showing "One Man in a Million," his new production being distributed by Robertson-Cole. The star is making a personal appearance tour of the country, as told elsewhere in this issue, but even the theatres where he cannot appear in the flesh a capable impersonator should be employed to give the sketch.
Kinema's Studio Window Setting May Be Adapted for Any Picture on the Market

Single triumphs make interesting reading, but daily newspapers and best sellers contain more merely interesting reading than the active business man can ever hope to give his attention.

Single triumphs that leave with the man who reads of them ideas or suggestions that he can employ to his business profit are more than interesting. They mark chapters in the book of theater advance, the most important record of the industry.

Such a triumph is recorded herewith.

The Kinema theatre, Los Angeles, long prominent in American theatrical progress, recently scored a distinct triumph in the exploitation campaign waged for "Twin Beds," the First National attraction starring Mr. and Mrs. Carter DeHaven, the picturization of a stage play which was highly successful and well remembered. Accompanying illustrations show graphically the stunt which stands out as distinctive in the story of the campaign.

Windows of the Barker Brothers department store, facing fifty feet on Broadway, which is to Los Angeles what the other Broadway is to New York, were obtained for cooperative display purposes but the Kinema theatre came off a decided best as concerns the benefits derived from the cooperation.

In these windows was recreated with striking fidelity the bedroom scene in which the major portion of the motion picture action takes place. It was likewise the scene of the best incidents in the stage original.

Twin beds were installed and the room otherwise furnished to complete the resemblance. And clothes models were attired in costumes duplicating those worn in the picture, a skillful arrangement of the figures in positions occupied by the principals at various moments in the play accomplishing remarkably likelike effect.

Then the distinctive touch was applied.

A motion picture camera, lighting apparatus, etc., was placed in the window, and another model was given the role of camera man. Then a card, large enough to read easily yet small enough to permit satisfactory scoring of the first impression, was placed in just about the psychological position.

A glance at the photographs reproduced herewith is deceptive. A studied second examination is necessary to distinguish the fact that the characters are not portrayed by flesh and blood actors.

The Kinema stunt is a triumph.

But more important by far than that individual triumph is the obvious fact that any exhibitor can duplicate that triumph in behalf of any motion picture production on the market.

The studio effect is the big punch of the idea. It need not be elaborated upon for it is obvious.

Another type of store may be used, with other characters and even more studio equipment and characters properly placed, but the outstanding merits of the stunt are simplicity and adaptability. These form the acid test for any exploitation, and the Kinema window display assays 100 per cent pure.
Blumenstock Story of "Passion's" Record Week at Brooklyn Strand Showman Classic

Mr. Blumenstock's account of the Strand exploitation and presentation, amplified with this and other accompanying illustrations, provides exhibitors throughout the nation with ample working material for the handling of the attraction. Uncommon interest attaches to the picture because of its classification by First National as one of the "Big Five Productions" and because of its remarkable box office record at the New York Strand, a performance duplicated at the Brooklyn house.

The remarkably effective presentation used for "Passion," the First National attraction, by Edward L. Hyman, managing director of the Strand Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., included but three players. Stress was put upon ability rather than economy, with the extraordinary results detailed in the accompanying story by M. B. Blumenstock, press representative of the theatre, writing a showman's story in terms of showmanship. Few stories of exploitation or presentation that have been written parallel Mr. Blumenstock's contribution in showmanship value.

M. B. Blumenstock, press representative of the Mark Strand theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., has written in the following account of the "Passion" engagement which established a new record for that playhouse, a showman's classic, a showmanship story from the showman's angle in showman's terms. It is presented herewith as contributed:

The exploitation and presentation employed by Managing Director Edward L. Hyman in behalf of the First National attraction warrant the attention of every exhibitor by reason of their genuine merit. As described by Mr. Blumenstock they form the basis of one of the most interesting stories in recent exploitation literature.

By M. B. BLUMENSTOCK
(Photographs, illustrations by Exhibitors Herald staff photographer)

At the end of a two week's intensive exploitation Brooklyn fell for "Passion" in numbers which made Managing Director Hyman wish that the walls of the Brooklyn Strand theatre had been made of para rubber instead of fireproof concrete.

The Strand's seating capacity is three thousand five hundred, and from the opening Sunday matinee until the last performance at the end of the week seats were scarcer than horse collars at an automobile show.

Without neglecting his current attraction in any way Hyman was shooting out stories through his press department which found their way daily into the Brooklyn papers and New York papers with Brooklyn sections. "Passion" offers a fertile field for real zippy press stories, and friendly editors confessed that their desks were deluged with trick stories on the big First National attraction.

Great care was taken in writing about the period for the papers. For the greater part most of the press stories were interviews with Pola Negri, interviews on her plans for producing in America under her new five hundred thousand dollar contract, on the day she was returning from a concert recital in her limousine accompanied by her friends and was made the target for a bomb which fortunately killed only the chauffeur, the bomb being a present from the enemies of the late Czar of Russia with whom Pola was alleged to have been friendly. This latter story was almost taken seriously by the editors, and in several instances was run in the news section.

Few pictures offer the theatre press agent the grounds for "different" publicity that "Passion" does, and in two weeks the papers were carrying a peak load of Pola Negri publicity and practically dominated the sum total of all the competitive publicity in Brooklyn.

On the Strand's enormous electric sign which faces Fulton street, an announcement was made under the current attraction billing two weeks in advance.

The sign remained unchanged with regard to "Passion" billing until the week of the opening. Then the five bars of
The Brooklyn Strand electric sign as made up during the “Passion” engagement. An elaborately constructed sign, obviously representing great initial cost and upkeep, the results gained by use of the sign demonstrate the wisdom of its purchase.

Interchangeable lights were set to read in five horizontal lines, “Passion.”

Six oil paintings in illuminated bronze frames were outside of the theatre for a week in advance of the showing. In handsome gilt frames in the lobby more hand-painted posters were placed advantageously, while on the screen Hyman used a regular advance trailer which was decorated with a portrait of Miss Negri.

In the programs and on the front of them were announcements. The announcements used in the programs, as inserts, were beautiful and highly representative examples of the printer’s and engraver’s art. Printed on an enameled buff paper in red-brown ink, with three high class illustrations reproduced from the stills furnished by First National, thousands of them were distributed in the theatre, and few of them were thrown away in the house.

So much for the preliminary work. You can paint the town red, spend a million dollars in advertising, and if the picture isn’t “There,” all your time and money is wasted. Fortunately, “Passion” is the sort of picture which will stand up under the most glowing praise, and it seems almost impossible, in fact, to say enough about it.

Presentation counts every bit as much as advertising, and Hyman certainly has shown what can be done with “Passion” by exhibitors who have the equipment to put it over the way it deserves to be handled. Hyman’s prologue is a study in stagecraft and an education in exhibitor presentation.

Only three people were employed, in addition to having a set constructed especially for the prologue. But these three people, under Hyman’s direction, certainly did put everything they had into the job and earned the hurricane of applause which went with the closing of the curtains at the finale.

Hyman’s prologue, which almost seems to explain itself in the reproductions of the scenes shown hereafter, opened after the Robespierre overture, with the scene lit in a dim blue. The only highlights in the set were in the hanging lamp and on the three bracket candelabras. “Passion,” interpreted by a well known actor.

Theatre Standards of Nation Raised by Strand Example

Edward L. Hyman, managing director of the Strand theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., shares with the comparatively limited group of genuine leaders in the theatre field credit for the material advance which has been recorded since the advent of “Passion,” an advance which should prove to the complete satisfaction of even the most skeptical the power of that agency.

Mr. Hyman was one of the first to step free of convention and incorporate into his program entertainment by artists of standards that the business world was to amplify the appeal of the screen product.

His individual progress in the work has been shown in a program from that which has obtained throughout the theatre field. From a modest beginning he has gone steadily forward to a stage which warrants expenditure of time and money for presentation material which an exhibitor of two or three years ago would have acclaimed disastrous.

Mr. Hyman’s “Passion” presentation is one of the best ever staged in any theatre. It is significant that the house record was broken during the period of its staging. It is work of this type inspiring the exhibitors of the nation to greater effort and blazing the way for constant improvement, that raises the theatre standards of the nation.

Broadway dancer, attired in crimson georgette, barefooted, with hair caught in graceful curves by cherry decorations, enters and registers her part by wrapping her semi-hard shoulders in a crimson veil. Then “DuBarry” enters, and “Passion” makes her, attempting to win her with offers of jewels.

“DuBarry” is not to be persuaded until “Passion” points to the doorway, which is transparent under side lighting, revealing the “Spirit of Royalty” significant of the heights to which “DuBarry” may rise if she accepts the cloak of “Passion.” “Royalty” (coloratura soprano) sings “Polonaise” from “Mignon,” and the two dancers, “DuBarry” and “Passion,” do several pretty steps suggesting the resignation of “DuBarry” to “Passion’s” offer.

The “Spirit of Royalty” ends her song, the lights come down, and she disappears from view. Cannonading is heard and “Passion” and “DuBarry” stand aghast looking at the doorway. The lights behind the doorway go on, revealing a somber guillotine illuminated against a red background with vivid flashes of green. As the knife of the guillotine is released, “DuBarry” slowly droops into a faint on the steps, right stage. The cannoning becomes more intense and a baritone singer practically any costuming concern carries in stock the attire required for a prologue modeled after the Hyman original. Inasmuch as the whole of the feature was given in pantomime it is probable that talented amateurs may in some cases be employed profitably.

Mme. DuBarry, as impersonated in the Strand stage feature. The character suggests an attractive costume for ushers and other feminine employees of the theatre.

The prologue was the only other number on the programme, due to the length of the picture. This method of presentation provides at the same time for a quick turnover of the crowds, and enables an exhibitor to devote more time and expense to the elaborate prologue the picture deserves.

Records were smashed, day by day, and what is more important, patrons were well pleased and didn’t mind telling the management what they thought of the picture.
"Polly With a Past" and "Inside the Cup"
Presentation Amplifies Review Information

A notable service is rendered exhibitors contemplating program use of "Polly With a Past," Ina Claire's initial Metro vehicle, and "The Inside of the Cup," the Paramount picturization of Winston Churchill's novel, with the publication elsewhere in this issue of complete reviews of the attractions and, herewith, description of the presentation accorded them by Hugo Riesenfeld, managing director of the Rialto, Rivoli and the Criterion theatres, New York, at the Rivoli and Criterion respectively.

An unlimited engagement of "The Inside of the Cup" opened at the Criterion on Jan. 9, with theatre plans in keeping with the estimated importance of the event brought to fruition by Hugo Riesenfeld, whose presentation productions occupy important place among the theatre achievements of all time. On the same day "Polly With a Past" was introduced to Rivoli patrons with like ceremony. Accompanying photographs show the stages of the respective playhouses with prologues in progress.

The church interior reproduced upon the Criterion stage was created by Josef Urban, whose name has become almost a synonym for excellence in work of this class. His radical departures from established precedent in stage technique have been widely adopted by modernists.

In this instance his predilection for the brilliant and the ornate was set aside out of consideration for the general atmosphere of the play and the nature of the story. The church interior that was constructed was severe of line and delicately colored. Stained glass windows, statuettes, bits of architecture such as may be found in the oldest cathedrals, all were worked into the general scheme to produce an atmosphere of antiquity.

In this setting, appropriately garbed, Gladys Rice, soloist, sang Gounod's "Ave Maria," a composition eminently qualified for the occasion.

The stained glass window in the central position carried the text upon which the motion picture play and the book original is based, a text which is presented at the opening of the picture: "Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites, for ye cleanse the outside of the cup and of the platter, but within they are full from extortion and excess." And the window depicted the scene of Christ driving the money-changers from the temple.

Against this simple but artistic and impressive setting the picture was presented. Constructed by Josef Urban, the man who made the settings used in the production, it served its JOSEF URNAN, stage artist of national renown, produced for the Criterion Theatre, New York, the above setting for the prologue accorded "The Inside of the Cup," the Paramount production, which opened an indefinite engagement at that playhouse on January 9. The detailed description of the setting and prologue, which is given in the accompanying story, should be read by every exhibitor who contemplates a booking of the picture.

HERBERTIANA," a miniature musical comedy, made up wholly of selections from the compositions of Victor Herbert, was staged at the Rivoli Theatre, New York, as presentation for "Polly With a Past," the Metro production which introduces Ina Claire to screen followers. Hugo Riesenfeld, in creating for other exhibitors such adaptable precedents as this and the one illustrated on the opposite page, renders the exhibitorial field an invaluable service.

purpose adequately.

Though exhibitors throughout the country cannot all have the benefit of Mr. Urban's genius, all can utilize the basic ideas here set forth to good advantage. Many theatres are already equipped with scenery which may be utilized without alteration. And many exhibitors will grasp the opportunity to use the drape type of setting, a style that can be applied in this connection with excellent effect and at little expense, the costume of the singer carrying the dominant atmospheric effect.

The selection used at the Criterion is excellent for the purpose but may be satisfactorily replaced by whatever similar compositions may be for any reason preferable. Where it is not deemed practical to employ a singer or singers (the choir possibility is obvious) good effect may be gained by carefully managed use of well lighted setting and an organ recital.

At the Rivoli theatre, with "Polly With a Past" as the central attraction, another type of presentation was employed.

Here musical comedy was resorted to for material, several Victor Herbert compositions constituting the program. "Herbertiana" was the name given the feature, which was presented in the form of a young people's social. Grace Foster, soprano; Ralph Soule, tenor; Paul Oscar and Vera Myers, dancers, and members of the Rivoli chorus participated.

"The Nightingale Song" from Herbert's "Mlle. Modiste" was used as the opening number, the dancers being disclosed in action as the stage was revealed, the singers taking up the chorus while the dancers continued. "Superlative of Love," from "Her Regiment," was vocally delivered by the soloists individually, in duet and finally by the ensemble, the gradual transition into "Kiss Me Again" being gracefully accomplished, at the conclusion of which the point of screening was reached.

The selection of material is wholly in keeping with the reputation that Mr. Riesenfeld has earned for showmanship. The star of the picture became famous in musical comedy. It is fitting that her first production, though not a musical comedy in its original form, should be presented by this form of entertainment.
Everett Theatre Lobby Is Study in Display Realism

If results gained justify motion picture directors in transporting entire producing companies hundreds of miles for the purpose of obtaining genuine settings and consequent realism in the finished print, it must be true that exhibitors are justified in spending money and exerting effort to attain realism in stage and lobby setting. It is peculiarly true that comparatively few exhibitors give evidence of properly appreciating that process of reasoning.

The accompanying illustration is a reproduction of a photograph taken at the time "The North Wind's Malice," the Goldwyn production, was being shown at the Everett theatre, Everett, Wash. It shows in fairly comprehensive whole the general effect gained.

Fir trees were used for the basis of the display. A snow background was provided for these. the white and green contrasting sharply. And hewn logs were placed at logical points.

The icicles hung at such points as icicles might be expected to form added a touch of realism which would have satisfied most showmen, but Mr. Turner went a step further, using a trick which might have developed a ludicrous angle but was utilized experimentally and found worth while.

A thermometer was tampered with in such manner that it registered twenty degrees below zero permanently. It was then added to the front, displayed prominently but not conspicuously. The person who was "stopped" by the display came upon the thermometer naturally and credited the man who made up the display with genuine genius.

Realism of exceptional effectiveness was a quality of the lobby display prepared by George K. Turner, manager of the Everett Theatre, Everett, Wash., for Goldwyn's "The North Wind's Malice."

Denver Front Made Campaign Broadside By Artistic Means

Louis K. Sidney, managing director of the William Fox theatres in Denver, Colo., combines the spectacular and the artistic in exploitation with exceptional success. His remarkable accomplishments of the past two years, recorded in this department and widely commented upon, is largely due to this ability.

His Rivoli theatre display for "Go and Get It," Marshall Neilan's First National attraction, is reproduced herewith, a pictorial tribute to the man's ability in accomplishing one of the big little things in theatre advertising.

There is certainly nothing lurid about the display. The round cutout which is given central position is artistically done, despite the fact that it displays a purposely inattistic figure.

The title of the picture appears several times elsewhere in the front, and yet there is no suggestion of crowding to get volume effect.

The finishing touch of the artist is seen in the advance suggestion for "Blind Wives" placed high on the front. A small blank space is left for the addition of suitable material at the proper time, and the title, one of the easily remembered variety, is allowed to impress itself upon the passing public.

Thus is obtained that difficult thing—an artistic broadside. Only a Sidney could do it.

The entire building front of the Rivoli Theatre, Denver, Colo., is utilized in a broadside by Louis K. Sidney, managing director, attaining the effect of the sensational without sacrificing the artistic.
"The County Fair"

Schade Theatre Scores Triumph

"The County Fair," the Maurice Tourneur production starring Wesley Barry and distributed through state right exchanges by Guy Croswell Smith, was the occasion for unprecedented exploitation at the Schade theatre, Sandusky, O., during a recent engagement.

Accompanying photographs show the exterior and lobby decorations, the costuming of ushers and orchestra, but do not indicate the fact that candy and peanuts were given patrons entering the house, that old time favorites made up the musical program; in short, that so realistic was the whole that a Sandusky newspaper devoted half a column to its description.
Bosten’s Enterprise Puts Muscatine on Theatre Map

DUE to the unhappy intercession of whatever agency it is that brings about the occasional unavoidable delays commonly and no doubt often unjustly attributed to one Mr. Burleson, the story of Lady Bosten’s exploitation campaign for “Humoresque” during its showing at his A-Muse-U theatre, Muscatine, la., takes on the attributes of a serial narrative. In the January 22 issue of this publication the first “chapter” of the story was written. The present installment is none the less important because belated.

With the supplementary photographs which are reproduced herewith comes additional information disclosing the actual scope of the campaign. In addition to the animated window displays used by a piano and a Victrola store, Mr. Bosten, working with Dan Roche, exploitation representative of Famous Players-Lasky Corp., at the Chicago exchange, circulated heralds, teasers and other literature with good effect, also utilizing his mailing list to excellent advantage.

It is further set forth in the delayed report that a new house record was established during the engagement that Muscatine theatregoers and citizens generally registered genuine astonishment when they beheld the efforts put forth in behalf of the picture, and that Mr. Bosten has adopted a permanent policy of exploitation in keeping with attractions played.

Thus is Muscatine, la., placed upon the exploitation map. Mr. Bosten takes his place among the advertising exhibitors of the country, and the A-Muse-U theatre is given place upon the exploitation map.

Grauman Contrasts Stage
And Screen Entertainment

THE industry-old question of vaudeville in connection with motion pictures has been solved by Sid Grauman, managing director of Grauman’s Million Dollar theatre, Los Angeles, perhaps as satisfactorily as by any other American showman. His answer to the question, “Can pictures and vaudeville be satisfactorily combined?” would doubtless be a modern and amplified paraphrase of the ruralite’s “Well, it can and it can’t.” To Grauman that would mean something, and to one familiar with his experience in the theatre that bears his name and in the more recently erected Rialto theatre in the same city it also conveys a definite thought.

Such a statement would mean, in brief, that vaudeville, or its equivalent, can be used, but that it is not vaudeville if it is used properly.

An account of his program during the engagement of “Flying Pat,” Dorothy Gish’s Paramount production, serves well for illustration purposes.

Claire Forbes Cranc, pianiste, opened the program with Liszt’s “Hungarian Fantasy on Folk Tunes,” the orchestra accompanying. “A Study in Pose and Color,” participated in by three players and depicting in pose and lighting scenes of Bohemian Paris, was the second number. Still no suggestion of airplanes or other matter relative to the picture title.

The Metropolitan Quartette, featuring Mabelie Burch, referred to as “The American Galli Curci,” were next in order of appearance, giving a ballad and concluding with the presently popular “I’ve Got the Blues For My Old Kentucky Home,” in which they were accompanied by Henry Murtagh, Grauman organist and composer of the song.

“Memories of Old Mexico,” illustrated herewith, a feature made up of singing, dancing and instrumental numbers, followed and occupied the major portion of the time allotted to presentation. The picture followed.

If there was aught in the entertainment thus far to identify it with “Flying Pat” it is not disclosed in the report. But success is reported for the engagement. It must follow that the contrastive type of presentation utilized by Grauman is practicable.

But it isn’t vaudeville as Grauman uses it.
The importance of "getting off on the right foot" in opening a new theatre is well known to theatre men. That it is thoroughly appreciated by Messrs. Clemmer and James, managers of the newly opened Winter Garden theatre, Seattle, Wash., was demonstrated in the selection of the initial attraction.

"Kismet," Robertson-Cole's picturization of Otis Skinner's stage success with that star in the leading role, was chosen for the central position on the inaugural program. The picture has been demonstrated a box office success in practically every section of the country. The Winter Garden engagement added testimony to that effect.

SHOWMANSHIP dominated the management's choice of a feature attraction. A clear understanding of the lasting effect made by first impressions prompted the booking parties to select from a rich market of available attractions one which leading theatres throughout the country had used with success.

The accompanying photographs, showing two views of the theatre during the first week of operation, are ample proof of the wisdom displayed in the choice.

The wide advertising which naturally precedes a theatre opening, augmented by that instituted for the picture itself, brought such patronage as is indicated in the illustrations to the new Seattle playhouse. It is not unreasonable to believe that patronage of similar magnitude will continue indefinitely.

The good start is important.

In presenting a big picture and an exceptionally strong supporting program at the opening of the theatre the management inspired the public with a healthy respect for the institution and a well formed impression that motion pictures to be seen at that playhouse in the future would be of a high standard in every instance and such entertainment as is always sought but not always found.

The business of directing the theatre successfully from that point onward is thus greatly simplified. The public is kindly disposed from the first. The exhibitor's endeavors hence forward are co-operative rather than cultivative. He has but to supply a demand, not to create one.

Messrs. Clemmer and James have "got off to a flying start." An ancient proverb has it, "Well begun is half won." The proverb states the case conservatively.

"Something to Think About" was the big line in a cooperative double truck obtained by Eli M. Orowitz, Paramount exploitation representative at the Philadelphia, Pa., branch, for the showing at the Victoria theatre, Harrisburg, Pa.

Wayland H. Taylor, Paramount exploitation manager at Seattle, Wash., is popularizing the rubber stamp as an instrument of exhibitor exploitation, an experiment with "Humoresque" giving rise to the popularity of the device.

F. A. Miller, manager of the California theatre, Los Angeles, invited 200 clergymen to a private screening of Goldwyn's "Godless Men," establishing what will doubtless proved a popular precedent in the exploitation of the picture.
“The Mark of Zorro” Doubly Exploited for Dual-Showing

A policy precedent was established by the Clemmer and Winter Garden theatres, Seattle, Wash., when “The Mark of Zorro,” Douglas Fairbanks’ United Artists production was shown simultaneously and the two theatres advertised by a double advertising campaign in which the houses were equally represented. Another precedent was broken when, at the end of the seven day engagement, count was taken and the fact discovered that in spite of persistently unfavorable weather both box offices had established new records.

A “get together” participated in by the executives of the two theatres doubtless figured importantly in the final result. It was decided at this conference that the fact that the two theatres were to exhibit the picture “day and date” should be made the strong point in all advertising done. It was an unprecedented occurrence, and an unprecedented occurrence of any sort is genuine news. News is always better than “publicity.”

The newspaper advertisements carried by both theatres stressed this item strongly. And the opening of the run found the Seattle public well informed of the circumstances and, obviously, more than ordinarily curious to view the attraction which should be so highly regarded by the theatre management as to bring about this departure from custom.

The interior of the theatres were decorated in harmony with the locale of the play, and ushers and attendants were dressed fittingly, the accompanying illustration showing the general effect gained, as well as pointing out the ease and economy with which any exhibitor can achieve a like result.

The weather also proved of service as well as a box office factor. Due to the unusually protracted rainy season characteristic of Seattle umbrellas had been obtained for the protection of persons waiting in line before the theatre. These were converted into advertising accessories by having painted upon them, “Going to see Douglas Fairbanks in ‘The Mark of Zorro’.”

Two phases of the event merit special attention, due to their adaptability. The simultaneous engagement where it has not been used is a genuine news event which can be profitably capitalized by any exhibitor who choose to cooperate in this manner.

The umbrella stunt is good in itself. And the Seattle use of the idea suggests a stock of umbrellas advertising the theatre only to be kept in readiness for patrons leaving the theatre on rainy nights.

An event which produces two suggestions of that calibre is truly notable.

The Exhibitor’s Right

The producer who sees fit to take the lead in this direction will give over a portion of each author’s time to the direction of the presentation feature at the initial screening of his picture. These events will be handled in a manner befitting their importance. National newspaper publicity will be gained for them, and the presentation will be in keeping with the quality of the film production.

As many companies as circumstances require will be equipped and put upon the road with the pictures. Exhibitors will be shown the advertising and straight program value of them and urged to avail themselves of the offer made.

Exhibitors realizing the importance of the arrangement will make use of the material offered. The motion picture in all its phases will benefit greatly by the innovation.

Universal Pictures
Score in New York

Photographs of exceptional quality reproduced upon the opposite page tell more effectively than words the methods used by New York showmen in advertising Universal attractions. They are methods which exhibitors everywhere will gain by adopting in greater or lesser degree.

Plenty of billboard material is used, and plenty of light for front illumination. With these attention compelling agencies applied as in the present cases much of the burden is lifted from newspaper and house organ advertising.

The tactics employed by the managers of the three theatres in question should be adopted generally, and this without decreasing other efforts made. The results will justify the effort and expense involved.

"Risky Business," another Universal production, given the "spot" in the 72nd Street Theatre's display.

The Bronx Plaza Theatre brilliantly and effectively advertised "The Devil's Passkey."
Crowd Psychology Prompts Mauer’s Cutout Sequence

The above reproduction of a photograph showing the manner in which George Mauer, manager of the Strand theatre, Louisville, Ky., utilizes cutouts for lobby purposes does not disclose the full import of the style employed. Were the photograph taken upon an occasion when even an ordinary crowd was in attendance the point of the method would register much more effectually.

But the imagination supplies with little difficulty the lacking detail. Any exhibitor has but to people the lobby in his mind’s eye with a dozen patrons leaving the theatre. The exhibitor who does so will realize at once that the placement of the cutout stands, cutouts made up in such manner as to enhance the illusion, gives the impression of a much greater crowd than actually is present.

It is highly probable that such an illusion was created when “Peaceful Valley,” Charles Ray’s First National attraction, was being shown at the Strand. Great as may have been the business done, it is obvious that one passing the theatre during a comparatively dull hour must have formed the impression that the lobby was crowded.

That impression is valuable. It is better advertising than many types that are obtained at much greater expense.

Such an impression operates with certain effect in conveying to passersby the belief that the picture on exhibition is one which has drawn a great number of people. This leads naturally to the formulation of a definite intention upon the part of the observer to see the picture if it is in any way possible to do so.

Patterson Gives Feature And Comedy Equal Stress

WILLARD C. PATTERSON, managing director of Sig Samuels’ Criterion theatre, Atlanta, Ga., has demonstrated repeatedly his mastery of the showmanship science. His contribution to the important literature being written daily on the big subject which has for its basis the comparative advertising merit of the comedy and feature attraction is correspondingly important.

Upon a recent program at the Criterion Mr. Patterson grouped Clara Kimball Young’s Equity production, “Mid-Channel,” with Larry Seman’s Vitaphone comedy, “The Sportsman.” The photograph reproduced herewith shows the frontal display made on that occasion.

In the big banner which occupied central position the two stars’ names were given positions of equal prominence. The same policy was carried out in the smaller displays on each side of the lobby, the feature photographs being given top position on one side and the comedy stills accorded like treatment on the other.

In his newspaper advertising for the engagement the same policy was observed, the space being divided equally between the attractions.

All of which indicates a confidence in what recent events point to as the correct showman stand on the question which has advanced in the past year to a point of vital importance in program disposal.

Mr. Patterson, long identified with the advance guard of American theatre men, in thus putting the comedy and the feature length production upon a plane of equal importance in his appeal to the Atlanta public demonstrates clearly his opinion of the short subject’s importance.
Exhibitors Demonstrate Poster Usefulness
In Cutout Lobby Display for Pathe Films

Title and cutout profitably identified.

Practical usefulness is the final test of any product. No lesser consideration truly indicates the merit of any working material at the exhibitor's disposal.

By that rule the paper published by Pathe for productions bearing that trade mark is found worthy. Exhibitors have used it with patent effective results.

Accompanying illustrations demonstrate the point.

When "The Devil To Pay," the Robert Brunton production for Pathe, was exhibited at the Gem theatre, Salt Lake City, Utah, an excellent centerpiece for lobby use was constructed by cutting from the 24-sheet provided with the picture the two figures which occupy extreme right and left position in the original. These were cut out in their entirety and brought together for the purpose of centralizing the appeal and focusing attention upon the most interesting phases of the display.

The photograph taken during the engagement shows the effect gained, one which is registered almost as effectively in the reproduction as it must have registered upon the consciousness of passers-by.

The other illustration shows the artistic use made of cutouts from 1-sheets issued with Harold Lloyd comedies by another exhibitor. The idea is good, and the stunt may be repeated every time a Lloyd comedy is scheduled.

The comedian's features are well-known throughout the motion picture world. Where stars are known Harold Lloyd is known, and his characteristic smile displayed artistically and attractively as in this instance cannot exert other than beneficial influence upon the box-office of the theatre in question.

Such use of poster material is proof of its quality. Exhibitors use it. That means that it is good.

Those who are assigned to the business of preparing paper for motion picture attractions will do well to keep that point in mind. The test question should be "Can it be used?" rather than "Is it beautiful?" the question that an artist may be expected to ask.

The business of the poster is not to charm with its artistic perfection; it is to bring to the theatre box-office patrons who will pay only to see the attraction which the poster represents.

Pathe paper, in at least these instances, has been demonstrated useful. That provides a working basis not only for artists engaged in making Pathe paper, but for poster artists generally.

Plunkett Prologue
For Tourneur Film
Easily Duplicated

Joseph Plunkett, managing director of the Strand theatre, New York, utilized for the presentation of "The Last of the Mohicans," Maurice Tourneur's Associated Producers, Inc., production, a prologue which may be duplicated in its essentials by practically any exhibitor. The illustration should provide showmen everywhere with all necessary working material.

One soloist and a quartette appeared in the Plunkett stage feature, the costuming being such that no inconvenience will attend upon the adaptation of the idea. The stage setting is likewise simple and within the power of any exhibitor to approximate, practically every theatre that has scenery of any kind being already supplied with the necessary equipment.

Indian songs and dances can be used almost without restriction in the number. The tom tom and the camp fire are familiar properties which may be utilized, and it may be that one of the players employed can be given a dramatic reading to deliver. This, at the close of the prologue, should introduce the screen production under the best possible circumstances.

A woodland setting, the New York Strand quartette in costume, with a baritone employed for the occasion, combined to produce effective presentation for "The Last of the Mohicans," Maurice Tourneur's Associated Producers, Inc., production.

Economical Lobby Display
Mirrors Good Showmanship

The application of economy to advertising showmanship is a delicate operation. It more often than not results in the defeat of the very much worthwhile end that is sought for. As a general rule the saving sense does not work to good advantage when theatrical advertising is undertaken.

A noteworthy exception to this rule, the exception which proves it, is presented above in the reproduction of a photograph showing the lobby display evolved for First National's "Nomads of the North," by S. S. Stevenson, manager, whose interesting story appears below. He states that the display cost exactly $11.00.

The lobby of the Princess Theatre, Henderson, N. C., as decorated for "Nomads of the North," serves to introduce to exploitation exhibitors S. S. Stevenson, manager, whose interesting story appears below. He states that the display cost exactly $11.00.

In commenting upon the display Mr. Stevenson states that he has used many stunts in his career as an exhibitor, some successful and some of the opposite character, the cost of the stunts as balanced against box office receipts determining the classification. To which the obvious rejoinder is, "If they were all as capably managed as the present one, the unsuccessful ones must indeed have been costly. If every dollar expended was put to such good use as the eleven dollars used in this case the stunts costing more than that should have drawn constant capacity."

The secret of the present successful combining of economy and advertising lies in the fact that the display did not reflect the economy. It did not look like an $11 display.

The appearance is, of course, the essential thing. In this case there was no hint of cheapness, rather the reverse.

This is the type of economy that can be applied to advertising. Where exhibitor genius is applied to eliminate the appearance of cheapness there is merit in economy.
Across America with "Dinty"

"DINTY DAY" was participated in by every newsboy in Oklahoma City, Okla., when Marshall Neilan's First National attraction was shown at the Empress theatre. Tom Boland, manager, effected an arrangement with the newspapers whereby prizes were awarded the boys selling the most papers, and the boys participated in several parades intended to stimulate sales, the theatre benefitting directly thereby.

"DINTY" was shown at the Rialto theatre, Butte, Mont., just before Christmas, which circumstance enabled William J. Sullivan, manager, to conduct with telling effect a newsboys' matinee, which brought out the crowd of youngsters seen in the accompanying reproduction of a photograph showing the front of the theatre on the day of the showing. "Out of gratitude many of the guests wore signs advertising the picture throughout the run.

At Creston, Iowa, E. Metzger, manager of the Strand theatre, sent out a float with twenty newsboys to advertise "Dinty." After a circuit of the city, during which literature was distributed, the float drew up in front of the theatre and the boys gave an entertainment consisting of singing, dancing, boxing and wrestling which lasted an hour. The "Dinty Day" idea was used here also, the boys carrying signs as shown in the illustration.

Jack Sanson, manager of the Bristol theatre, Bristol, Conn., experienced excellent results with "Don't Ever Marry," another Marshall Neilan production for First National in which Wesley Barry appears prominently, due to use of a "Before And After" window display contrasting the comforts of bachelordom with the burdens of matrimony. The photographic reproduction discloses the display's attention drawing power.
Advertising Drive
By Boy Exhibitors
Nets Big Returns

A communication of uncommon interest to readers of this department, revealing as it does the fact that two sixteen-year-old boys are making a success of theatre management and exploitation, is reproduced herewith, accompanied by a reproduction of one of the advertisements referred to in the text.

So far your paper has not heard from us excepting in your section, "What the Picture Did for Me," for the reason that we did not think the exhibitors cared what a couple of sixteen year old boys did. However, we obtained such excellent results with "Humoresque" that we can hardly refrain from writing you.

As a rule, we are only open one night a week Friday, and then we have but one show. But on "Humoresque" we arranged for three special shows, four o'clock, seven-fifteen and eight-thirty. We arranged for a full page ad in our local paper, which I am enclosing, which was arranged so that the merchants' ads would cover the expenses of the full page.

Another stunt we worked was a letter gotten out by the schools. The letter needs no explanation. Arrangements were also made with one of our local druggists for use of his window. This was decorated with 1-sheets, photographs, etc.

The result was that over one thousand people saw "Humoresque" at advanced admission.

Yours for success,
Community House Motion Pictures,

Stanley Chambers’
Newspaper Methods
Set High Standard

Many volumes offered the advertising man as helpful in his work are of certain value to the exhibitor, a business man whose business involves a thorough understanding of advertising methods. It is to be hoped that some day a volume will be published providing theatremen with practical working knowledge in understandable terms.

Such a volume might well take the form of autobiography to the extent of having different successful exhibitors write upon the phase of advertising for which they are famous. In that case Stanley Chambers, manager of the Palace theatre, Wichita, Kan., should be called upon to contribute a chapter on the subject of newspaper space and its proper employment.

Few exhibitors have equalled Mr. Chambers’ accomplishments with type and illustration. His work, taken over a period, shows a high standard of individual and collective excellence.

The advertisements reproduced in this department from time to time are selected with difficulty. It is not easy to determine "high points" in a product that maintains an even tenor of mechanical and text excellence.

The display reproduced herewith is typical. It is not one of the best, nor yet one of the poorest, as that term may be applied to a Chambers composition.
“Spoilers” Revival Breaks Washington Theatre Record

SHOWMAN wishing to praise a certain type of modern production in the most convincing terms, their command frequently say, “It has a better fight than ‘The Spoilers.’” The box-office results scored by that production in its early history are responsible.

It is of interest, therefore, to record the fact that that attraction, reissued, recently established another box-office record in Washington, D. C., the Leader theatre of that city extending the engagement to two weeks after the first week had resulted in the establishment of a new box-office record.

Exploitation had much to do with this success.

Sidney B. Lust, president of the Super Film Attractions, Inc., who recently bought the Leader and took over the management of the house, used for the occasion a striking lobby display which is photographically reproduced herewith.

J. S. Warmbath, who spent twenty-seven months in the Arctic zone as a member of Peary’s expedition, based his collection of souvenirs for the display. A stuffed Eskimo in the act of throwing a harpoon at a ‘polar bear, real Eskimo dogs, a scenic drop and a log cabin box-office mask were utilized with excellent effect, the remainder of the space being decorated in such manner as to harmonize with the central pieces.

Newspaper advertising was held to normal throughout the week, and while other exploitation effects were used the credit for the big business done is given chiefly to the display.

Exhibitors using reissues will doubtless benefit by this story of the Leader success. It has been claimed that “a big picture never grows old,” and “The Spoilers” seems to be in the designated classification.

Tally’s Theatre, Los Angeles, the “Los Angeles Express” and B. H. Dyes & Co., a hardware firm, conducted a three-way exploitation stunt of unusual aspects for the engagement of “The Jack-Knife Man,” King Vidor’s First National production. Every boy obtaining a three months’ subscription to the paper was given a jack knife. The ten boys obtaining the largest number received special prizes. An admission ticket was given each boy for each month’s subscription sold, and King Vidor applied the finishing touch which assured big newspaper publicity by inviting all contestants to Vidor Village, where it was promised a picture would be taken and the parents of each boy presented with a strip of the film showing their sons in action.

Star photographs and stills from current attractions are displayed on boards constructed for the purchase by the Chicago branch of Pathé Exchange, Inc., at the Wabash Avenue office, a location passed daily by thousands of pedestrians, information as to theatres playing the various pictures being set forth in the display. An investigator seeking to determine the reason for the knot of pedestrians grouped about one portion of the display at any hour of the day and in any weather elbows his way into the front rank and observes several poses of the Vanity Fair Maids.

Ben Jackson, manager of the Audubon theatre, New York, experienced marked success in “selling” to merchants for use in their advertising the catchline, “Don’t Be Blind Wives. Trade Here and Save Money.” The Fox production, “Blind Wives,” may be similarly exploited throughout the country.

A touch of nature was applied to the lobby display used at the Orpheum theatre Scottsbluff, Neb., playing Goldwyn’s “The North Wind’s Malice,” when W. H. Ostenburg, Jr., manager, constructed a log cabin lobby piece and piled against it the snow which all but blockaded the front of the theatre.

Hector M. Pasmezoglu, manager of the Delmar and Congress theatres, St. Louis, obtained the names of 1,100 patrons recently by having the ushers make polite inquiry. To the addresses thus procured he sent a card of thanks for patronage during 1920 and enclosed two tickets good for admission to either theatre at any time during 1921. To date 700 of the tickets have been received at the box office, which means at least 700 good friends made.

Packed Houses Serve to Extend Run of Latest Fairbanks’ Film
“Mark of Zorro” Is Praised by Critics and Public
In Cities Where New United Artists
Picture Is Being Shown

Packed houses during the run of Douglas Fairbanks’ latest United Artists’ production, “The Mark of Zorro,” caused Manager Simons of the Allen theatre, Akron, O., to extend the run two days. Box office records were broken.

This picture has elicited praise from newspaper critics and the public in cities and towns where it has been shown. The motion picture editor of the Lima (O.) Times said that there was “no use talking about it. ‘Dong’ Fairbanks is sure the goods in his latest production.”

Lauded in Chicago

The critic of the Chicago Herald and Examiner states that Douglas Fairbanks always comes back with a bang, and he comes back this time with more of a bang than ever before and a much shrewder actor to boot.”

In the majority of the Marcus Loew theatres, where the management set aside all former precedent and booked “The Mark of Zorro” for seven days instead of three and four, the box office records were broken.

The Mission theatre in Los Angeles reopened with “The Mark of Zorro” and then extended the run to four weeks, something unprecedented in the motion picture industry in that community.

One of the outstanding features of “The Mark of Zorro” is the fact that it is creating good runs in all sections of the country and Canada. It has been booked for an extended run of nine days at theAllen theatre in Calgary, Canada, for fourteen days at the Castle theatre in Chicago; for two weeks’ run at the Lyceum theatre, Winnipeg, Canada, for two weeks at the Palace theatre in Schenectady, N. Y.; for two weeks at the Dunns theatre, Minneapolis, Minn.; for fourteen days at the Goodwin theatre, Newark, N. J.

For two weeks at the Ziegfeld theatre, Chicago, and for week runs at the following theatres: Vic E. Sutphen’s, Elgin, Liberty, Kansas City, Mo.; Midway, Rockford, Ill.; Capitol, Elizabeth, N. J.; Queen, Wallingford, Conn.; Wirth, Tex.; American, Paterson, N. J.; Kelso, Passaic, N. Charnas Closes Big Contract With Arrow for Nineteen Productions

Harry Charnas, president of Federated Film Exchange of Ohio, has just closed a contract with Bert E. Shullenberger, president of Arrow Film Corporation, for the territorial rights on approximately nineteen productions.

The contract covers the sale to Mr. Charnas of “Circumstantial Evidence,” “Wall Street Mystery,” “Unseen Witnesses,” “Sacred Ruby,” “The Brown Case,” “Trail of the Cigarette,” “Triple Clue” and “House of Mystery,” eight pictures, all starring Glenn White. These were purchased for the state of Ohio.

“Chamber of Mystery,” starring Claire Whitney and Earl Metcalfe; “Desert Scorpion” and “Wolves of the Street,” starring Edmund Cobb; these productions purchased for the state of Ohio.

Will Expand Business

This deal is the first big step in Mr. Charnas’ plan towards the opening of feature exchanges to be allied with four short reel exchanges known as Standard Film Service Company, which already has branches in Cleveland, Detroit and Cincinnati. He has built up a wonderful organization, he himself handling the position of general manager, with Fred Shandy as publicity director; M. A. Lebensburger, manager of the Cleveland exchange, located in the Sloan Building; Joseph U. Smith, manager of the Cincinnati exchange, located in the Film building, and J. C. Fishman, manager of the Detroit exchange, located in the Film building.

The distribution of the Federated film output in Ohio, Michigan and Kentucky is made through these three exchanges while Mr. Charnas is also the head of Educational Film Company of Ohio, which in turn distributes through the Standard exchanges.

In commenting on this deal, Mr. Shullenberger stated that he was very much pleased to see a producer like Mr. Charnas caliper enter the feature field as a distributor in his territories, for he felt that it was a man such as Mr. Charnas that the producers and distributors of independent features must look to for their success in years to come.

President Goosmann states that the company intends to produce strong human interest stories with well chosen casts. The best of direction and photography will be provided.

Stories Are Obtained
Several stories have been obtained for picturization. Negotiations are on for a number of prominent players.

Offices of the company are at 322 Fifth avenue, New York.

Mr. Goosmann was for several years connected with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in an executive capacity. He resigned the position of office manager of the New York exchange of Famous to assume management of the New York exchange of Empire State Film Corporation, an independent distributor.

J. Charles Davis, 2nd., came to the motion pictures in 1913 from the ranks of the advertising men. He has devoted the intervening time to an exhaustive study of the business, having been by turns scenario writer, assistant director, director, film editor, producer and exhibitor. He has devoted the last two years to the advertising and exploitation of pictures, having been exploitation manager of the New York exchange of Famous Players, from where he resigned to assume the position of advertising and exploitation manager of Empire State Film Corporation, which firm he left to become director of advertising and publicity for Arrow Film Corporation, which position he held until he resigned to accept his present place.

Three Productions Are Scheduled For February Issue by Selznick

Elaine Hammerstein, Ralph Ince and Conway Tearle
Stars in Month's Publications—"Highest Law" Goes Out on the Sixth

For February Selznick announces the publication of three productions—the Ralph Ince special, "The Highest Law"; the latest Photoplay production, "Poor Dear Margaret Kirby," and the Hobart Henley picture, "Society Snobs," starring Conway Tearle.

Published on February 6

"The Highest Law," for issue on February 6, the week previous to Lincoln's Birthday, is a full five-reel dramatic offering suitable for the holiday occasion or at any season of the year, in that it centers around one of the most intriguing incidents in the life of Abraham Lincoln. Mr. Ince, who directed the picture, plays the role of the Great Emancipator. Other members of the cast include Bobby Agnew, Margaret Seddon, Alexander Bowers, and Condell Crawford; Lewis Allen Browne wrote and picturized the story.

"Poor Dear Margaret Kirby" reveals Miss Hammerstein in a story that is particularly suited to her talents, written by Kathleen Norris. The cast includes William B. Davidson in the leading male role, Warburton Gaebble, Ellen Cassity, Helen Lindroth and Tom Brook. The production was directed by Williams and Earle, and adapted for the screen by Lewis Allen Browne. It is scheduled for publication on February 25.

Spectacular Scenes Made

"Society Snobs" is a sumptuously invested photodrama produced on a lavish scale. Spectacular scenes showing the famous "Red Rose Room" of the Plaza hotel, New York, a big ball room scene, which occupied more than a quarter section of the Fort Lee stage, and an exact reproduction of St. Patrick's Cathedral which was used as the background for a notable society wedding scene to bring forcefully to the foreground the splendid portrayal of Conway Tearle.

In the cast are Martha Mansfield, the new Selznick star, playing the leading feminine role; Jack Bowers; Jeff Drum, Jack McLean and other well known screen players. Mr. Tearle wrote the story and, with Miss Bowers, adapted it for the screen. "Society Snobs" is set for February 15 issue.

Top Notch Comedies

First Subject, "Movie Mad," Published, With Second Following Shortly

The Cleveland Plain Dealer and the Cleveland News in a January edition stated in special articles that the best two-reel comedies made are produced and distributed by Top Notch Producing and Distributing Company, with headquarters in Cleveland. Both papers claim that Top Notch comedies prove that the best pictures do not necessarily have to be made in Los Angeles or distributed from New York.

The first publication, "Movie Mad," and the second, "Jealousy," were given private showings to Cleveland critics.

Contest Is Conducted

Six or eight thousand letters weekly are addressed to the Top Notch studios in response to the nationwide advertising campaign concerning the Top Notch title contest conducted on these comedies, inquiring when and where to see Top Notch comedies and won one of the seventy-eight $100 cash prizes offered for the three best titles on each and every publication, like prizes to be awarded when a tie occurs.

Beside the officers of the company, Postmaster Murphy of Cleveland and Comedian St. Clarey, and Mr. Kyle, the Top Notch attorney, are on the board of judges to decide the three winning titles on each comedy.

Temporary Titles Given

Every Top Notch comedy is issued under a temporary title. The first reached the exchanges on January 15 under the temporary title of "Signal." The second, "Jealousy," the second publication, will be on the market February 1, while "Inside Dope" is the third of the series.

Intimate Shots of Screen Stars

"Shadowland Screen Supplement" is the title of a new single reel to be published every two weeks by A. D. V. Storey, formerly a director of Screen Snapshots and publicity and advertising manager of C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation.

Will Show Stars of Screen

"Shadowland Screen Supplement" derives its name from the magazine Shadowland and will consist of shots at home and at work with stars of the screen, the stage, the dance and other arts, and will have the editorial and exploitation cooperation of Shadowland and the other two Brewster publications, Motion Picture Magazine and Classic, a total of 1,000,000 copies a month and fully 3,000,000 readers, screen and stage fans.

The Brewster publication cooperation was provided "Screen Snapshots" by Mr. Storey when connected with that publication.

Anetha Getwell, winner of the national fame and fortune contest of the Brewster publications will be featured in a series of two reels, detective stories, by Mr. Storey.

Offer to State Right Men

Miss Getwell, following the winning of the national contest of the Motion Picture Magazine, Classic and Shadowland from 50,000 entrants and with a board of judges which included Mary Pickford, Thomas Ince, Mme. Petrova, David Belasco, Eugene Brewster, Howard Chandler Christy, J. Stuart Blackton, Maurice Barrymore and others, was then designated "The American Legion Girl," having been selected for the principal role in "Lost We Forget," a photoplay produced by A. D. V. Presentation Is Inferior

“I was surprised to find that German exhibitors are far behind us in matters of presentation. One would expect to find musical settings at their best in Germany, but instead they are distinctly inferior to those we have become accustomed to in this country.

“From Germany I went to Italy where I was received with the greatest cordiality by the motion picture men of Rome, Milan and other cities. Economic and social conditions in Spain and Portugal are very depressing indeed, and of course the motion picture business is suffering.”

The Benjamin B. Hampton production, “The Killer,” an adaptation of the novel of the same name by Stewart Edward White, will be published on January 30 by Pathé.

Frank Campeau is seen in the title role. Claire Adams is the heroine and Jack Conway is the hero. Tod Sloan, little Frankie Lee, Edward Pell, Frank Hayes, Will Walling, Milton Ross, Tom Ricketts and Zack Williams are others in the cast.

Claims Scoop in Filming Lost Naval Balloons

Educational Films Corporation claims to have been the only organization in the country that could supply pictures of the Hudson’s Bay post, the haven of the three American naval balloonists who were lost for some time in the Hudson Bay district. Panoramic pictures of the entire fur station appeared in the New York World and New York American with the big story and were dispatched to principal dailies through the country. Every photo news agency, without exception, was compelled to rely on educational or do without the scenes, according to Educational. During the days following many other photos taken by Educational at and around Moose Factory were published. These pictures were made on the tour of the whole North country section made by Educational camera men in cooperation with the Hudson’s Bay Company. The film made on this expedition is now being published in the form of single reel pictures, the first being “A Tale of the Fur North.”

Proves Fame Unnecessary To Sell Picture Scripts

Refutation of the popular idea that the value of the writer’s name rather than the worth of the story inspires the acceptance of a photoplay is made in the recent experience of Stella G. S. Perry, author of “Palmetto,” a well known recent novel.

Under the nom de plume of Carol Stone the writer sent her story to Joseph M. Schenck entitled “A Modern Diana” and it was accepted before the identity of the author was known.

Realart’s “The Furnace” Considered Meritorious Picture by Exhibitors

It is a self-evident fact that productions which are really big in story, settings, cast and direction are of great value to exhibitors and producers. And it is particularly refreshing to the latter when the former express heartfelt appreciation.

Raking high among such productions, in the judgment of Samuel Goldstein, manager of the new Victory theatre, Holyoke, Mass., is Realart’s William D. Taylor special, “The Furnace.” Mr. Goldstein selected the picture for the opening recently of his new theatre.

Crowds Turned Away

“When I booked ‘The Furnace’ to open Goldstein Bro’s new Victory theatre I considered it one of the best pictures available for the house,” Mr. Goldstein wired Realart after showing the production. “It proved to be such by the many thousands that we turned away at every performance. Let Realart make more pictures of this kind and it will be easier selling for the exhibitor as well as the producer.”

J. W. Trunk, manager of the Dome theatre, Youngstown, O., ran “The Furnace” and wired:

“Open 1921 with ‘The Furnace’ to one week capacity business. A wonderful target for this year’s blue ribbon attractions to aim at. Congratulations, Dome theatre.”

Opens New Theatres

“The Furnace” has played a prominent part as the opening attraction for many theatres, among the number being the Arcadia, Huntington, W. Va.; the Blue Mouse, Seattle, Wash.; Garrick, St. Paul; Victory, Holyoke, Mass., and a number of others.

“We saw ‘The Furnace’ in our projection room the other day,” says a letter from Miss Dorothy Day of the Garden theatre at Des Moines, Iowa, “and found it delightful. At least I did, I want you to know, since how could any mere feminine person fail to appreciate the gorgeous settings, costumes and wealth of little touches’ that make a photoplay for feminine eyes.”

Bookings Are Increasing

Both critics and exhibitors agree on this point, as well as on the compelling interest of the love story.

Bookings on “The Furnace” continue to pour in. These Pennsylvania theatres have signed for the picture: Regent Scranton; Colonial, Reading, Jackson, New; Jackson, Lebanon; Hamilton, Lancaster; Palace, Philadelphia; Mammoth, Philadelphia; William Penn, Philadelphia; Victoria Harrisburg; American, Pottsville and Strand, Allentown.

“East Lynne” Offered by Ballin Through Hodkinson

Hugo Ballin announces the completion of “East Lynne,” his second independent production for distribution by W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. The publication date has not been determined.

The screen adaptation of Mrs. Henry Wood’s famous story has become, in Ballin’s hands, a smart society play. The cast is seen in settings of beauty in keeping with the producer’s reputation as an artist, and an elaborately staged fairy tale enhances the play’s pictorial appeal.

Players include Mabel Ballin, Edward Earle and Henry G. Sell in the principal roles, with Gilbert Rooney, Gladys Coeburn, Doris Sheerin, Xellie Parker Spaulding and a dozen others lending support.

Sessue Hayakawa is Sued for $250,000

By Aubrey Kennedy

(From Staff Correspondent)

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 18.—Sessue Hayakawa has been made the defendant in the federal court in an action for $250,000 alleged damages on a charge of breach of contract. The plaintiff is Aubrey M. Kennedy, a New York motion picture distributor and producer. The attorneys for the plaintiff are Milton Cohen and Philip Cohen.

Between November 1, 1919, and April 1, 1920, the defendant is alleged to have made a contract with the plaintiff whereby the latter was to “exploit and distribute” the pictures in which the defendant was to have played the leading role. The pictures, the plaintiff alleges, were to have been distributed by W. W. Hodkinson. The actor is alleged to have violated the contract and caused damages to the plaintiff to the amount of $250,000.

Philip Cohen, attorney for the plaintiff, said it had been rumored that Hayakawa had become “disgruntled” at his former manager because the actor had been asked to pose as a Cuban because anti-Japanese agitation existed at the time. It was during this period, it was reported, that the star made a contract with the plaintiff and later, becoming reconciled with his old manager, is alleged to have broken the contract with Kennedy.

Educational Books in New England Homes' Short Subject Organization Establishes Self in the Boston Territory

Although the prevalence of the double feature policy, or the combination of vaudeville and features, has caused the Boston territory to be regarded as a sort of forbidden land for short subjects, Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., reports that every important circuit in that territory and a greater portion of the better independent houses has signed for Educational's product.

Educational points out that the greater tribute is paid to its product by the fact that the greater portion of these contracts were made by the manager of the home office and without general solicitation on the part of salesmen. These road forces are now working on the scattered houses that have not contracted for Educational pictures and the promise comes to the home office that 100 per cent results will be reported within the next sixty days.

Goldstein Brothers Sign

Goldstein Brothers, who operate leading theatres in Springfield, Northampton, Westfield and Ware, Mass., are the latest to sign contracts, which are not for a single group of pictures but for all the comedies published by Educational, and in many cases for the entire single reel and special product.

Such bookings have been made by the two biggest operators in New England, the Olympia theatres operating in key cities like Boston, Worcester, Lynn, New Bedford, Cambridge, Dorchester, Chelsea and Gloucester, and the Alfred S. Black New England theatres, including a total of more than twenty-five houses in Maine, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New Hampshire and Vermont. Both of these circuits are featuring the comedies.

Woods Is Made Supervisor-in-Chief Of All Paramount Studio Activities

Jesse L. Lasky, first vice president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production, announces that he has appointed Frank E. Woods supervising-in-chief of all Paramount studio activities. Mr. Woods has long been supervising director at the Lasky studio, Hollywood.

Further Solidify Organization

The appointment of Mr. Woods marks the success of a plan which originated with Mr. Woods, who, with the idea of further solidifying the Paramount producing organization, suggested to Mr. Lasky that the best results could be obtained by having somebody in position to supervise all the non-special productions made by the Lasky studio. This plan was immediately approved by Mr. Lasky and since its beginning has proved successful.

It worked out so successfully that the arrangement was adopted in the production of all Realart pictures, Elmer Harris, who had worked on Mr. Woods' staff and had been trained in Mr. Woods' production methods, being named supervising director of all Realart pictures made in California.

Buchanan Is Promoted

Mr. Woods was the man who also picked Thomas J. Geraghty for the post of supervising director at the new Paramount studio in Long Island City. Further developing Mr. Woods' system, Mr. Lasky appointed Thompson Buchanan junior supervising director at the Lasky studio, thus giving Mr. Woods more time to devote to his increased duties as supervisor-in-chief.

Mr. Lasky also announces that Gardner Hunting, formerly production editor at the Paramount Eastern studios, has been named associate supervising director in the Long Island studio. Mr. Hunting will take over some of the work now being done by Mr. Geraghty. This is because the new studio soon will be reopened and Eastern production activities will be greatly increased.

First National Publishes House Organ as Aid in Exploiting Productions

Associated First National Pictures, Inc., has announced the launching of a new house organ, "First National Franchise," to serve as a connecting link between the more than 3,000 exhibitor members of the organization.

The first issue of the publication, whose page size is the same as the standardized trade papers, was scheduled to be put on the presses January 11, dated January 13. The paper will be circulated monthly, and subsequent issues are to be off the press one week prior to their date of issue.

In announcing the new house organ, First National described the periodical as a service addition to the publicity department, several pages being devoted to the interchange of publicity ideas and exploitation stunts which have proved valuable in different sections of the country in presenting First National attractions. Lee S. Ferguson has been named editor.
While the movement "fewer and better pictures" is now an actuality, there is no scarcity of pictures at the present time and will not be for some time to come. This week we carry in this department twenty reviews of features suitable for every class of theatre and the exhibitor on the alert for the best the market has to offer need have no fear of a shortage. Suitable program material for large or small theatres can be found here.

"The Great Adventure" (First National) is a picturization of Arnold Bennett’s play, based on an excellent comedy idea. Lionel Barrymore gives a splendid performance and the comedy is diverting because it is in different vein. Whitman Bennett and Kenneth Webb have made a good production with appropriate sombre English backgrounds.

"Passion Fruit" (Metro) is a colorful and appealing spectacle cast amid Hawaiian settings. The story was written by Carey Wilson and Doralaina the dancer has the leading role. John Ince directed. Stuart Holmes, Florence Turner, Edward Earle and Sidney Bracy are in the cast.

"The Inside of the Cup" (Paramount) is a screen play of considerably more than the average substance. It presents a special cast headed by David Torrence, Edith Hallor, Albert Roccoardi, Frank A. Lyons and William P. Carleton, and was adapted from the Winston Churchill novel. Albert Capellani directed it for Cosmopolitan.

"The First Born" (Robertson-Cole) offers Susie Hayakawa in a story of father love, poignantly appealing and human, one that will be accepted by the majority as his best picture. Chinese atmosphere, beautiful of background and highly artistic. One of the best of the season’s pictures.

"The Woman in His House" (First National) gives Milford Harris opportunities as a young society matron and mother who she meets with beauty and skill. An eight-reel production that will stand and warrants extra exploitation. One of the most attractive youngsters on the screen plays the part of the little son. Luxurious backgrounds and compelling scenes. Gareth Hughes included in the cast.

"Prairie Trails" (Fox) is the newest Tom Mix feature and his best. A Westerner above the average grade, lively and romantic, abounding with Mix’s customary trick riding and shooting. Attractively set and well directed. Comedy tinge. Good supporting cast. The romance of a cattle man who plays hero to two women.

"The Greatest Love" (Selznick) is the first starring vehicle for Vera Gordon, the mother in “Humoresque.” A far weaker vehicle than that hit, but very well produced. A story of mother love in an Italian-American family. The tale of a mother’s unsparing faith in her son that is rewarded with his exoneration of suspected crime.

"Not Guilty" (First National) is notable chiefly for its remarkable double photography, well chosen sets and fine character work of Richard Dix. The story is an adaptation of Harold MacGrath’s story, “Parrot and Company,” and is an interesting story of a young man’s sacrifice to shield a brother accused of murder.

"Cinderella’s Twin" (Metro) depends for effectiveness upon Viola Dana, the star. The production is made up of excellent settings and photographed as capably as the best of Metro productions, but the story is light and creates no suspense at any time. Interest attaches to the manner in which the modern narrative has been adapted to the fairy tale original and to little else. As a Sunday attraction the picture qualifies nicely.

"The Highest Bidder" (Goldwyn) is a society play starring Madge Kennedy in a less frivolous role than her usual one. Well produced and entertaining. The story of a wealthy man’s attempt to teach his sweetheart a lesson that results in his own education and a threatening of their happiness. Screen version of “The Trap.”

"King, Queen, Joker" (Paramount) is the first Syd Chaplin comedy-farcce to be brought to the screen in many months. Star in dual role, that of King Merry in a revolutionary country of Europe. Plot centered about political turmoil in Greece. Refreshing of humor and highly entertaining.

"Brewster’s Millions" (Paramount) is a Reo coe “Fatty” Arbuckle feature of the high class comedy trend. A screen adaptation of a successful McCutcheon novel and stage play. Story of a man bent on spending a million dollars in a year to win five million thereafter. Swift and smooth of action and decidedly clever of comedy.

"Cousin Kate" (Vitagraph) offers Alice Joyce in an exceptionally excellent picture, one certain to appeal to every sort of patronage and to make distinct impression upon those fond of high grade, pleasant romance. Artistic in every way. The tale of a woman novelist called to straighten out the love affairs of a young relative and who falls in love with the girl’s sweetheart.

"Trust Your Wife" (First National) presents Katherine MacDonald in the role of a young wife who, while attempting to aid her husband, a struggling architect, becomes involved in a near-scandal with a bounder. The reformation of the villain follows a dramatically staged encounter on a yacht. Miss MacDonald’s striking beauty and brilliant acting redeem the story’s shortcomings and she is accorded excellent support by David Winter and Charles Richman.

"Women Men Love" (Bradley Films), adapted from a story by Charles T. and Frank Dazez, and starring William Desmond, depicts a trite domestic tangle that fails to convince. Marguerite Marsh, Martha Mansfield, Evan Burns and Danton Vane appear in Mr. Desmond’s support.

"Polly With a Past" (Metro), with Ina Claire, is a picturization of the David Belasco play, in which she created the original role. Miss Claire dominates the story and imparts to the role of Polly a fine appreciation of comedy values, and at the same time invests it with a note of pathos that lends a sympathetic effect upon the spectator. It is hoped that this is not Miss Claire’s last appearance in pictures.

"The Frontier of the Stars" (Paramount), Thomas Meighan’s fourth starring vehicle, is a somewhat sugar-coated drama of New York’s East Side life. It is a picture that will please those who prefer a combination of sentimentality and crook melodrama. There is a “Miracle Man” incident near the picture’s end that is very well done.

"The Spenders" (Hodkinson) is a thoroughly amusing comedy-drama in six parts, adapted from Harry Leon Wilson’s story. The well chosen cast, is headed by Joseph D. Dowling, Niles Welch, Robert McKime and Claire Adams. Mr. Dowling gives a splendid performance in the role of Uncle Peter Bines. It is a story of New York, Wall street and Montana, with a fine vein of humor running through it.

"The Highest Law" (Selznick) is an exceptionally strong story of civil war days with humor and appeal as its predominating quality—a high type of photoplay which should please universally and add to house prestige. Ralph Ince directed and portrays the central figure, Abraham Lincoln. Cast, direction and settings are good.
SPECIAL CAST IN INSIDE OF THE CUP
(Paramount)

Winston Churchill's novel of the hypocrisy and bigotry of church pillars, presented in an Albert Capellini picturization that holds unwavering interest from beginning to end.

When Cosmopolitan bought the rights to this novel Churchill never thought he would gain a story of considerably more than average dramatic substance. In fact, the story has as much dramatic meat in it as two pictures combined might contain. Yet it is weighty dramatic matter, dealing as it does with the hypocrisy and bigotry found in those men commonly called church pillars—men who practice Christianity on Sunday and uncharitableness and unscrupulous business tactics the remaining six days of the week. Because of its weightiness it impresses one as a preachment rendered from the pulpit, but even so the force of the author's story is so great that one's interest is caught at the outset and held so completely throughout that never for an instant is there a lagging moment.

It seems to us that “The Inside of the Cup” is a picture that will be talked about, because it literally tears into the sham of many Christians and lays bare their hypocritical lives. The blows against such are never “pulled,” but struck with solid force. One may not always sympathize with the characters who fall by the wayside because of the flint-like selfishness of Eldon Parr, the banker; the petty meanness of Ferguson, the merchant, who will not allow his sales girls to use the rest chairs the government has compelled him to install; and the hand-rubbing Wallis Plimpton, real estate dealer; who is rectitude itself in church matters, but a preying vulture upon life's unfortunates. But then there are weak characters in this world as well as strong.

The foregoing gives the thought of the story. The attitude of the church pillars causes unhappiness, misfortune and strife. But the troublemakers, in their smug complacency of their rectitude, because they practice religion on Sunday, do not hold themselves blameworthy. In fact, the shoe is on the other foot, and remains there until the new and youthful minister shocks his wealthy congregation with the truth. But a better condition is not brought about until the banker is mortally wounded by a former employee whom he had ruined, and all the characters who had wandered off to the easy road are brought back to the path of righteousness. There is a struggle between the self-assertive daughter of the banker and the non-temperizing minister.

It was by no means a simple undertaking to tell the story clearly, but George DuBois Proctor, who wrote the continuity, mastered the difficulties confronting him. His is an excellent piece of work. Albert Capellani has given the picture an impressive investiture and generally skilful direction. The cast is unusually fine, with David Torrence, Edith Hallor, Albert Roccardi, Frank A. Lyons, and William P. Carleton giving striking performances.

“The Inside of the Cup” is a most vivid indictment against sham Christianity and mighty impressive drama.

MILDRED HARRIS IN THE WOMAN IN HIS HOUSE
(FIRST NATIONAL)

Dramatic story of mother love that will touch a responsive chord in the hearts of most theatre patrons. Skillful handling of difficult sequences puts story over. Excellent cast in support of the Louis B. Mayer star deserving of special mention. Has powerful “punch” at finish.

Mother love pitted against devotion to science is the theme of “The Woman in His House,” an eight-reel special feature directed by John M. Stahl for Louis B. Mayer. The spectator's attention is gained at the beginning of the story by a vivid storm at sea and rescue. The incidents that follow in natural sequence build up interest, scene upon scene, until the final smashing climax where the paralyzed child steps from its wheel chair and runs to its mother's arms.

Aside from the splendid direction by Mr. Stahl, which is deserving of the highest praise, the work of Miss Harris as the wife, Ramsey Wallace as the physician-husband, George Hughes, a boyhood sweetheart and the cute youngster, stand out as finished performances. Thomas Holding was also pleasing as Peter and George Fisher adequate as the villain. The scenes wherein the baby gets into mischief in the pantry and his antics in a bath tub form fine contrast for the more pathetic incidents that follow where the child is stricken ill with paralysis. The work of the child is so natural it is bound to have tremendous appeal.

The settings throughout are very artistic and the long shots along the seashore, showing rugged cliffs and beautiful coves, are very well handled. Miss Harris' delicate beauty excellently becomes the role assigned her and her gowns are well chosen and charmingly worn.

The story concerns Phillip, a doctor, and Hilda, the daughter of a fisherman, who meet and fall in love, following a thrilling rescue when the father and daughter become confused in a storm and lose their way. Next we see Phillip and Hilda married and while she devotes her time to her child Phillip becomes absorbed in his experiments, leaving Hilda easy prey when Robert, a society lover, appears. She is rescued from an embarrassing situation by the doctor's closest friend, however, and she refuses to believe the story of her sly sutor.
Sessue Hayakawa, in a scene from "The First Born" (Robertson-Cole)

A story of father love that gives the star one of the big roles of his career. A heart-stirring tale that will strike response in the breasts of the child-loving world. High grade in artistry and excellent in every way. Directed by Colin Campbell.

To combine one of the greatest masters of the screen drama with a story which has for its keynote the love of a child was to strongly pave the way for the success of this picture at the outset. Sessue Hayakawa has met its opportunities gloriously. His supporting players meet his standard of excellence and from the artistic viewpoint little is left to be desired. The whole is one of the most tenderly appealing plays of the season. It achieves the profoundly impressive result that was the aim of the star and producers, and there is every reason to believe that it will be best liked of all the Hayakawa features to date. The popularity of Helen Jerome Eddy will be given forced impetus by the excellence of her work in the leading feminine role. The playing of "Sonny Boy" Warde is another item that distinguishes the picture. Scenes of the Hoang-Ho river in China and settings in the San Francisco Chinatown on the occasion of its New Year's celebration, are interestingly excellent. A raid on a Chinese gambling house lends exciting moments, and a bit of comedy comes with them, although for the most part, the trend of the tale is a serious one.

The feature is the first of the quartet to be produced this year by the star, distributed as super-specials and given exceptionally careful supervision. The star is capable always of drawing capacity houses everywhere, and the exhibitor not recognizing the real value of this latest of his features is missing a golden opportunity for box office profit and community pleasure. The rich Oriental atmosphere suggests effective publicity, and care should be taken to distinguish the Chinese character of it from the Japanese atmosphere in which the star frequently plays.

Chan Wang (Hayakawa), a boatman in the story, is in love with Loey Tsing, daughter of a fisher. She falls into the clutches of Chan Low Yah, a slave owner of San Francisco's Chinatown. Seven years later, married to Chan Lee and devoted to Chan Toy, his first born Chan Wang finds the lost Loey Tsing and rescues her from disaster, but is forced to make the sacrifice of his wife and son. The lovers ultimately find peace in reunion in China.

CHESTER PLAYERS IN BACK FROM THE FRONT

The combination of Bobby Vernon and Neil Burns, two Christie comedy stars, in one two reel feature, adds to its worth and is a point that should be stressed in advertising. Vernon has a spedy, really comical set of situations to meet when he poses as an aviator with a war record and takes his brother's place (Neal Burns') at a house party. There he finds a plane waiting him and he is forced to show his skill, the father of the basketball team insisting upon accompanying him in flight. All ends precipitously in a nose dive in a haystack, and Vernon emerges from the scrape in happy mood. There are several new fun skits introduced, and the whole is clean and attractive.

THOMAS MIGHAN IN THE FRONTIER OF THE STARS

A story of New York's East Side, somewhat sugar-coated with sentimentality, dealing with the reformation of a gang leader through the influence of a crippled girl who views the stars from the house-top, and who becomes well through a "Miracle Man" miracle. A picture that will please those who like the combination of sentimentality and crook melodrama.

"The Frontier of the Stars" suggests a "Miracle Man" sequel. Of course, it is by no means a "Miracle Man" in merit, but for those who like crook melodrama with a heap of sentiment, this picture will undoubtedly please.

Mighan is cast as a gang leader, whom the detective, Hoyt, is charged to get. A brawl takes place in a dive, a man is shot, and Buck Thirty (Mighan), having wrested the gun from the weapon's user, is pursued as the guilty one. He makes his way to the roof of an adjoining building, where he places upon a crippled girl, who finds romance in the stars above and the lights of the city about her. She has never been on the street. So the romance between Leslie and Hilda, the crippled girl, begins. Either night thereafter Leslie visits Hilda. He obtains work in a steel mill, having been cleared of his part in the saloon brawl, but a former pal, in revenge for a brother, injured a wrong, demands his life. Telling him that he will split fifty-fifty, the pal—a chemist—gets him interested in a formula that is supposed to temper without changing the color of a crook's safe. Leslie is asked to gather the ingredients because he will have to sign for them and the blame will be on him if anything goes wrong.

Considerable suspense is developed with Leslie mixing the formula which proves his undoing, but after a fight escapes. Going through his own house to the roof he upsets a basket of waste on a gas jet and starts a fire. The girl is on the roof that bridges house with house has been removed. The girl, frantic, tries to warn him. Suddenly she regains the use of her limbs. He leaps the gap. They seek an avenue of escape. At last the girl suggests there is a fire escape through another tenant's rooms. They follow the battering down of the door, the plunge through smoke, and the progress down the fire escape, the girl over the plank that bridges house with house has been removed. RALPH INCE IN
THE HIGHEST LAW
(SELZNICK)

An exceptionally strong story of Civil War days with a broad human appeal, centering about the pardoning of a boy army deserter by Abraham Lincoln. There are no battle scenes. The cast, direction and settings are excellent. Should please the most exacting and add to house prestige.

Scheduled for publication February 6, Lincoln's 150th anniversary week. Selznick Pictures is here presenting a picture of unusual merit. Although it is essentially a tragedy, it is a very strong attraction for any time of the year. Ralph Ince, in addition to directing the production, portrays Abraham Lincoln, the central figure in the drama. His characterization of the martyred president has seldom been equaled. Robert Armstrong, back from Goodwin, the desolate—and Cecil Crawford, as Tad Lincoln, give a genuineness to their roles which clutches at the heart strings. Margaret Sedden as the mother and Aileen Burr as the sweetheart of the deserter deserve commendation.

There is nothing complex about the story. After two older brothers have enlisted in the Union Army and have been killed in action, Bobbie Goodwin is drafted. He is released leave of absence to see his mother and deserts. Lincoln sees him under arrest, investigates the case and pardons him.

The boy's departure for war; his return to his mother's bedside; Lincoln's visit to the saddened household, the president's reconciliatory story to his son, Tad, and finally the pardoning and returning of Bobbie to his sweetheart, create five highly dramatic scenes of overpowering effect. All carry strength and heart interest of an unusual degree. It is a high type of photoplay.

DORALDINA IN PASSION FRUIT
(METRO)

Colorful atmosphere and good direction make acceptable this weird Hawaiian melodrama, based on the triangle idea. "Passion Fruit" is a weird tale from the pen of Carey Wilson. The weirdness asserts itself in the opening reels with some incidents suggesting mysteries that are never fully cleared up, and culminates in a riot of action at the story's close with an attack by disillusioned natives upon the "heavy" and his harem. A splendid cast gathered for a night of revelry in celebration of the success of a move to bring the heroine to the screen.

It is all about the efforts of Anders Rance to obtain the estate of Peter Dominant, who owns an island, and to win the love of his daughter, Regina. He kills Peter Dominant with a poisoned cigar made by a native who wishes to keep him from knowing only to Regina that he is a leper. Further conflict is introduced in the person of Pierre Lamont, a wreck of a man, who fakes himself at a charity vaudeville performance and insults Regina after her dance. Against this conflict Rance continues his fight until in desperation he forces the leper native to act as a speaker for the gods and arouse the natives against Regina on the ground that she is a half caste and therefore not a fit ruler. The command is, of course, a fraud, but the natives being superstitious heed it. So it is that Regina is dethroned and Lamont imprisoned. But the half-caste maid of Regina's, a wail who is trying to learn the identity of her father from the leper native, learns the truth while Rance is forcing Regina to dance the "hula" on the table under pain of losing Lamont, who is tied to a chair and covered with a pistol. The truth is spread and Rance's night of revelry is interrupted. There are several fights going on simultaneously with considerable gusto. Rance is knocked out by Lamont, and the half-caste maid, having discovered Rance to be her father and the cause of her being shunned by both natives and whites, wields a knife that ends the career of her father and herself.

Director John Ince has given the story a colorful background and has worked up considerable action. The backgrounds are a good dress for the rather wild story. Doraldina dances, while Edward Earle and Stuart Holmes, Florence Turner, Sidney Bracy and Wm. H. Bainbridge do well in her support.

For those who like strange things in melodrama of questionable logic, "Passion Fruit" will probably prove an acceptable bit of entertainment.

LIONEL BARRYMORE IN
ADVENTURE
(FIRST NATIONAL)

A picturization of Arnold Bennett's play, based on an excellent comedy idea, well produced and quite diverting because it is a different sort of a picture.

Following his appearance in dramatic vehicles under Whitman Bennett's supervision, Lionel Barrymore is playing in comedy. His latest picture, "The Great Adventure," is a picturization of Arnold Bennett's novel.

Mr. Bennett's story is built on a diverting comedy idea. The chief figure in it, an impractical artist, but an artistic genius none the less, assumes the identity of his deceased valet in order to worm out of a promise of marriage to the "most terrible woman on earth." He is able to pose as the valet because he hasn't been in London for years and has always shunned human companionship and newspaper publicity.

The comedy gets its real start when the artist goes to attend his own funeral. The bits of business introduced, such as that of the spirit of the corpse rising from the coffin and laughing ironically at the discomfited artist, are genuinely funny.

But the story takes an even more ironic trend when the artist meets the simple minded widow, who was left a house and four pounds a week from her husband. A widow who had been corresponding with the deceased valet and believes the artist to be the man who rests under six feet of earth. The subsequent marriage, and the necessity to earn money to keep the household going—the brewery having gone into bankruptcy—leads to complications. Finding inspiration in a little blind girl, the artist works with renewed vigor and turns out masterpieces which he is unable to sign and which his wife sells for a mere pittance. The time comes when the artist finds it necessary to prove he is really alive, but no one will believe his story except his former agent. Disturbing forces are introduced in the shape of the valet's widow and two sons and the unscrupulous cousin of the artist who is bent upon getting the artist's estate. A scar on the artist's back is finally needed to establish his identity.

The comedy must be found in the irony of the fates. Every now and then it bubbles over, but generally it is of the subtle sort. The points do not always fully score, but "The Great Adventure" is a venture into the comedy field beyond the conventional and the result is diverting.

Whitman Bennett and Kenneth Webb have given the picture an unimpeachable production with appropriate somber English backgrounds. Lionel Barrymore makes the artist a pathetically comic figure in his absurd impracticality. The "Great Adventure" is a beginning of a new departure for them.
THE SPENDERS
(HODKINSON)

Harry Leon Wilson's splendid story of the three generations of Bines is told again on the screen in a direct, forceful manner that is bound to appeal. Joseph J. Dowling gives a remarkable performance as the sagacious, astute Westerner who "bucks" Wall street and wins. Jack Conway directed.

"The Spenders," a Benjamin B. Hamp- ton production, being distributed by W. W. Hodkinson, gets and holds one's interest from the start. There is little doubt of its pulling power. It lays a careful foundation in the first reel and gradually works up to a logical and gripping climax that makes of the Wilson story a thoroughly enjoyable piece of screen fiction.

The early scenes are laid in Montana and anyone who has read the humorist's works knows that Mr. Wilson paints vivid a word picture of the West as any other living author. His "Riddles of Red Gap" and "Ma Pettengill" were fine examples of this, and in "The Spenders" he brings us into close touch with Peter Bines, Psyche Bines, Mrs. Bines and Percival, who later changes his name to "Peter."

Joseph J. Dowling, he of "Miracle Man" fame, has the role of Uncle Peter and catches the spirit of Mr. Wilson's humor from the start. His performance of the shrewd old Westerner who goes to New York to learn the Wall street game under his nephew's tutelage, one P. Percival Bines, who has located in the metropolis, because "it is the center of culture and refinements," and who aspires to become a Napoleon of finance, is nothing short of remarkable. When Percival advises his Uncle how to buy he gambles the other way, and in the end the youngster loses all his money, almost loses his sweetheart and gains quite a bit of experience in a garage before the Uncle comes to his rescue. It contains bits of thoroughly amusing comedy, both in action and sub-titles, which latter are for the most part taken from the book.

Claire Adams has the role of Avice Millbre, Percival's affianced bride; Robert McKim is Rulon Shepler, a thoroughly detestable villain; Adele Farrington is Mrs. Bines, and Betty Brice, Psyche Bines. E. Richard Schayer wrote the scenario.

MADGE KENNEDY IN THE HIGHEST BIDDER
(GOLDFINX)

Madge Kennedy in a less frivolous role than usual. Limited opportuni- ties to display her skill, but a pleasantly produced romance in society setting. A picture that will particularly entertain women. Screen translation of "The Trap." Directed by Wallace Worsley.

A role rather more serious than the usual one in which she is cast is given Madge Kennedy in this latest of her features. However, it limits her opportunities. The role is inferior to its demands to what she is capable of doing, but the part and the picture are in no way to be condemned for that reason. The star acts excellently and looks bewitchingly pretty.

The story, a society romance, is well portrayed. It has society settings and the back- grounds are highly attractive. The cast includes Joseph Brennan and Lionel Atwell playing the important masculine roles, and Zelda Sears playing the part of the aunt of Sally Ruchburn (Miss Kennedy). The picture will please the matinee audience more than any other, but will be generally entertaining.

In the play Sally, the protege of a wealthy woman on fortune hunt, falls in love with a man of wealth whom they meet at a summer resort. Believing that she is after his money, when she has confessed her knowledge of it, he decides to teach her a lesson. He takes into his home a tramp and gives the two opportunities to fall in love. They proceed to do, and both the plums of the erstwhile lover and the designing patron of the girl are wrecked. The tramp proves a scone, however, and the rich man and the pretty girl are left at last to have their happiness in peace.

INA CLAIRE IN POLLY WITH A PAST
(METRO)

A picturization of the current David Belasco stage success, dominated by the artistry of Ina Claire, who lifts the picture to successful heights.

It was a capital bit of showmanship on the part of Metro to obtain Ina Claire to portray on the screen the young woman created in the original David Belasco production. Miss Claire dominates the pictur- ization with her artistry. She imparts to the role of Polly a rich quality of comedy values; more, even, she invests it with note of pathos that has a sym- pathetic effect upon the spectator. She can make her screen artist should. It is hoped that this is not to be her only screen appearance. Because of Miss Claire "Polly With a Past" is an enjoyable picture. The story itself doesn't always move as snappily as it might. Its comedy values have not been fully brought out, as has not always been stressed to give them the needed punch. It is Miss Claire's performance that shines through all.

Withal, Director Leander de Cordova has done pretty well with his picturiza- tion. It has a polish about it that gives it an aura of sumptuousness. His choice of locations is commendable and his set- tings are always rich and appropriate. Technically, it is a pretty well-made picture.

The cast, aside from Miss Claire, is somewhat erratic in spots, with Clifton Webb and Harry Benham standing out most conspicuously.

"Polly With a Past" might have been made into a better picture, but even with its faults it is enjoyable, thanks to Miss Ina Claire.

SYD CHAPLIN IN KING, QUEEN, JOKER
(PARAMOUNT)

A seven-reel comedy feature, the first made by Syd Chaplin in some time. Chaplin is a capital com-edian, his fun at times suggesting the better work of his famous brother. The scenes are set in a revolutionists' country abroad; the action is rapid and plot well developed. It was written and directed by the star.

Memories of the days when stories of the sort of McCutcheon's "Graustark" held the public favor, a theme replete with the excitement that can be centered about a foreign country in revolt, will rise with the viewing of this Syd Chaplin comedy feature. It has been produced with a high degree of artistry, set in extravaganza sur- roundings and a capable cast brought together to play its entertaining and laugh- provoking sequence. It will be popular with every audience and that with comedy-loving patronage. It makes effective jibes at timely happenings abroad, such as the death of the German King from a monkey bite and the controversy over the throne of one of them.

Chaplin as the Joker and resembling the King plays a dual role. He is seen as a barber usurping the king's throne, palace and subjects, innocent of the revolution that is astir. He runs into excitement everywhere and is enamoured of the beautiful Queen who is unaware of his identity. When discovery comes and he is im- prisoned, it is she who aids his escape. Lottie MacPherson plays the part of the Queen gracefully and prettily.
which will give them access to jewels being displayed. Leaving hurriedly, as required, the brothers meet, she loses a slipper, which is secured by Prentice in the hope that it will bring about another marriage. When Lockwood demands that she find the slipper, threatening arrest, she calls upon Prentice, but refuses to give her name, whereupon he retains the slipper. The consequences lead to the final establishment of the real crooks' guilt and the customary ending ensues.

TOM MIX IN

PRAIRIE TRAILS

(FOX)

A Western feature that will do much to win the patronage with which such a picture is not popular. A breezy tale of love and trick riding and shooting, set in Western hills and plains. Directed by George Marshall.

The titles in this feature have one of the important bearings upon its value. They are deliberately humorous and will get as frequent laughs as many of the best scenes. The whole is consider- able evidence of improvement upon the usual Mix picture, and upon the usual Western film. It oozes with a pleasant bit of romance and keeps attention close as its subsequent reels add excitement and entertainment. The star is thor- oughly likable and exercises the usual skill in riding and shooting.

Kathleen O'Connor as Janet and Gloria Hope as Mrs. Endicott have important roles and carry them well. Others of the cast qualify, and stand up to their parts.

The story has to do with Mix as a cattle man. Janet's hand is refused him by her father because Mix will not ac- cept her. The story is not deserving of "position" of sheep herder. A rascally gang kidnap the wife of Endicott, a friend of Mix, and the latter rescues her, while his sweetheart believes that he has gone off with the woman. Complications are not un- tangled until the villains are rounded up and disposed of. A padlock that has been the ultimate aim of the hero is brought about.

The skillful brain and hand which has so successfully evoked rare comedy entertainment out of juveniles and animals has been equally adept with furniture this time. To watch a trunk and chaflets stream back into the house after they are put on the sidewalk when seized for rent, is one of the amazing tricks involved in the latest of these ingenious fun offerings.

The title is taken from the landlord's instructions to the negligent renter whose accumulated funds for the payment of his mortgage vanish just previous to the for- mer's collection call. The two desperadoes that steal the wealth are trailed by Smokey, the amazing Indian scout, and the funds finally are retrieved and the home saved. The little girl Ida May appears as the famous dancer and singer in a dance hall. The well known baby member of the cast does not appear this time. The two reeks are packed with the genuine fun that has distinguished this comedies and made them foremost in comedy popularity throughout the country. Their success is one of the greatest adds to advertising the new issues as they appear.
 Later to a yacht anchored in the harbor. On board the yacht Holcome in a drunken stupor attempts to embrace Margot. She interprets him as the man in hisy by telling him what a low beast he is. Conscience stricken, he sends her home, and when later he calls straightens out the domestic tangle Margot's absence over night has caused.

ALICE JOYCE IN Cousin Kate
(VITAGRAPH)

An uncommonly excellent picture in every way. High grade, and an ideal family feature. Artistic to the last detail, clever of plot development and fresh and wholesomely romantic. Star exquisite in an ideal role. Directed by Mrs. Sidney Drew.

Far better than any of the previous vehicles that are drawing Alice Joyce straight to the front among screen favorites, and as a whole shows the majority of present issues is the latest feature. It is a screen adaptation of a successful stage play starring Ethel Barrymore. Quality production has been recommended it that the ideal feature for family patronage should have. It is restful and fresh in its wholesomely romantic nature, it has settings natural and lovely to the last detail. Its photography is thoroughly artistic and the cast associated with the star is a useful harmony and skill the story through. Children will be delighted at the scenes portraying the loved story of "Goldilocks, or the Three Bears"—one of the most ingeniously set insertions ever made in a feature of this sort. It is a wholesome romance told in terms of youth and chiefly in small town setting. The star is heltiing in its capturing in mannerisms and skill. Gilbert Emery as the leading man. Heath Desmond, is a completely satisfying star, and as Ami as Amy; Leslie Austin as the Rev. Mr. Bartlett, Inez Shannon as Cousin Sarah, and Freddie Verdi as Bobby, lend admirable support.

The story has to do with "Cousin Kate," a young woman novelist who writes of unconventional judgment held explicit by admiring relatives. Called to the village home to relatives to straighten out the love tangle of Cousin Amy, she falls in love with the girl's fiancé. Amy finds consolation in a young minister lover, however, and it all works out with everybody happy.

WILLIAM DESMOND IN Women Men Love
(BRADLEY FILM CORP.)

A painstaking, laborious picturization of a trite domestic story that doesn't convince. Can hardly be expected to interest intelligent audiences, it may satisfy those which are not critical.

Charles T. and Frank Daze are said to be responsible for this story, which was put into picture form by Sam R. Bradley for the Bradley Feature Film Corporation. The story is a grossly covered, banal and unconvincing, and under stilted direction the characters are as puppets on strings. The picture is in six reels and becomes insufferable; such a length is it all about a butterfly who falls in love with a home-wrecker. Her husband and her sister plead with her and she decides to begin life with a clean slate after her husband pays her bridge debts. But she falls from grace because the sire, co-worker of the home-wrecker induces her to take part in another game of bridge. The sire and the home-wrecker have a perfect understanding. The sire wants the husband and the home-wrecker wants the wife.

The wife's sister is given to understand that she is the cause of all the trouble, so she leaves. Yet the wife does not reform. She persists in meeting the home-wrecker. The husband agrees to give his wife reason for divorce. A shyster lawyer arranges the details. He says the only cause for divorce in the state is infidelity. The wife's sister steps in and unwittingly takes the place of the woman engaged for the occasion. The husband cannot allow her name to be defamed and stops the lawyer. Eventually the wife is taken ill. Husband and sister go to her. All is forgiven and all ends well.

An effort was made to make it an impressive production, but the sets, while richly furnished, are cluttered and lack taste. The photography and costume are generally satisfactory. The cast is made up of well-known players, such as William Desmond, Margaret Marsh, Margaret Mansfield, Evan Burrows, Fontaine and Danton Vane, but no one registers convincingly. With such a cast and such a story from the pen of authors as well known as the Dazeys, the producers probably expected much, but this expectation was not realized chiefly because of the utter banality of the story and the lifeless direction.

ROSCOE (FATTY) ARBUCKLE IN Brewster's Millions
(PARAMOUNT)

A laugh studded comedy admirably adapted from the George Barr McCutcheon novel to meet Arbeuckle's successful ways of fun-making. The photography and costume are all that will please both the high grade and the general patronage. Clean, speedy and clever. Directed by Joseph Henabery.

The popularity of "Brewster's Millions," first presented in novel form by McCutcheon and then staged with country is not so far gone that it will not have a revived with this story brought to the screen with Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle in the leading role. It is a sure generator of continuous laughter for it is crowded with comical situations and amusing perplexities on the star part. It suggests clever exploitation built on the theme of the story—how to get rid of a million dollars in a year without making gifts nor matrimonial alliances.

The opening scenes show Arbeuckle as an infant in arms—delightfully ridiculous.
There is a snap to the titles and speed to the action and all leads to a smashing climax and a whirlwind finish. Arbuckle is a joy, and the players who give him good support include Betty Ross Clark, Fred Huntley, Marion Skinner, William Boyd, James Corrigan and others. The exhibitor who misses this feature is passing up one of the best big comedies of the season.

ARBUCKLE as Brewster is bent on the spending of the million dollars in the year's time, the legacy left him by one grand-father, that he may win five millions from he other. His friends believe him insane, and there is a girl seeking to restrain his madness, but with whom he falls in love. Realizing it he lets the promised five millions "go hang," but finds himself wealthy in the end as well as possessed of the wife.

VERA GORDON IN THE GREATEST LOVE (SELZNICK)
The first starring vehicle of the actress who usurped stellar honors in the part of the mother in "Humoresque." Will disappoint those who have gauged her work by that hit, for its opportunities are fewer. A strong story, however, with the mother love theme dominant. Smoothly welded, interesting and entertaining. Directed by Henry Kolker.

Here is a good feature. It is not as big a feature as "Humoresque" in which Vera Gordon made a name for herself, for it has not the opportunities of that play.

It is a tale of mother love, as is to be expected, and the star plays an emotional role with much appeal. The vehicle is more or less conventional in plot, however, and the part played by Miss Gordon is one which any number of screen artists less skillful than she could make a success.

The picture will appeal to the general patronage, however, for it is very well done. It has artistic settings and photography, and the lighting effects are excellent. Bobby Connelly will be admired in the role of the boy hero.

The star appears as the mother of a family of Italian emigrants and guards them to maturity and lives to see the son successful as an architect. The daughter falls prey to an evil seducer, and, seeking reparation for her mistreatment, the brother arrives at the rascal's office to find him murdered. He is suspected of the crime and imprisoned. The mother's unswerving faith is ultimately rewarded and the boy's innocence is proved. A sweet love theme runs through the whole.

THE PASSIONATE PILGRIM
(PARAMOUNT)
An exceptionally well made production of a Samuel Merwin story which, while not fulfilling the promise held out for it in the early reels because toward the end it resorts to the conventional film action, nevertheless strikes a point above the average. Robert G. Vignola directed.

"The Passionate Pilgrim" is none other than Samuel Merwin's "Henry Calverly," who has appeared between magazine covers for a number of years. From such an author and such a character one naturally expects much. Unfortunately, expectations are not fully realized. For the first few reels Henry Calverly in his trials is an interesting study, but toward the end he becomes involved in the conventional film plot and the story correspondingly suffers.

Calverly is here presented as a victim of circumstances. Once a famous author he has been reduced to the position of a newspaper reporter, unable to use his own name. His wife had tried to shield her mother of the crime of murder, and he in turn had tried to shield his wife. But his wife dies, and Calverly is captured and sentenced for aiding in the evasion of justice. He makes an appealing figure as he begins his work as a reporter.

Interest in him is sustained as he exposes to ridicule the self-contained mayor, who considered himself a second Napoleon. Powerful influences, in the shape of the trustees of the Cantey estate, who dominate the mayor, make themselves felt and Calverly is fired. The passionate pilgrim is about to continue his journey when the "soh sister," who has shared an office on the paper with him and who hopes to get a big story out of him, having recognized him for what he is, explains that he has been selected to write the Cantey biography.

At the Cantey home all is not serene, because Esther is dissatisfied with her father's will that gives her invalid sister the bulk of the estate, besides making her responsible for its administration. Esther, therefore, works in collusion with the crooked trustees. Thus the premise is laid for the conventional plot movement. Calverly falls in love with the girl and tries to save her from the aspiring trustees. A "Miracle Man" touch is given the picture when, after embracing Calverly, the invalid girl recovers her power to walk. The trustees, with the aid of Esther, try to foil him. There are a number of incidents which lead up to the climactic scene, in which Miriam learns the truth about Calverly and dismisses her trustees. Thus all the threads are brought together.

Technically, the picture is of a high order of merit. Matt Moore gives an out of the ordinary performance as Henry Calverly, while Ruby de Remer is pretty and effective as Miriam. Julia Swayne Gordon, Mary Newehm, Frankie Mann, Claire Whitney, Van Dyke Brooke and Charles Gerrard also contribute fine performances.

JOHNNY HINES IN TORCHY'S DOUBLE TRIUMPH (EDUCATIONAL)
Here is one of the best "Torczy" comedies of the season. Torczy is sent by his boss to ascertain the cause of a relative's strange actions in following the fad of crystal gazing, our hero turns clever crook catcher and bags two sleek, light-fingered folks, one the professor and teacher of the young woman of the strange ways. Both Torczy and the professor wear like disguises—painters' uniforms. The action takes place largely at a masquerade ball where the thieves lift an amount of boodle, only to find that the one of them has given it all into the keeping of Torczy rather than to the professor, as she believed. The comedy is wholesome, interesting and laugh-provoking with a cast of pretty girls and good-looking men.

New York Notes About Film Folk
By J. B.

Figures left on an Astor table cloth indicate that some tall figuring has been done lately relative to a big crank game. The figures $10,000 seem to stand out strongly.

Harry Cramball and Al Lightman were both at the same hotel in Chicago during the "Big Five" gathering and Harry has been smiling ever since.

Forty thousand dollars is a lot of money, even if it isn't so. What!

Joe Sameth is always good natured and he sure has a heart.

Ira Simmons got off to a good start and if times improve a bit Ira should soon be at the top of the heap.

Arthur Sawyer and Herr Lubin are both agreed that their next production is a humdinger and it will take more than Four Horsemen to head 'em off.

The National Theatres of New Rochelle, of which Walt Hill was vice-president for over three weeks, was recently ordered by the city council to "remove the hole." The ten feet of water where the sub-ceil was to have been is not all that dampened the enthusiasm of the stock buying public. Some of New Rochelle's hard boiled citizens even hint that the water leaked into the stock room.

Jack Sims left his Ford out in the wet during the Bronx Motion Picture Theatre Association banquet a few nights ago and she took a chill. When Jack and Harry Nichols go aboard, after the show, the old self-starter purred and grunted but the pesky little critter just plumb refused to move. When the juice was all used up, Jack and Harry disembarked, put their shoulders to the wheel (so to speak) and pushed the Baby Grand over about two miles of Bronx boulevards looking for a hill. When one was found the boys gave a mighty push and jumped aboard and sped away but the transmitter refused to transmit and the differential refused to function. At the bottom of the hill Jack ran a stick down the smoke stack and found the gas tank was dry as Nichols. The following day the car was salvaged by the owner.

March 4 has been set as the date for the gridiron dinner of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers to be held at the Biltmore hotel.

Universal is bound to get Broadway pedestrians together to tell them of the forthcoming release of "Outside the Law" starring Priscilla Dean. Last week it caused great crowds to gather across the street from 1600 Broadway to watch three bobbed hairied artists, arrayed in approved Greenwich Village fashion, paint "Outside the Law" signs.

Ruby DeRevel has been acclaimed the handsomest woman in the world and handsome is that handsomely does. Ruby is always up and doing and doing well and doing handsomely. The Red Cross and the Herbert Hoover Commission for starving children in Europe realize what this beautiful artist of the screen can do in the way of playing "Lady Bountiful."

Walt Hill is rumored as he puts it he has joined Lewis J. Selznick as general house-wrecker on the publicity type writer.

"Our Mutual Friend" will soon he with us again and Chester Beuckert is introducing the aforesaid friend into American society.

Joe Lee has Broadway plastered up with "Crazy Fair" paper to the extent that it is difficult for any one to find a place to scratch a match. In other words Joe has taken a leaf from the Gas House gang and has "Stuck up Broadway."

John F. Lyons, one of the youngest pioneers in the motion picture industry, surprised his friends on December 18 by taking unto himself a wife. At the same time he resigned his position as manager of the Simplex Projection Rooms at 220 West 42nd street to assume an important position with First National. "Johnny" Lyons, as he is known to his many friends in the film business, has been connected with Joe Miles Enterprises for the last ten years and while one of the youngest men in the business is probably as well known as anyone in the industry. In his new affiliation he will have charge of the distribution of prints of all First National attractions from a well known stage play, directed by Harry Millarde. We hear that Tom is writing a raft of great stories these days.

The Village Sleuth, with Charles Ray.—Good business. Not the snap of most of his pictures, but pleasant.—Detriot Baker, Circle theatre, Ottumwa, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

More Deadly Than the Male, with Ethel Clayton.—Very good picture. Good business.—C. E. Belden, Midway theatre, Mogollon, N. M.—Mining camp patronage.

Rio Grande, with a special cast.—Good for two days here. Went over fine. Book it.—E. E. Galy, Crystal theatre, Wayne, Neb.

Lahoma, an Edgar Lewis production.—Fair picture to good business. Not as good as Rio Grande.—E. E. Galy, Crystal theatre, Wayne, Neb.

Dawn, with a special cast.—This is a wonderful production and will stand an advanced price anywhere. Get it and boost it—Bill Leonard, Mystic theatre, Cedarvale, Kan.—Neighborhood patronage.

Realart

Something Different, with Constance Binney.—Entertaining. Value 100 per cent. Wish I could sell all exhibitors how fine a production this is. Broke house records at 15c and 35c. Book it. Boost it. Raise your admission and Binney will do the rest.—H. A. Fix, Fix’s Theatorium, Shenandoah, Va.—General patronage.

Something Different with Constance Binney.—Constance Binney has again scored. Fine entertainment. Realart has the program this year if they keep up the stride.—Martin W. Opolo, Armory theatre, St. Genevieve, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Soul of Youth, with a special cast.—Won’t make you a lot of money, but run it. It will do you good. Had it on with HIGH AND DIZZY and I’ll say we had a little noise inside.—Dwight Baker, Circle theatre, Ottumwa, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

Food for Scandal, with Wanda Hawley.—Good comedy. Up to Realart standard. Have had only one poor Realart picture, and I have played them all. Miss Hawley pulls well here.—C. Weeks, Garden theatre, La Jolla, Calif.—Family patronage.

Eyes of the Heart, with Mary Miles Minter.—A sob sister picture that is very thin and no credit to a star who has made such lively and good-to-look-at pictures. Only ran it two days.—Dwight Baker, Circle theatre, Ottumwa, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

The New Year Idea, with Alice Brady.—Typical Brady picture. The finished

"DO YOU WANT ME OR MY FLAT?"
product in photoplays. Costumes, cast, photography and direction, and Alice keeps her mouth closed in this one.—O. E. Pierce, Theatorium theatre, Portland, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

Her First Elopement, with Wanda Hawley.—Very pleasing; good comedy touch and worthy of an extra word of advertising. Nice business. Connected star up with Everywoman.—Dwight Baker, Circle theatre, Ottumwa, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Law of the Yukon, with a special cast.—Ran this as a special and my patrons gave me the laugh. Absolutely nothing to it other than the title. It's amusing when you consider Alaska as it was, and as depicted in this production.—F. W. Horrigan, McDonald theatre, Philipsburg, Mont.—Neighborhood patronage.

Sinners, with Alice Brady.—Fell flat here. Star never did go. Folks didn't like her.—E. E. Gailey, Crystal theatre, Wayne, Neb.

Jen Burns, with Mary Miles Minter.—One of this star's best pictures. Bad weather, no crowd.—A. N. Miles, Eminence theatre, Eminence, Ky.—Small town patronage.

You Never Can Tell, with Bebe Daniels.—A pretty little picture. It pleased.—Peter Krauth, Denison theatre, Denison, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Mystery of the Yellow Room, with a special cast.—The title killed it. It's one of the best detective plays that I've ever seen, and the intrigue from start to finish, but they seem to think it's a serial and a total fliver at the box office was the result.—Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, O.—Transient patronage.

Robertson-Cole

The Bottom of the World, with Sir Ernest Shackleton.—Very interesting. Top price 30c.—Giacomo Kros, Crystal theatre, Tombstone, Ariz.—General patronage.

The Grey Wolf's Ghost, with H. B. Warner.—Fair picture. This star does not go here.—Bill Leonard, Mystic theatre, Cedarvale, Kan.—Neighborhood patronage.

Diane of the Green Van, with Alma Rubens.—A good program picture. Something different.—Clarence Langacher, Opera House, New Glarus, Wis.

Universal

39 East, with Constance Binney.—One of the best. Brother exhibitors, you cannot go wrong in putting your John Henry on a Reelart franchise.—Pfeiffer Bros., Opera House, Kenton, O.—Neighborhood patronage.

Out of the Snows, with a special cast.—Fair advertisement and pulled only all such snow pictures pull.—Dwight Baker, Circle theatre, Ottumwa, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

Blind Youth, with a special cast.—A picture you can boost and please most any audience. The society class will rave over.—W. B. Henderson, Dixie theatre, Ripley, Tenn.

Everybody's Sweetheart, with Olive Thomas.—This was the last picture of this star. Played to S. O. N. Extra advertising was done.—Peter Krauth, Denison theatre, Denison, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

Selznick

Broadway and Home, with Eugene O'Brien.—Believe me, those 1921 Selznick pictures are world beaters. And, individually speaking, The Wonderful Chance of Seeing this is even 90 per cent 'better.'—Martin W. Oeplo, Armony theatre, St. Genevieve, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Figurehead, with Eugene O'Brien.—A very good picture that pleased all.—Adolph Kohn, Fastime theatre, Granville, N. Y.—Neighborhood patronage.

Out of the Snows, with a special cast.—Fair advertisement and pulled only all such snow pictures pull.—Dwight Baker, Circle theatre, Ottumwa, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

Blind Youth, with a special cast.—A picture you can boost and please most any audience. The society class will rave over.—W. B. Henderson, Dixie theatre, Ripley, Tenn.

Youthful Folly, with Olive Thomas.—A good picture.—Adolph Kohn, Fastime theatre, Granville, N. Y.—Neighborhood patronage.

The World to Live In, with Alice Brady.—A good program picture.—C. E. Power, Power's theatre, North Branch, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Desperate Hero, with Owen Moore.—Not much to this.—Adolph Kohn, Fastime theatre, Granville, N. Y.—Neighborhood patronage.

United Artists

The Love Flower, a D. W. Griffith production.—A great picture. Everything fine but the title, Posters, photos all good. Way ahead of The Idol Dancer and about as easy to exploit.—Dwight Baker, Circle theatre, Ottumwa, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

Romance, with Doris Keane.—Did not give satisfaction. Too mushy. No comedy. Heard no favorable comments.—G. E. Wendel, Opera House, Smithland, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

Suds, with Mary Pickford.—Business up to expectations only, because I didn't expect much, as this is a disappointing picture to Pickford fans. Not that it isn't well acted.—Dwight Baker, Circle theatre, Ottumwa, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

Universal

Risko Business, with Gladys Walton.—Star is a comer. Poor drawing title, but picture and story good.—P. G. Estee, Fad theatre, Brookings, S. D.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Devil's Passkey, with Eric Von Stroheim.—They do not make them better. Shall repeat. When Universal puts out a special it is usually a real one.—G. W. Yeaton, Ioka theatre, Exeter, N. H.—Neighborhood patronage.

Secret Gift, with a special cast.—This truly was a picture worthy of being called a special, as it will put to shame many of such. Pleased everybody and will give this a return date.—Mrs. J. A. Dostal, Ideal theatre, Omaha, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

Marked Men, with Harry Carey.—Book this picture and boost this star. This picture is better than any Jewel. Good house.—A. San Roman, Crystal theatre, South Superior, Wyo.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Prince of Avenue A, with James Corbett.—Poorest picture that I have run in five years.—Palace theatre, Mound City, Ill.

Once to Every Woman, with Dorothy Phillips.—Another of Universal's real specials.—O. W. Yeaton, Ioka theatre, Exeter, N. H.—Neighborhood patronage.

Under Northern Lights, with a special cast.—Fine North Woods drama that drew big business and pleased all. Full of rapid fire action and played by a capable cast.—J. B. Stine, Gem theatre, Clinton, Ind.—General patronage.

Blind Husbands, with Eric Von Stroheim.—A great offering. Not a bit suggestive and a sure money getter.—Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, O.—Transient patronage.

Blind Husbands, with Eric Von Stroheim.—This is a good picture and full of thrills, but we hardly see where it gets its name. Probably in the lesson to blind husbands. Has some impossibilities, but a good picture nevertheless.—Royal theatre, Lehi, Utah.

Bullet Proof, with Harry Carey.—Harry is himself in this picture, and it suits him to a "T." His later releases, Sundown Slim, etc., are "the bunk" and have killed his drawing power here. Here's hoping they improve.—F. W. Horgan, McDonald theatre, Phillipsburg, Mont.—Neighborhood patronage.

West Is West, with Harry Carey.—Star back in something of old form. Not up to Overland Red and Bullet Proof, however.—P. G. Estee, Fad theatre, Brookings, S. D.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Right to Happiness, with Dorothy Phillips.—You don't have to look out of sight when your patrons emerge from your theatre after seeing this one. Big and clean.—Fahrney & Elson, Electric theatre, Curtis, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

Specials

Sitting On the World (D. M. Schwab), with David Butler.—Great. If Butler keeps up this pace he will be in the front rank inside of a year. Story simple, but splendidly handled.—C. Welstead, Garden theatre, LaJolla, Cal.—Family patronage.

The Soul of Rafael (Equity), with Clara Kimball Young.—This picture seemed good enough to satisfy, but Clara Kimball Young is not the drawing card that she was a few years ago.—Pfeiffer Bros., Opera House, Kenton. O.—Neighborhood patronage.

Honeymoon Ranch (Bert Lubin), with a special cast.—Good Lubin with a lot of good comedy in it. Pleasing all the way.—E. A. Baradel, Palace theatre, McGehee, Ark.—Small town patronage.

Staking His Life (W. H. Productions), with William S. Hart.—While this one is old, it's a splendid picture.—C. Hales, Rivoli theatre, Alton, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Serials

Fantomas (Fox), with a special cast.—On second episode and going big. The Italians fall for this one and they are packing the house at every episode. Plenty of action and thrills.—D. Bossie, Luna theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Silent Avenger, with William Duncan, and Hidden Dangers, with Joe Ryan (Vitagraph).—I ran the two serials together and find that they draw good. However, The Silent Avenger is much the better of the two. They should keep Joe Ryan in Westerns, as he shines there.—H. W. Jeffries, Majestic theatre, Huntington, Ark.—Neighborhood patronage.

Ruth of the Rockies (Pathé), with Ruth Roland.—Finished this to good business all through the entire fifteen episodes.—E. E. Galley, Crystal theatre, Wayne, Neb.

The Lost City (Warner Bros.), with Juanita Hansen.—This is a picture that is different from most serials. It has too much of the same thing about the middle of it, but holds the interest of the crowd throughout. Made money.—Clay C. Caperton, Harwood theatre, Har-

From Wid's Review of

"BLACK BEAUTY"

"Black Beauty" characterized by thrills and extravagant production.

"The story of 'Black Beauty' is so famous in every part of the country that the title alone will be sufficient to draw a crowd."

"It is a clean, wholesome picture, a fact which you can make an especial appeal to women and children. The book is so well known that there will naturally be curiosity to see it visualized."

"The success of the picture with most audiences is going to depend on its 'human' theme, for the story of the horse holds interest only in those scenes involving fast action. Among the latter are some very good shots of a fox hunt, and a thrilling horse race at the finish which has been admirably done and will be apt to raise them off their seats."

From the New York Sunday Telegraph Review of

"BLACK BEAUTY"

"It is a picture that shines out like a good deed in a naughty world."

"The picture is just about perfect in its details."

"The picture is a high tribute to the artistic ability and the patience of its director, David Smith."

"As for 'Black Beauty' himself, Man O' War could not have played the role with more finesse."

Remarks

The Veiled Mystery (Vitagraph), with Antonio Moreno.—Playing third episode and going so far. Looks like it might be a very good serial to the end. — W. B. Henderson, Dixie theatre, Ripley, Tenn.—Small town patronage.

Bride 13 (Fox), with a special cast.—Rather disappointed. Too many overdrawn impossibilities. Too many suggestive and gruesome scenes for the little folks. All right for a hard shell adult. — Auditorium theatre, Carleton, Neb.—Small town patronage.

The Lost City (Warner Bros.), with Juanita Hansen.—I have played the fifteenth episode. They are all good. The best bet out.—B. Wilcox, Opera House, Nykton, N. D.

Ruth of the Rockies (Pathé), with Ruth Roland.—Plenty of action and patricious pleased, but business only fair. Local conditions bad. Mines closed and money close.—A. H. Thost, Gem theatre, Fredricktown, Mo.—Neighborhoood patronage.

Bride 13 (Fox), with a special cast.—Good serial with plenty of action, but the plot is most unreasonable. People lose interest.—W. B. Henderson, Dixie theatre, Ripley, Tenn.—Small town patronage.

The Lost City (Warner Bros.), with Juanita Hansen.—First episode good.—Auditorium theatre, Carleton, Neb.—Small town patronage.

The King of the Circus (Universal), with Eddie Polo.—A real honest to goodness serial. One that packs them in. Just book it. It's that something different that we all are looking for. Sixth episode and going big.—Ed. L. Wegener, Lyric theatre, Valley Junction, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Dragon's Net (Universal), with Marie Walcamp.—On the sixth episode and each one worse than the other. Lake off this one. Positively the worst yet.—Martin W. Operlo, Armory theatre, St. Genevieve, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Vanishing Dagger (Universal), with Eddie Polo.—On the sixteenth episode. Business dropping off. Lots of action, but Polo gets the worst end of it. Eighteen episodes too long for a serial.—W. B. Henderson, Dixie theatre, Ripley, Tenn.—Small town patronage.

The Dragon's Net (Universal), with Marie Walcamp.—The poorest serial ever put out by Universal. Don't book it if they want to give it to you free. All there is to it is a lot of Chinamen chasing each other around a stump. They'll back again next week.—Ed. L. Wegener, Lyric theatre, Valley Junction, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Short Subjects

Four Times Foiled (Educational), with a special cast.—An excellent offering that pleased. It's getting monotonous to send in reports on Educational comedies. There are all good of them. Knocks out.—Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, O.—Transient patronage.

Father's Close Shave (Christie-Pathé), with Johnny Ray and June Smith. Maggie is extra fine, while Jiggs runs a close second. Brother exhibitor you can't go wrong on any of the "Bringing Up Father" comedies if you want good clean comedy.—H. W. Jeffries, Majestic theatre, Huntington, Ark.—Neighborhood patronage.

PARK YOUR CAR (Pathé), with Smub Pollard.—One of the best one-reel comedies we've ever run. Concentrate on the title. Put a safety zone out in front of your theatre.—"Park Your Car—Here—Now!" It will attract attention. First time we tried to exploit a single-reeler. Went over fine.—Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, O.—Transient patronage.

Fired Again (Warner Bros.), with Al. St. John.—Lay off.—E. E. Gailey, Crystal theatre, Wayne, Neb.—Vacant.

Convict No. 13 (Metro), with Buster Keaton.—Not as good as One Week, but far better than the average comedy at that.—G. W. Yeaton, Ioka theatre, Exeter, N. H.—Neighborhood patronage.

Seven Bald Pates (Educational), with a special cast.—Of late, contrary to all our expectations, Christie comedies appear to be the poorest of the four Educational comedy brands. For real comedy and clean humor Mermaid, Torchy and Chester have it all over Christie. Here's hoping that before long Christie will realize that it takes more than bathing girls to make two-reel comedies.—Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, O.—Transient patronage.

Bumping Into Broadway (Pathé), with Harold Lloyd.—This is Lloyd's worst, but Haunted Spooks took the slack out of the croucher's waistlines. The rest of his are fine.—Clyde C. Caperton, Harwood theatre, Harwood, Tex.— Neighborhood patronage.

Old Faithful (Prizma)—The most truly educational scene I have ever seen. Many people remarked upon its beauty and value.—Jean Lightner, Regent theatre, Alamada, Cal.

Vod-A-Vil Movies (Spanuth), with a special cast.—Best novelty single-reel we ever had. Generally acts of high class vaudeville pictured.—P. G. Estee, Fad theatre, Brookings, S. D.—Neighborhood patronage.

One Week (Metro), with Buster Keaton.—The best two-reel comedy on the market today.—G. W. Yeaton, Ioka theatre, Exeter, N. H.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Scarecrow (Metro), with Buster Keaton.—This Keaton is everything that his sponsors claimed him to be and The Scarecrow is one of the funnier comedies of all times. This young man has earned for himself a place on any program and more than comes up with all expectations.—Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, O.—Transient patronage.
With the Procession in Los Angeles

By Harry Hammond Beall

Brunton Studios Hum

There may be deserted villages among the ruins of filmland, but the Brunton studio isn’t among them. Nine companies are at work there now and two more are scheduled for the near future. Larry Semon has been coming West and locating in Los Angeles. Larry recently acted as stage director and assembled the talent of many motion picture stars for the big benefit show being held by the Vitagraph organization.

There’s only one thing more epidemic than measles, and that’s golf, judging by the Christie studios these days. The Christies have gone the others one better by installing their own golf links, a four-hole practice course, on their fifteen acres of land at Sunset and Bronson Avenues, Hollywood. Between cranking of cameras one can any day see Al, Christie, Charles Christie, T. Roy Barnes, Scott Darling, Scott Sidney, Fred Porter, Dorothy Devore and many others playing up the fertile pasture land with mashe shots.

As San Juan Capistrano, Fred Cason provides theatre recreation. At the present, the shows are being held in an old church which has been converted into a theatre, but in the very near future, Mr. Cason hopes to break ground for a new building devoted entirely to motion pictures.

Calipatria has a beautiful new bungalow motion picture house called the Poppy theatre, owned and managed by W. T. Cunningham, where the latest productions are shown four times per week.

A Little theatre has just been completed at Vidor Village. It seats 100 persons and will be used for formal entertainments and private previews of motion pictures.

The village theatre has its own heating and ventilating system, and its architectural and interior decorations and appointments parallel a rustic church. Pews instead of chairs are a feature, and a reed organ has been installed.

KATHERINE NEWLIN BURT, famous novelist, who recently signed a contract to write original photoplays for Goldwyn, has arrived at the Culver City studios to spend several weeks in the study of motion picture technique and in working out her first story written directly for the screen.

OLIVER MOROSCO is to make a flying trip to New York, leaving here the 15 inst. He will stay in the eastern metropolis just two days. He has wired Franklin Underwood, his New York manager, to have everything in readiness for his arrival, so that he may transact the necessary business as quickly as possible.

FRANK MAYO, Universal star, is in bed as a result of serious injury received while making a scene for "Colorado," his latest picture. Mayo was struck by a falling timber and all the nerves of his scalp paralyzed. After three days under a doctor’s care, he returned to finish the few scenes in the picture and is back in bed again where the doctor is requiring him to remain for a week at least.

TOD BROWNING says that all the wit in the world is not copyrighted by writers and comedians. He was dining in town the other night. "Bring me a small black," he said to the waiter. "Wouldn’t you prefer a small blond, mistress?" came back the comestie carrier.

The affairs of the new Mission theatre are now in the hands of HARRY DAVID, manager, and John D. Howard, publicity representative. Mr. Howard just came down from San Francisco.

LOUIS B. MAYER tendered Nell Shipman an honorary luncheon last week. Among those present were Bert Van Tuyle, Joe Walker, Virginia Norden. C. R. McCray.

Stages Sales Drive
Campaign Marks the Tenth Anniversary of Hague’s Connection with Firm

As a tribute to Clair Hague, general manager of the Canadian-Universal Film Company, Ltd., the Canadian arm of the Universal Company, employees in the half a dozen branch offices are staging an intensive sales drive. This period is called Hague’s anniversary and is in honor of his completion of ten years of service with Universal.

The Hague anniversary drive was inaugurated at a dinner given recently in the office of Edward H. Hart, Toronto, at which Hague was the honor guest. Herman Stern, recently appointed district sales manager for Canada, was the principal speaker.

Theatres Furnish Acts
By courtesy of J. Shea, Jules Bernstein and N. K. Miller, entertainment was supplied by artists from Shea’s, Loew’s and Pantages’ theatres.

“I am going to concentrate my efforts to bring about an even closer relationship between Universal exchanges and exhibitors,” Stern announced. “As the head of the Pittsburgh branch, I found that personal relationship and mutual confidence based upon 100 per cent service were great factors in building up Universal’s prestige.”

Started As Booker
Hague joined Universal in 1911 as a booker. Three years later he was made manager of the Canadian Universal Film Company. Six months later he was appointed general manager for Eastern and Western Canada.

Among the special representatives in Canada are P. C. Taylor for West Ontario, J. A. Kirkpatrick for East Ontario, Harry Law for Toronto and L. D. Brody, representative at large, all with headquarters in Toronto.

Eve Unsell Has Resigned
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, Jan. 18—Eve Unsell has resigned her position as staff writer for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to give her attention to Eve Unsell Photoplay Staff, Inc., which was formed to provide scenario service. Miss Unsell is president; E. J. Clode, Jr., vice-president, and Lester Blank, secretary.
Equipment Progress

Every exhibitor who contemplates the remodeling of his theatre or the erection of a new one, should make it his business to carefully investigate what the equipment industry has to offer, in the way of new and improved equipment.

Individualism is a strong asset in showmanship and is just as fully expressed in the furnishings and lay-out generally of the theatre as it is in the exploitation of a picture.

There are any number of cases of this individualism of expression among the exhibitors of this country. The sumptuous, costly homes for the cinema already in operation and under construction but typify the individualism of the exhibitor back of the project.

And the equipment industry makes possible this reflection of the personality and ideals of the exhibitor in his theatre.

* * *

There is now on the market a revolving theatre chair which permits, with less disturbance to the audience, access and exit. It resembles in principle the chair used in railroad chair cars. The long-legged and "pet corn" motion picture fans might find it a particular boon while the public in general, no doubt, would derive considerable comfort.

* * *

Thought given to equipment is not wasted time. The public demands comfort with its entertainment.

Cinema Camera Now Adaptable for Theatre Use

Excessive Cost and Difficulty of Operation Have Been Eliminated in Last Few Years

By CHARLES BASS

It is only in recent years that the motion picture camera has been adaptable for general and theatre use. There were many objections because of the following obstacles: The excessive cost of apparatus; the difficulty of operating by the average amateur, and the difficulty of obtaining developing and printing at prices within reach.

This has all been eliminated in the past five years by the wonderful strides in cinematograph camera construction and the numerous laboratories for the developing and printing of film.

The modern motion picture camera is so constructed that anyone with a fair knowledge of photography can positively produce pictures which may be shown in a theatre. They will be steady and free from flicker.

Operation of Camera

The operation of a motion picture camera as made today simply consists of the following:

Threading the film similar in every way to threading a projector with the sensitive side of the film facing the lens. After the camera is threaded, turn the crank once or twice to test the take-up.

Close the door of the camera and by means of a reflecting focusing device on the average camera, exact focus of the subject may be obtained.

The next operation is to center the camera on the subject by means of the tilting and panoramic tripod, so that the picture will be even in the frame.

Crank the camera with two uniform turns a second with an even regular crank, so that the picture will not jump on the screen. Crank from elbow, holding the elbow on a level with the crank.

Obtain Correct Exposure

The next step is to obtain the correct exposure. Most cameras in use today have adjustable shutters for exposure. The average speed of a shutter when not adjustable is from 1/30 to 1/45 of a second. This speed is equivalent to the shutter speed of a box Brownie, or the shutter speed of a kodak at 1/50 of a second. The shutter may be adjusted for higher speeds by simply closing down one leaf. The occasions when this should be done are rare. For instance, in photographing fast moving objects, the shutter should be closed down to a high speed so that motion is stopped and a clean cut exposure obtained.

Outside subject entirely in open, diaphragm opening on the lens stop 11, shutter full opening. Subject in the shade of a building or on a shady side of the street or under trees, stop F:6:3. Dull day, cloudy, stop F:6:3 for subjects in open. Stop F:5:6 for subjects in shade. Late in the afternoon or in very dark places, stop F:3:5.

Finishing Is Simple

Thus it is plainly seen that with a little common sense pictures may be produced by anyone, providing the camera is of standard construction and will function properly.

The question of finishing the film is very simple. Standard laboratories are located in all cities of any size. The writer will be pleased to inform anyone the nearest laboratory to his home town. The cost of developing film today is 5c per foot. Cost of making the print is 6c per foot. Titles from 8c to 15c per foot. Cost of negative film is 4½c per foot. Thus, the total cost of the film is 15½c per foot.

The only problem for the theatre is "what to take." The point of first importance is to make the local film pay.

This is a very easy matter regardless of the interest standard feature film holds. A strip of film with local interest will always draw a crowd. Do not overlook this important factor. Any event of interest in your vicinity is a proper subject for a local film. To make it pay, simply attach 100 or 200 feet of advertising film of the local merchants, and grant patrons more than pays for itself with the added advantage of helping to fill your theatre. A charge of 50 cents to $1 per foot is always made for local advertising.

Style of Camera Needed

As for the camera, a 200-foot DeFranne topical camera is ideally suited for local work. Where a camera is required for a larger capacity, I recommend the 400-foot DeFranne field and studio model, which incorporates all features, which permits the making of comedies, playlets and all local films.

For anyone desiring a complete high grade instrument, I recommend the Universal camera which may be had in regular or dissolving shutter models.

It is the firm conviction of the writer from the results obtained in supplying theatres all over the United States with cameras, that every motion picture theatre should own a camera and tripod. It is not an expense, it is an investment paying big dividends.

WHY MURTAGH MOVES FEET

Patrons of Grauman’s Million Dollar Theatre Learn Pedals Control Half

Giant Wurlitzer

The query of theatre-goers at Grauman’s theatre, Los Angeles: “Why is Mr. Murtagh always moving his feet back and forth?” was explained this week with the information that half of the giant Wurlitzer which Mr. Murtagh presides over is controlled by foot pedals.

The likeness above is that of Henry B. Murtagh, the wizard of the Wurlitzer, as he is known, sitting at the console of the giant instrument at Grauman’s Million Dollar theatre. It is estimated by officials of the playhouse that but one out of every 1,000 people realize that 50 per cent of the organ is made up of wonderful pedals which have to be worked by the organist’s feet.

It is these foot pedals that release the voluminous bass notes and hundreds of orchestral and picture effects. The photograph shows Mr. Murtagh’s left foot resting on B flat and his right pressing down D natural. The long pedals of the pedals are like the keys on a piano in scope, the short black pedals corresponding to sharps and flats.

Exhibitors’ LENS TRIAL

Exhibitors’ Supply Company in Unique Campaign to Market Ken-o-lite Lens

The Exhibitors’ Supply Company a few months ago contracted to distribute in their Middle West territory a new three-combination lens known as the Ken-o-lite lens. For the past few months they have been putting out the lenses on a ten-day trial, with excellent results.

The policy of a ten-day trial was decided upon because of the confidence the Exhibitors’ Supply Company has that the lens will do what is claimed for it.

Has Three Lenses

The three-combination lens is one that has three sets of lenses in the tube, whereas the ordinary lens has only two. This extra set of lenses, it is claimed, catches all the light immediately after it passes through the film, eliminating all possibility of lost rays.

When the Ken-o-lite was first manufactured an extensive and exhaustive test was made by Prof. Weinreich of Columbia University, New York, in comparison with the usual two-combination lens. The results shown by the test were exceptional. An average of 32.8 per cent increase in illumination on the screen and a picture 28 per cent more clearly defined, were the results reported by Prof. Weinreich. The middle of the screen was increased 12.5 per cent, half way out of center, 32.8 per cent, and at the corners 63 per cent, giving an average increase of 32.8 per cent.

Increased Illumination

Wherever the Ken-o-lite has been put in, this tremendous increase in illumination was at once evident.

The ten-day trial policy of the Exhibitors’ Supply Company on this article which better motion picture projection, has resulted in many hundreds of Ken-o-lite lenses being placed, it is said.

ORCHESTRAL ORGAN SPHERE

Executive of American Photo Players Company Urges Combination With Symphony Orchestra

Full credit to orchestras of symphonic proportions for the support they have rendered to the impetus of the motion picture industry, is given by the American Photo Player Company. At the same time an official of that concern points out the possibilities in the cooperation of this form of music with the orchestral pipe organ.

“We do not wish to ignore the fact of the wonderful support that orchestras of symphonic proportions have rendered to the impetus of the motion picture industry," said an executive of the concern, “and we are alive to the possibilities of both forms of music working in harmony with each other.

“This particular phase of organ music has not been given the opportunity of demonstration in other parts of the country that it has in the west and we are confident that with greater understanding its popularity will increase.”

With the formation of the Bushmint company, this week, Chicago has the distinction of being the first city in the world where there is a synchronized music exchange, a place where the theatre man can get complete musical scores for his pictures—the same as he can buy films, or posters, or get other talent to "put the picture over." The music exchange was started to handle the sales campaign which the Synchronized Scenario Music Company has just inaugurated.

The Bushmint company will be managed by Paul Bush, well-known exchange and film man, and will be located at 207

PORTABLE PROJECTORS
Department of Agriculture Uses Theme for Disseminating Information to Farmers

WASHINGTON, D. C.—A great and ever-increasing use of motion picture films is being made by the Department of Agriculture for disseminating throughout the country the results of investigations made by its experts. New and better ways of doing things, new things to do, new machinery for use of the farmer and many other matters are "discussed" by this means. Within the past four months alone the demand for films has doubled, according to I. W. Perkins, assistant in charge of the department's motion picture activities, and at the present time the requests for loans of the pictures is greater than the supply.

Motion pictures are going to the farmer principally through the portable projector—the small machine, about the size of a suit case, that can be transported from place to place and hooked on to a convenient lamp socket. Should there be no lamp socket—as is the case in most rural communities—portable generators that can be operated on automobile engines or carried along in an automobile are used. In two or three states trucks have been equipped with projectors, films and a screen and are sent through territory which has been placarded in advance. In good weather the show is given on the truck; in bad weather, wires are run into a convenient building and the show given under cover.

BASS ON EASTERN TRIP
Charles Bass, president of the Bass
Camera Company, will leave Chicago
January 25 on a business trip to New York. It is also his intention upon concluding his business in that city to visit
New Orleans and some of the other larger cities in the South.

Chicago Exchanges Take New Quarters Associated Producers and Fox Now Located in South Wabash

Fox Film Corporation and Associated Producers have moved into their new offices in South Wabash, Chicago. Fox occupies the building at 910, while the Associated Producers is in a new six-story building at 900 South Wabash.

Robertson-Cole Suggests Stunts for Exploitation

One of the exploitation plans outlined by the Robertson-Cole press book for the new Sessue Hayakawa feature, "The First Born," consists in a series of stunts to be carried out by all first-born children up to the age of 5 years, the parents of whom will be interested in the stunt for their own children. Another exploitation plan for the Robertson-Cole press book consists in a series of stunts to be performed in toy balloon races.

Harry Rice Goes East

Harry Rice will leave soon for New York to make arrangements for an eastern office for the Independent Film Association. He will also be in charge of the west coast and Rice is managing the Chicago office.

Arrange Special Showing

A special preview of the Universal special feature "Outside the Law" will be held at Barbee's theater, Monroe street, on Thursday, January 20. The picture is being 24-sheeted throughout the city.
Looks like Paul Bush, erstwhile manager for the Chicago office of the Masterpiece exchange, received a real gift in the of Christmas stocking when he picked that Illinois and Indiana franchise of the S. S. Music Company. From present indications, it will be but a brief spell until every exhibitor in this territory will give his patrons musical pleasures. THAT'S MUSIC. We refuse to spill any further, see Paul and get in on the ground floor.

* The general talk about the local exchanges the past few days is the regret at losing the genial presence of that prince of good chaps, "Daddy" Hines, from our midst. Yes, sir, "Daddy" of South Bend is about to give the film business his swan song. And with the ol' dogs goes the best wishes from us all. C'mon "Daddy," let's hear from an avalanche in swbile.

Special representative Lee of the Gau-mont Company was a busy man during the weekend. He made the various independent exchanges of Chicago, departing for Minneapolis enroute for New York.

With that terrible walloping California University slipped the Ohio Champs on New Year's day, "Hank" Peters was told the winning football warriors were trained on California's turf, giving "Hank" an alibi to change the vegetation on his Pas Robles fifty-acre tract. Henceforth about ten acres will be devoted to prunes which should give the West-Ward a better opportunity to send a fighting machine out West that can even the score. Will the daily Maroon or Illini please note?

George West has been paying Chi quite an extended visit and with all arrangements now completed on the handling of the Billy West comedies through the Pioneer exchange looks like George will pack the grip for sunny California.

Couple of Chicago Motor club mechanics were busy paging Johnny Meniskow last week but with no luck so we offered our services to the good cause. In the future when taking that Bulgarain roadster (born in Detroit) for a stroll, see that the tank is filled with GAS. Even mechanical toys must have something besides conversation to propel them.

That D. W. Griffin masterpiece, "Way Down East," is sure turning 'em away at the Woods theatre, why even Cress Smith had to buy his own ducats to view this winner.

Just a word or two to the exhibitors about Chicago and environs. We have been informed that Doug Miller, younger brother of Harry Miller, manager of the Logan Square theatre, has been appointed by the Star and Stripe, the national newspaper for the ex-servicemen, to take charge of the referendum drive that is now being put over for the ex-buddy to determine the public's attitude with regard to the soldier's bonus now pending before both Houses. This young veteran will get to you all in time to pitch in boys and give the lad and his cause all the aid you can.

Eddie Silverman, manager for the local Select exchange, after a heated and long drawn out conference with the City Council has at last succeeded in being granted permission to have the many charming feminine members of his organization "park" their galoshes over in Grant Park behind the Art Institute with the rest of the runabouts. Again all's well in this busiest of local exchanges.

Simeon B. Greer, associate member of Russell, Greer and Russell, producers of the Fritzie Ridgeway westerns and Lester Cunce features, left for the California studio land Jan. 12 for an extended visit. Watch yer step Si.

Dr. A. Schlapik, looking more like a cinnamon bear is his big overcoat than an exhibitor, "mushed" into Chicago from Iron River, Mich., last Friday. He called on L. Leserman, at Universal, and at other exchanges. He conducts two theatres in the upper Michigan region and reports business very good up among the snow drifts.

The Randolph theatre has the distinction of being the first theatre in the world to show "The Kid." Charlie Chaplin's latest comedy, and the firm of Jones, Linick & Schaefer is all "hyped" up accordingly.

Harry M. Owens, sales promotion representative of J. Parker Read, Jr., who has been on the road for eleven weeks visiting W. W. Hodkinson, exchange managers, for the purpose of tying up a sales campaign with the J. Parker Read, Jr., scenario contest, has returned to the coast.

As a result of his trip more than fifty newspapers in the larger cities of the United States and Canada are now running the contest, which is creating widespread interest in Louise Glauin.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—Steel City Amusement Company, which recently purchased the Kathleen Wallace property in Center Avenue near Pennsylvania Avenue in the spring will erect a theatre to cost approximately $200,000.

BLUEFIELD, W. VA.—L. Kaufman, prominent local real estate owner, has acquired plans for a new modern motion picture theatre to occupy the space west of the Commercial Hotel lobby in Princeton avenue.

The seating capacity will be approximately 800. Sol Kaufman, son of the owner, and Robert Prince will have charge of the operation and management of the house.

Harry Fraser With Baumer

From Wid's Review of

"BLACK BEAUTY"

"Black Beauty' characterized by thrills and extravagant production."

"The story of 'Black Beauty' is so famous in every part of the country that the title alone will be sufficient to draw a crowd."

"It is a clean, wholesome picture, a fact which you can make an especial appeal to women and children. The book is so well known that there will naturally be curiosity to see it visualized."

"The success of the picture with most audiences is going to depend on its human theme, for the story of the horse holds interest only in those scenes involving fast action. Among the latter are some very good shots of a fox hunt, and a thrilling horse race at the finish which has been admirably done and will be apt to raise them off their seats."

From the New York Sunday Telegram Review of

"BLACK BEAUTY"

"It is a picture that shines out like a good deed in a naughty world."

"The picture is just about perfect in its details."

"The picture is a high tribute to the artistic ability and the patience of its director, David Smith."

"As for 'Black Beauty' himself, Man O' War could not have played the role with more finesse."

In all the motion picture theatres of the Nation where big pictures and good pictures are being shown—there you find patrons heavy and exhibitor profits assured.

In every city where the amusement business has been "off" it has been in the $2.00 or $3.00 theatres, and not in the motion picture theatres. Out of 2,000 Associated Producers' exhibitor-customers we have not heard twenty complaints of poor business.

Universal Serials

Universal has learned that it's the easiest thing in the world to make serials that will raise your roof—when you know how. Universal knows how, because Universal has been making successful serials for some few years. And one of Universal's big lessons has been that "ruff stuff" is not necessary to serial success. Only amateurs at serial-making drag into a serial the artificial "ruff stuff" they mistake for action; only fly-by-night producers can afford to "jazz up" their serials with junk. Universal knows better. Universal knows that to be successful a serial needs, besides many other things, irresistible suspense, legitimate and plausible mystery, and swift, meaningful action. That's why you can be sure that any Universal serial will raise your roof.

"THE SAGE HEN"

With Gladys Brockwell, Lillian Rich and Wallace MacDonald
From the novel by Harry Solter Personally Directed by Edgar Lewis

Pathe Distributors
The Sage Hen!

A woman pure in heart and clean of life, the best of mothers, yet called "The Sage Hen," meaning, in the lingo of the West, a strange woman of bad character!

What greater wrong could be done to a good woman? Here is a picture of human beings, some good, some bad, built around the frontier life of the yesterdays that are gone. It has love, hate, fighting, sacrifice, noble deeds and foul wrong. It is a picture for your audiences.

“Stop! In the sight of God I am another man’s wife!”
A wondrously beautiful girl pledged to marry a man she can never love. The same beautiful girl, on a sinking ship and with an hour to live, touches the lips of the man she really loves—and they face death together.

The girl is rescued. The lover remains on the raft. A battleship blows up the drifting derelict. Was Nance Abbott a murderess? At the steps of the chancel, with a thousand wedding guests assembled, the girl revolts; fights before a multitude the battle with her conscience—Spectacular and sensational episode and incident. A thrilling rescue enacted by the battleship "Minneapolis" and its entire crew. The challenging and beautiful Court of Neptune.

A production of tremendous scope and dimension. A story of the bitter and the sweet from the cup of life. Personally produced and its smashing big scenes personally directed by Thomas H. Ince, who pronounces it to be bigger than his own great picture, "Civilization."
I have taken five months to produce for the exhibitors of America "Lying Lips," which I announce to you as one of the big, enduring pictures of screen history. Months of my personal effort, supplementing the work of the ablest organization in motion picture production has resulted in a production that will bring millions of dollars into the theatre box-offices of the nation.—THOMAS H. INCE.

This tremendous production is remarkably acted by an all-star cast featuring

Dear Mr. Johnston:

We are certainly pleased to state that the receipts of the Gifts Theatre for last week, which played Allan Dwan's "THE FORBIDDEN THING", were in excess of any amount previously taken in since the opening of the Gifts Theatre, this being our banner week.

Allan Dwan has undoubtedly made a master-piece, and the drawing power of same is unquestioned, and we feel that you are justly entitled to the above information.

We have demonstrated to our own satisfaction that the public demands big productions, and with more productions like "THE FORBIDDEN THING", we feel that the future of Associated Producers is assured.

Yours very truly,

Billy and Sybil were married happily. Had been for six years. Then Vera came back. An old sweetheart of Billy's. Despite her marriage and subsequent widowhood she had never quite forgotten him. Billy didn't want to flirt. Vera did. So you can guess the answer. But the trouble really began when Billy lied to his wife. The picture's a riot of laughter from start to finish. A splendid cast. You Can’t Take Her From Me!

One humiliation after another had she endured at a worthless husband’s hands. Then came revolt—rebellion against his bestial treatment of her and of their child. And he learned to his sorrow that it is better to face an enraged tigress than a mother aroused. It’s a smashing story builded by a master craftsman. Offer it to your patrons confident that it will answer their every demand for screen entertainment.

A Really "Better" Picture

It would be interesting to note the confusion and dismay which would spread over an audience made up entirely of reformers and censorship enthusiasts if they were to see projected upon the screen "The Highest Law," a new Selznick production, in which Ralph Ince figures both as director and star character. I saw it during the present week, and when it had finished I felt much as a man feels who has just enjoyed a holiday in the open air. I was refreshed.

The primary purpose of the moving picture is to recreate the individual by taking him for the time away from himself and the cares of the day and carry him into storyland so that he, being absorbed by the play, will derive the normal benefits of rest and change. When a picture does this it attains, in my opinion, the highest place, the natural place in its own wonderful domain.

"The Highest Law" is a simple, appealing story from the life of Abraham Lincoln, so linked with the present day that it can neither be called new nor old. It is charmingly contrived, skilfully directed and very well acted. Mr. Ince, in his interpretation of Lincoln, gives a noble characterization in which none save the captious could find a flaw. He lives Lincoln, and through the character impresses the spectator into absolute forgetfulness of self and surroundings.

It is not my purpose to tell you the story. The screen tells it so much better. But it is my purpose to advise you that this production is a great credit to the industry, and to assure you that your patrons will find in it a human type of satisfying entertainment that will bring them back to your theatre for more of the same thing.

"The Highest Law" is in all respects a great success as a production, and I commend it to your especial attention.

"The Ranger and the Law" (Capital Film Company, Inc.)

Here we have a Western with a plausible story, good acting and fast and furious action; enough action in fact to be the basis for a serial in fifteen episodes, and action is what the lovers of Westerns want.

Lester Cuneo in the role of Dick Dawson, a rich man's son, who prefers the life of the great outdoors to a prosaic business career and luxury backed by his parent's millions, gets a job as a forest ranger and reports for duty at a mountain camp located in a district infested by whisky runners.

The story is one constant whirl of vigorous action and thrilling incidents until having subdued the whisky smuggling gang, he is shown proposing marriage to the little mountain girl in the closing fadeout.

Cuneo in this picture proves his right to be classed as one of the leading portrayers of western roles and the fights he indulges in during the unfolding of the plot are some of the most spectacular and realistic seen on the screen and his portrayal of the ranger throughout is marked by good touches of comedy as well as strength in serious situations.

Francelia Billington, as Ann Hobbs, the daughter of the leader of the whisky runners, is a charming player, and pretty and does some very good acting. The other characters are well drawn.

This is an excellent western which we predict should appeal strongly to the admirers of this class of entertainments; 5 reels. — L.H. Mason.

Charles Chaplin
in "THE KID"
Six Reels of Joy
Written and directed by Charles Chaplin

"Chaplin in ‘The Kid’ opened to greatest business in history of Randolph theatre. Showing as remarkable as day was coldest of winter and wind was a gale made walking almost impossible. Chaplin and the kid hugely enjoyed. Press went wild with praise. It's his best picture."

Aaron J. Jones of Jones, Linick & Schley wires:

Chicago Newspapers Give Highest Praise Ever Accorded Any Picture

WORLD'S GREATEST ARTIST

"'The Kid' settles once and for all the question as to who is the greatest theatrical artist in the world. Chaplin does some of the finest, most delicately shaded acting you ever saw anywhere, and for every slapstick furore in it, there is a classic, exquisite scene. His actions are riotous, convulsive, irresistible. The gentlest grandmother will bust a midriff. He's the best Hamlet alive today. Jackie Coogan is the best child actor you ever saw. Women wept just to see him. The Kid is two fisted. It's right glove is packed with the pearls of tears, its left with the horse-shoe of laughter. The picture is perfection. Six reels that seem like one; six reels that are funnier than the work of any other human being; six reels that are sadder and simpler than anything in pictures; six reels that will atone for anything the movies have ever done."

—Chicago Herald and Examiner.

SIX REELS TOO SHORT

"In a class all by himself is Charles Chaplin. Nothing can dim his charm. There are loads of laughs in 'The Kid' and some tears too. More real acting than you have ever seen in a Chaplin picture before. 'The Kid' is six reels long, which is too short."

—Chicago Daily Tribune.

ALL PRAISE INADEQUATE

"Totally unlike any other comedy ever filmed, Chaplin proves himself not only a great comedian, but an astute show-man. I do not know another comedian who could combine tears and smiles and real slapstick. If a reviewer might recall all the laudatory terms ever bestowed and combine them here, adequate comment might be made."

—Chicago Daily Journal.

BEST AND MOST ORIGINAL

"'The Kid' is Chaplin's best and most novel film. See for yourself if he doesn't come back in great shape with the best and most original thing he has yet contributed to the screen."

—Chicago American.

WILL PLEASE ALL CLASSES

"'The Kid' is a masterpiece and will please all classes. Those who claim Chaplin is the world's greatest actor either in silent or spoken drama, now have an exhibit for their argument. There is a thrill about watching his masterly work. From the first click the action is on. It is cinema art clear through. As an artist Chaplin is more consequential in extent of audience than any speaking, singing, writing or painting artist today."

—Chicago Daily News.

A SUPER COMEDY

"Everyone is due to be pleased. A real story, a mixture of tears and laughter. It is a super-comedy with touches of exquisite feeling."

"A Mystery Drama of Intense Interest"

Exhibitors' Trade Review

What the Critics Say:

ACTING IS FAULTLESS

"A very entertaining melodrama with an intensely interesting story well told throughout, with suspense well sustained. The characterization of the two brothers is well drawn and mistaken identity well carries out the most wholesome story. An air of mystery that keeps the interest of the audience at fever heat until the very end prevails. "The appeal of the lovers, seemingly hopelessly parted, is great and one of the outstanding features of this human interest production.

"Sylvia Breamer is seen in one of the most interesting characters allotted her for screen presentation. The work of the cast in support of Miss Breamer is faultless.

"Director Franklin has furnished screen enthusiasts with an intensely interesting romantic mystery melodrama. Splendid photography is maintained throughout. The Orient scenes lend variety to this wholesome picture and the unusually gorgeous exterior settings are particularly picturesque." — Exhibitor's Trade Review.

A FASCINATING TALE

IT'S SURE FIRE

"It's a mighty interesting picture, full of love, romance and adventure. Excellent entertainment and a sure-fire story. Scenes in foreign lands make it different enough in atmosphere to add spice to it. Strong suspense and the interest is held from beginning to end. Your crowds are sure to like it. Bank on the title. It has box office value." — Wid's.

Where the Big Ones Belong

By MARTIN J. QUIGLEY

EVERY great picture is a stimulus to the industry and a force working constructively for every person identified with the motion picture. It is upon these pictures of exceptional quality that the industry depends to attract to theatres new patrons and to strengthen and solidify the interest of veteran followers of the screen.

If the producers of the world were to fall into a dead level of mediocrity there would be created a situation fraught with the greatest peril with respect to maintaining and building up theatre attendance. Regular attendance at picture shows automatically educates the spectator to appreciate and demand better things and in the normal course he eventually becomes an exacting critic.

These regular patrons of motion pictures form the keystone to the arch of the motion picture public. It is these patrons who through regular and frequent attendance make possible the carrying on of the motion picture industry as presently constituted. These are the folks whose interest must be held and who must be constantly encouraged to expect greater and finer things in the motion picture theatre. Hollow promises unsupported by performance, of course, cannot maintain this optimism toward what is to come. It can only be done by giving the public that type of picture which warrants continued hope just as frequently as the creative genius and good fortune of the producer will permit.

* * *

IT is seldom possible to set out calmly with plans in hand and achieve just the type of picture referred to. Very often no effort or expense is spared in a production attempt yet the result falls far short of the desired goal. A great picture is almost invariably the outcome of an extraordinary combination of production genius, sterling judgment of story, actor and dramatic values and a generous quantity of good luck. Consequently, it may be expected that while there doubtless will continue a gradual upward trend of quality with respect to the average picture the really great picture, which means so much to the industry as a whole, will remain the exception, appearing without great frequency.

This resolves itself into a consideration of this business of lifting an unusually fine picture out of the ordinary channels of distribution and causing it to reach the public in some other manner.

Unquestionably the owner of this or any other kind of product is entitled to make whatever disposal of it that may suit his fancy. No written law can hold him to any other course. Yet there still stands in the way of the complete enjoyment of his plan the attitude of the exhibitor with whom he may meet on another day.

* * *

IN view of what the great picture means to the perpetuation of the industry the exhibitor is thoroughly within his rights in steadfastly opposing the practice of taking out of his hands these exceptional pictures and he will simply be pursuing a commonsense course if he follows up this opposition with a determination to give the matter consideration in future dealings with producers whose actions seem to indicate that they feel the motion picture theatre is only good enough for their average pictures.

This argument does not apply to those temporary arrangements in which a production is exhibited outside of a motion picture theatre because there are many instances of this character in which the exhibitor is benefited greatly through an elaborate presentation and an extensive advertising campaign. But if the exhibitor is to get a foursquare deal and if the best interests of the whole industry are to be served these big productions must be available to the motion picture theatres and within some reasonable length of time.
Recently we were invited by Mr. Benjamin B. Hampton to join him in a campaign for better pictures which was to take the form of a series of articles in the Pictorial Review. Only the title of the series of articles—"Too Much Sex Stuff in the Movies"—and not the subject matter of the articles as prepared by Mr. Hampton was available to us at that time. Even assuming for the moment that it would be possible to prove the indictment against the industry which is implied by the title of the articles, we still felt compelled to reply to Mr. Hampton to the effect that we saw no wisdom in attempting to advertise to the world some supposed vices of the industry.

As soon as the first article in Mr. Hampton’s series was available it became apparent that the editor of the Pictorial Review, without warrant or reason, had been guilty of the same charge that he was seeking to level against the industry, namely, he had invented the lurid title—"Too Much Sex Stuff in the Movies"—as a bid for morbid curiosity. The subject matter of Mr. Hampton’s article in no way justifies the title that has been tackled on it. The matter has been further complicated by the sensational uses that the Pictorial Review has made of this "Sex Stuff" title.

In making his personal position plain, Mr. Hampton has sent us the following telegram:

Los Angeles, Jan. 18.

Advices from our New York office today inform us that Pictorial Review has been sending sensational circulars to exhibitors and doing other sensational advertising. As an editor you of course realize that as a contributor to Pictorial Review we have nothing whatever to do with its advertising.

For the matter the title on the article, "Too Much Sex Stuff in the Movies," is not my title. The body of the article represents my point of view and sets forth properly my attitude in the matter. I do not want you or anybody else to confuse the publisher’s advertising with my personal position.

Benj. B. Hampton.

Mr. Hampton, unfortunately, now finds himself in the position of being taken advantage of after having prepared in good faith an article which was aimed solely to be constructive. It is to be regretted, however, that he did not envision the possible outcome of the matter before authorizing publication of the article.

Harry’s Latest Joke

Harry Reichenbach so seldom kicks in with anything for this col. that when he does we have to give it first place. (We suspect he saves all the good ideas and sells ’em and shoots us the others.) However, he was describing Universal’s big special production, "Outside the Law," to some friends. Harry’s exploiting it, you know.

"It’s a crook melodrama, isn’t it?" one of them asked.

"Crook melodrama, huh!" the silver-haired one retorted contemptuously. "The only honest man in the picture is the cameraman."

Paterson, N. J., is becoming a regular "dog" town for the showing of films, isn’t it?

Health Note

There is said to be a reason for that epidemic of hiccupps down East. Several cases have been discovered in Chicago also. (Twelve bottles to a case.)

Fast Workers

A fellow by the name of Turpin (no relation of Ben) had to pay $58 apiece for sixty kisses in Chi. last week. They were all delivered in one hour, too, it was testified, which beats a lot of our M. P. heroes’ best records.

Who Said Liberty

The English like to rub it in. On their boats leaving New York they advertise: "The bar is open after the boat passes the statue of Liberty."

Sounds Like It

Would you call the checks exhibits give for the latest Clara Kimball Young picture, "Hush" money?

Keep the Ring

Bill Duncan, the popular West Coast actor, is advertising for the return of a diamond ring and six bottles of Scotch tacked from his bungalow. "No questions asked," says Bill. We’ll ask no questions either if they deliver the "hook" at this address.

I’ll bet some of the things that were done during Thrift Week made old Ben Franklin turn over in his grave. Seventy-five cent hair cuts; twenty cent shaves; quarter tips in cloak rooms; eighteen dollar shoes and four dollar goldobs! Ben never dreamed of these things when he wrote his Almanac.

Cleaning Up

Mrs. Hammerstein evidently is going to put the cleaner on the unions in N. Y. She’s going to turn the Biltmore Opera House into a soap factory, if they’re not good.

"Home James"

That "no home brewing" order ought to start a "back to the farm" movement. The reformers can’t stop cider from becoming hard.

See where "Abe and Mawruss" will try to appear upon the stage. Wonder if "The Fatal Murder" will be their first comedy?

With dramatic and photoplay critics writing subtitles for pictures we wonder what effect this will have on their reviews.

Ohio Censor Bill
Proposes Prison
For All Violators
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)
COLUMBUS, O., Jan. 25.—Motion pictures showing murder, robbery, burglary, holdup, theft or any other act made criminal by state laws or tending to corrupt morals would be prohibited exhibition in Ohio under a censorship emergency bill introduced by Assemblyman McCoy.

Violation of the law would bring a fine of not less than $200 nor more than $500, and for each subsequent offense in addition to the fine an imprisonment of not less than one year nor more than three. The measure provides that any censor approving any film containing the acts enumerated shall be removed from office.

The sponsor of the measure urges immediate enactment. He declares that such pictures are educating the youth of the state in methods of committing crime. The bill takes in photographs giving forth profane, indecent and impure language.

Chicago Reformers Seeking More Rigorous Censorship
Timothy D. Hurley Backed by Clergy and Women’s Clubs Presents New Ordinance Regarded as Most Drastic Yet Proposed

The proposed new censorship ordinance for Chicago—admitted by the sponsors to be the most drastic legislation on the question yet conceived and aimed to reduce all motion pictures shown in the city to “entertainment for children”—was delivered to the legislative committee of the Chicago city council, January 20.

Timothy D. Hurley, chairman of the commission which has had the ordinance in preparation for a period of a year and a half, acted as spokesman for the commission. He delivered his stock address, charging motion pictures with responsibility for juvenile delinquency, minor and major crimes and the breaking down of the moral and social fabric of the nation.

Wants Chicago to Lead the Way for Nation
Rev. W. S. Fleming, Methodist minister, Rev. Frederic Siedenberg, and Mrs. Henry Solomon, representing women’s clubs, supplemented his report with brief talks emphasizing various details. Anthony Matre, secretary of the Catholic Federation Societies of the United States, followed, saying in part:

“We believe this ordinance to be a great step forward. We aimed to make it so effective that it would be copied by other cities, the various states, and even the United States.”

Mr. Hurley smiled good naturedly, almost indulgently, on the legislative committee as he said:

“I believe the ordinance proposed really doesn’t differ a great deal from the present one; just dignified the censoring a bit; placed the responsibility on big people, an educator, a mother, and a business man; of course, it meant $15,000 more a year in salaries but what is $15,000 or $15,000,000 compared to the morals of one child; very simple, not so very drastic; had to be firm, of course, to keep out these sex plays, the picturing of crime; had to avoid anything which might tend to riotous conduct on the part of the people.”

Reformers Demonstrate Strength
Oscar H. Olson, chairman of the legislative committee, took the floor to say that six men had called upon him at his home to help him, and that very interested in the passage of the new censorship ordinance. Mr. Olson asked them if they knew the ordinance provided for the creation of a paid commission and they were surprised.

“I rather resented that kind of pressure,” he said.

“Resented it?” demanded Hurley. “Do you mean, alderman, that you resent hav- ing your constituents calling upon you to tell you what they want? Some aldermen are inclined to forget they are public servants.”

And as he spoke, he seemed to endeavor to create a picture of organized societies busy on election day, children parading the streets in white, ministers speaking from pulpits, carriages and automobiles with signs plastered on the sides, workers standing at polls wearing big badges.

Salary Meets Opposition
Despite the testimony of members of the committee took exception to several phases of the ordinance. George M. Maypole, alderman, expressed himself as opposed to the ordinance which would be appointed by the mayor and consequently become a “political football” with the control of the police.

Alderman Guy Guernsey said he was in favor of state censorship, rather than local censorship. He objected to a paid commission, also, saying he believed volunteers would be better.

Chairman Oscar H. Olson expressed himself as seeing little improvement in the proposed ordinance as compared with the present one, the difference impressing him being simply the creation of three $3,000 jobs. He asked and was informed that the actual viewing would continue to be done by civil service employees.

Alderman Sees Blue Tint
Alderman Charles S. Eaton objected to several clauses of the ordinance, stating that he believed it gave the censors unlimited power to accept and reject, and that he did not believe three people should be authorized to say what 2,000,000 people were to have as entertainment.

“There is a great deal of murmuring against anything which resembles blue laws,” he declared.

Chairman Olson pointed out several times that pictures were to be discriminated against; that picture version of stories were to be barred, while the stage versions were to be permitted.

Judge Hurley’s assertion that Charlie Chaplin would not “get by with The Kid,” if he was the censor did not appear to impress the committee.

Picture Producers Scored
Producers of motion pictures were the targets of a number of attacks by various members of the commission. They were branded as “intolerant” and “domineering” by Rev. Fleming.

“Why, they call us bigots,” he declared.

There were about twenty exhibitors present, none of whom spoke. Dr. Sam Atkinson, secretary of the commission, stated that he wanted some time to study the ordinance, but would appreciate being heard before the committee took final action.

Mrs. William Severin, 1222 Morse avenue, Chicago, took the floor, stating that she was a motion picture fan as well as a mother. She said that she used care as to what theatres she went to and that in ten years she had not witnessed a film she considered objectionable.

“I am for children,” she said. “But children can’t have everything all the time. I don’t believe that the men who work eight and ten hours a day to provide clothes...”
Why "Exhibitors Herald" Leads

Three Unsolicited Letters From Confidence and Esteem of Readers of EXHIBITORS WORTH LEGISLATIVE SESSION.

W. W. Stirlen, manager of the Alhambra theatre, Delta, Ia., writes as follows:

"I am taking the opportunity of expressing my hearty appreciation of the many good things you are doing for the exhibitor. Your publications are sure, I am sure, to assist every subscriber to be a highly successful and prosperous exhibitor.

"To one feature of the Herald I particularly refer—What the Picture Did for Me." Every exhibitor, he is honest with his fellow exhibitors, should be a regular contributor to this feature of your splendid publication. Cooperation spells success in nearly every instance, and in so perils a game as the motion picture business we need every co-operation.

"Your columns are open for applause, praise or criticism on what the picture did for me. Then, Mr. Exhibitor, if you desire to lend assistance to your brother exhibitor make your reports on actual performances.

"We grow and develop by our own experiences in life, we profit by our own mistakes and the mistakes of others, and it comes to mind, in a forceful manner, that here is a splendid opportunity for exhibitors throughout the nation to contribute frequently authentic reports of the actual performances. In so doing you have assisted your brother exhibitor and he in return has benefited.

"I am decidedly against 'confidential reports' as compared with reviews printed in reliable and dependable trade papers. The Herald should be in the hands of every wide awake exhibitor in America."

He Could Not Run Show Without it

R. C. Buxton, Strand theatre, Ranson, Kan., feels that the Herald is worth five times what he is paying for it. He writes:

"If every exhibitor in the country would take your paper and read the reports on 'What the Picture Did for Me,' it would not be long until poor pictures would cease to be made. I have taken a lot of film trade papers in the seven years I have been in the business but the Herald seems to be the only one that covers the whole field and has such good advice for the small town exhibitor. I could not run my shows without it.

"What the Picture Did for Me' alone is worth twice the cost of the paper. It has saved me on several occasions from booking a dud. I would not be without your valued paper for five times its cost."

It Is Most Useful Of All Magazines

O. W. Jastram, manager of the Strand theatre, Pecatonica, Ill., takes three trade papers and it is the Herald he finds the most useful. He writes:

"We have used your magazine for quite a while, especially the department 'What the Picture Did for Me.' We find it very helpful and get good time on successful pictures from watching it carefully. I never sent in reports regularly before, but we are running quite a few new pictures now and maybe we can give someone a tip that will help, so will report on our newer pictures. Out of three magazines we can honestly say that we USE yours—the most, although we like the general make-up of one of the others better. But usefulness counts, so that's where we give you full credit."

Harry Miller Will Manage Saxe Houses

Harry Miller, for six years manager of the Rose, Alcazar and Boston theatres, Chicago, for Harry Mor, will continue to act as manager, it was officially announced by E. C. Bostick, general manager for the Saxe Amusement Enterprises, January 24. The houses were recently purchased by the Saxe company and Jack Grauman of Chicago.

Arthur E. Brown, who has been acting as manager, will assist Mr. Miller. Harry Hart will return to Milwaukee.

Mr. Bostick announced that the three houses will be thoroughly renovated and remodeled.

"We aim to make them little palaces," he declared.

Call Special Session To Fight Blue Laws
Wisconsin Exhibitors Convene in Milwaukee January 26 and 27

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

MILWAUKEE, WIS., Jan. 23.—Plans formulated by officials of the organization to fight blue law reformers will be submitted to members of the Wisconsin Exhibitors Association at a special mid-Winter convention which opens tomorrow. The exhibitors will be in session two days.

The situation in this state is becoming menacing. Considering that a successful campaign to force blue law observance upon the people would urge the reformers to seek other repressive legislation which would be a detriment to theatre men, executives of the organization have carefully laid plans for combating the invasion.

Names Legislative Committee

A legislative committee has been named by Joseph G. Rhode of Kenosha, president. Members of this body have been collecting facts and figures for some time. The blue laws will be presented to the convention.

A representative attendance is expected, owing to the fact that the interests of all exhibitors are menaced.

Publicizes Convention

Walter F. Baumann, executive secretary, utilized unique methods in publicizing the convention. He distributed broadcast over the state blotters carrying news of the convention and a statement of its purposes. The blotters were attractive. Carefully picturing graphically what the exhibitors might expect should the blue laws and censorship agitators attain their hopes made it almost impossible for an exhibitor to cast aside the blower without reading it.

Wallerstein Brothers Control Entire City

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

MICHIGAN CITY, IND., Jan. 25.—Through an arrangement recently completed by Wallerstein Brothers, the operators of the Starland theatre, have obtained control of all the amusement houses in the city. They have purchased the Garden, Idlehour and Dreamland from Ezra Rhodes of South Bend and will take possession February 1. Mr. Rhodes retains control of his theatres in South Bend, Elkhart and Goshen.

Censorship is based on an underestimate of the intelligence, the common sense, the loyalty, the moral fibre of the people. In the eye of the censor, or the advocate of censorship, we are sensitive plants—we are void of stamina. If the film censor can see dozens of films a day without being demoralized, the ordinary citizen can see two or three a week and come through unscarred.

The music tax proposition also will be

St. Louis Mayor Promises
Aid in Fighting Censorship
Missouri Exhibitors at Convention Protest the Taxation of Films, Seats and Admissions and the Advance Deposits
By PAUL A. YAWITZ
ST. LOUIS, MO., Jan. 25.—Mayor Henry W. Kiel, of St. Louis, through his secretary William T. Findley, pledged his personal support to the movement directed against the enactment of Sunday closing and censorship bills, now pending in the state legislature, before the opening session of the second semi-annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri, which was held at the Hotel Statler, St. Louis, January 20-21.
The St. Louis executive declared that he would do anything within his official and personal power to prevent the imposition of the proposed statutes from disenfranchising the people of Missouri from the liberties granted them by the American constitution. Wires pledging support were also received by Lawrence E. Goldman, counsel for the exhibitors, from the mayors of St. Joseph and Sedalia, Mo.

Several Notables in Attendance at Meeting
In addition to the Sunday closing and censorship questions, the delegates considered protests against the taxation of films, seats and admissions, and the advance remittances on contracts with producers. More than one-third of the membership of the entire organization was present in addition to several film exchange representatives and the following notables:
Marcus Loew, W. W. Hodkinson, E. V. Richards and Julian Saenger, of Saenger Amusement Company of New Orleans, and Col. Fred Levy, of Louisville, Ky.

Sydney S. Cohen of New York, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, was scheduled to address the delegates but sent his regrets due to the urgent duties in connection with the Hoover European relief campaign.

Introducing the Billman
The blue Sunday and censorship bills now before the state legislature were presented at the instigation of the Rev.
Howard Billman, secretary of the Commitee of St. Louis, which is composed of church workers, ministers, and Y. W. C. A. and Y. M. C. A. workers.

Resolutions
Resolutions were passed condemning
Censorship
Blue law legislation
Rental of film to non-theatrical enterprises.
Other resolutions asked for Repeal of existing forms of taxation
Passage of law correcting evils of advance deposit practice
And for the 1 per cent gross profit law.
Support of Sydney S. Cohen and his ad-mnistration was voiced.

The censorship bill would prohibit the showing of any film, view or stereopticon in the state not approved by the board and would instruct the board to approve only "of such which do not tend to debase and corrupt the morals." The bill provides for a board of three officers and a large staff of highly paid employees with fee of $2 for 1,200 lineal feet with a graduated scale for each additional 1,000 feet.

Will Fight to the End
The support offered by Mayor Kiel and the chief executives of the two smaller municipalities has revived the hopes of the Missouri exhibitors.
"Mayor Kiel will fight until the last man has had the ground," Secretary Findley declared. "He knows you have the right" on your side and he is willing to fight to the last trench. Call on him at any time you need him.

"The fanatics who are striving hard to deprive us of our liberties believe they will send us to church on Sunday. The only great thing their efforts can result in is the deprivation of wholesome amusement and the substitution of a greater temptation for evil-doing."

The convention was addressed by Marcus Loew who denounced the Sunday closing law. "It is a menace which can in time destroy our industry," he said.
"Let us not underestimate the seriousness of such a movement. The prohibition of liquors began in the same way and people at first were wont to ignore and underestimate its rapid growth. Before long it became a national amendment. Let us then beware and fight from the very start such iniquitous action."

Seek Advance Deposit Law
In resolutions the legislative committee was instructed to frame a measure which would correct the so-called evils of the advance deposit. The committee also was instructed to take every legal means to defeat the reformers in their efforts to get censorship and a blue Sunday.

The legislative committee is composed of Lawrence E. Goldman, Kansas City;
Joseph Mogler, St. Louis; Charles T.
Sears, Brookfield; J. E. Haggard, Nevada, and William Mueller, Kansas
City.

New York and New Jersey Exhibitors Disapprove Features Over Six Reels

Chamber of Commerce Declares That Unusually Long Films Break Up Schedules

Theatre Owners Are Not Antagonistic Toward Producers of Such Pictures Which, It is Contended, Cost More for Presentation

O BJECTION to the production of features exceeding six reels in length has been made by the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, which represents 500 houses in New York and New Jersey.

At a recent meeting at the Hotel Astor in New York City, the organization cited the following objections to features of such length:

1. They break up the schedules of houses working on the basis of a specific number of shows a day.
2. They cost the exhibitor more to play.
3. They cost producers more to make—an additional expense not warranted by additional value to the exhibitor.
4. Combination houses must eliminate some of the big features because their excessive length interferes with the vaudeville program.

The theatre owners pointed out, however, that they were in no way antagonistic toward producers of long features. In this connection it was declared that some notable examples of motion picture art have been contained in the longer subjects.

According to the sentiment expressed at the meeting, long pictures add nothing to the attractiveness of the box office. Some held that pictures which have been in seven, eight or nine reels could just as easily have been told in five or six, without destroying the artistic value. Several members argued that better pictures would result if producers adhered to the policy of making features of five and six reels.

The ball which was held at the Astor on January 15 netted the organization $4,000 according to the report made.

Resolutions were passed thanking the committee consisting of Messrs. Goldmeyer, Barr, Steiner, Gainsboro and B. S. Moss, for their fine work in behalf of the ball, and by unanimous action of the members a committee consisting of Messrs. William Brandt, W. A. Landau and J. Mannheimer was appointed to purchase suitable gifts for the ball committee and for Harry Reichenbach, whose contribution to the chamber as director of publicity for the ball aided in making it a success.

William Fox to Begin Erecting Playhouse in Philadelphia in Spring

(Newark, N.J—Construction on the new William Fox theatre in Philadelphia will be started in the spring. The site, which adjoins the Stanley theatre, has a frontage of 129 feet on Market street, at the corner of 16th, and a depth of 170 feet. The theatre will have a seating capacity of between 3,000 and 3,500. An office building will be erected in connection with the theatre, but as its size has not been determined the Fox officials declare it is impossible to say how much money will be involved. The policy for the theatre has not been determined.

The SAN FRANCISCO HERALD

February 5, 1921

Is the good sense of the people never to be permitted a chance to express itself as to what is and what is not wanted in the way of entertainment? The latest invasion with which we are threatened is a state board of censorship. The proposed state censorship would merely provide an obstacle to picture production and good jobs for the paid members of a board of public morals.
Exhibitors Score Hampton For Article on Sex Films

Excerpts Are Used in the Newspapers of Country for Placing the Motion Picture in the Pillory—Issue Statement

(From Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, Jan. 25.—Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, in a statement just issued announced that the exhibitor organization objects to the campaign started by Benjamin B. Hampton in Pictorial Review under the title “Too Much Sex Stuff in the Movies?” and that he had written Mr. Hampton detailing those objections.

The statement reads in part:

“The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America are in active sympathy with the anti-malevolent constructive movement for remedying the admitted evils within the Industry. They most emphatically disapprove all sensational and spectacular newspaper crusades against motion pictures under the guise of attacks on objectional pictures.

Excerpts Place Industry in Wrong Light

“The exhibitors object to the campaign started by Benjamin B. Hampton in the Pictorial Review. These articles and excerpts from them are used in the daily press of the country for no other purpose than putting the motion picture in the pillory. Sydney S. Cohen had this to say on the subject:

No possible good can come of any attempt to put the motion picture in the pillory. The pillory as a means of reform or correction has been abolished centuries ago. It has always been found that the pillory degrades not only the victims in the stock, but the bystanders. That is why pillorying the motion picture cannot possibly lead to any good, for it is leading to attacks not only upon motion pictures, but upon the whole motion picture entertainment.”

The following letter was sent to Mr. Hampton by Mr. Cohen:

Your article in “Pictorial Review” of February claims that the exhibitor (retailer) dominates the producer ( wholesaler). Your conclusion is that the producers are responsible for the kind of pictures he exhibits to the public. Surely, this is not logic. Animals' heads, carved in the facts speak very loudly against your theory.

Choice Is Limited

You must know that the exhibitor has a very limited choice in his pictures, if he does not want to put a lot of them on the shelf and run his business at a loss. Most pictures are never seen by patrons. Only a fraction of them are sold to the exhibitor six months or longer in advance of the actual showing.

Now as to the exploitation of the pictures, you must know that the manufacturers through their publishers, have made it their business, as you know, furnished to the exhibitor the most effective exploitation. If the exhibitor were not restrained by law and if he were to take literally the terms of printed advice that are handed on him through the major mills of the producers, he would be in constant conflict with the penal law and spend much of his time either in jail or arranging for his bail.

The exaggerated sex appeal as a sin against the common decency of the American people must be laid at the door of the producer. Taking your own methods of reasoning, it is quite evident that the producers have misjudged the tastes and demands of the public, otherwise why would there be this universal outcry against the low pitched appeal of the motion pictures and against the exageration and degradation of the sex pictures, and upon which the exhibitor has little or no control.

Exonerates the Exhibitor

We cannot understand how you fail to remember that the motion picture manufacturers are the men who makes the pictures and, after having made them, delivers the exhibitor with plans of exploitation. The exhibitor is the man who shows the picture, and I can assure you from my own experience that time and again we had to cut pictures rather severely in order to insure our good standing with our audiences.

You seem to forget that we exhibitors have absolutely nothing whatever to do with the titles selected for objectionable pictures and, as you know, some of these titles are not objectionable than the pictures themselves. These titles are selected by the manufacturer without consulting the exhibitor. Motion picture producers, who have audiences consisting largely of families, are embarrassed almost every day by the selection of objectionable titles.

In fact that your campaigns against “sex movies” is linked up with a large advertising campaign in the mass purchasing motion pictures for less or more indiscriminately, is not going to help the cause which you profess to espouse. It will merely furnish ammunition to the paid moralists and professional reformers. You are absolutely alienating the motion picture theatre owners without whose constructive cooperation a genuinely useful change in conditions cannot be accomplished. Nothing can be gained by putting the motion picture in the pillory.

Two Chicagoans Are Cast in Neilan's Forthcoming Picture
Producer Assigns Them Big Parts Because of Their Excellent Work in "Dinty"

Two Chicagoans, Pat O'Malley and Tom Gallery, carry big parts in Marshall Neilan's new spectacular production, "Bob Hampton of Place." Both O'Malley and Gallery appear in Neilan's current success, "Dinty," in which they support Wesley "Freckles" Barry. As a result of the exceptional work displayed in this production by these young men, Neilan signed them up for important characterizations in his newest offering, an adaptation of Randall Farrish's book. It is declared to be the most ambitious film yet undertaken by this director.

In "Bob Hampton of Place," Pat O'Malley portraits the part of Lieutenant Brandt, the young officer and member of General Custer's staff, who cuts such a big figure in the story. Opposite him is Marjorie Dav in the part of "The Kid." She is given a dramatic part to portray. Pat O'Malley is the nephew of M. J. O'Malley, superintendent of second class mail in Chicago. Chicago holds more Pat O'Malley admirers than any other city in the country, and since his portrayal of the cub reporter in Mr. Neilan's "Go and Get It" has made rapid progress as an actor.

Everyone in Chicago, especially since the recent Herald and Examiner popularity contest, knows that every policeman in Chicago should buy Tom Gallery, knows this coming star and son of the well-known Michael J. Gallery, local police captain. In "Bob Hampton of Place," he portrays the part of the Reverend Wyncoop, a difficult role and one that demands much of the histrionic capabilities of Gallery.

In the big reproduction of "Custer's Last Fight," which serves as the climax to the story, Pat O'Malley is given the opportunity to achieve the most dramatic portrayals of his entire career. In the title role of this offering is James Kirkwood, while Wesley "Freckles" Barry holds up the comedy end of the story. Noah Beery, Priscilla Bonner, Charles West and other popular artists also appear in this picture.

food and education for children, should be compelled to depend for amusement on pictures made suitable for children only.

The adjournment was taken to February 3 at which time it was indicated opponents of the ordinance were to be given the floor.

Features of the Bill
If the proposed ordinance passes, all films will be inspected and must bear the label of the censor board before being published. There will be three executives, one a woman, appointed by the mayor, each to receive $5,000 annually.

The department will pass on all posters, programs and signs to be used in advertising pictures, and must carry the department label before being put up.

No permit will be granted for a picture that is "immoral, obscene, sacrilegious, salacious, unpatriotic, or holds to scorn of ridicule any nation or the people thereof, or portrays riotous, disorderly or unlawful scenes, or has a tendency to disturb the public peace or debase the public morals."

The department will have the right to recall for re-examination any films approved by it.

The pictures shall be classified by the department as " scenic, geographical; historical, classical, educational, propagandistic, patriotic, dramatic, melodramatic, comic, tragedy, farce, etc."

The "pink permit" is abolished, that is so-called "adult films" will not be permitted.

The ALBUQUERQUE (N. Mex.) HERALD Says

Experts say that much of the "crime wave" may be blamed to the influence of such pictures (films which the Pennsylvania censorship board declares "gloriety crime"). It may be true, BUT WE DOUBT IT. On the other hand, some true-to-life crook pictures might have a very decided effect in destroying the illusions often set at work in immature minds as to the attractiveness of the criminal career.
Universal Employees
Killed in Plant Fire Producing Company Places Its Loss in Bayonne at $80,000
(From Staff Correspondent)
BAYONNE, N. J., Jan. 25.—Two dead and ten injured is the toll of a fire that broke out in a production and storage plant last week. The plant is the property of Motion Picture Realty Company and was occupied by Cello Film Refining Company, which refined old reels, and Universal Film Manufacturing Company, which kept old prints on the second floor prior to selling them to reclaiming concerns.

Universal Workers Die
The fire started with an explosion and spread so rapidly that the building was emplased in flames in a few moments, making escape for the employees exceedingly difficult.
The dead are Miss Ethel Suckow, 21, of Bayonne, and Arthur Post, 21, also of Bayonne. Both were Universal employees. The injured are: Charles Kern ner, manager for Universal; Albert Scott,
George Sweezy, foreman for the factory;
H. J. Semple, and Miss Martha Birnbaum.

The fire was estimated at $80,000.

Universal places its loss at between $70,000 and $80,000.

Warrants charging manslaughter were issued last Saturday for Henry Sysman, president of Cello Film Refining Company; George Sweezy, foreman in the factory; R. H. Cochran, vice-president of Universal, and Charles H. Lerner.

Blaze at American Does Little Damage
In connection with an exaggerated story of a fire at 6247-6253 Broadway, Chicago, Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of American Film Company, states that the fire was only a small blaze in a shed in the rear of the main building of the excess studio. In this storage were old posts, antique pressed matter and other out of date material. The loss of the contents of this storage and the slight injury to the shed itself were small, the damage being estimated at $350. “Business as usual,” and that without loss of time, was the situation throughout the works.

U. S. Credit Men Make Plea
For Economy in Legislation
J. H. Tregoe Declares Country Would Go Bankrupt
If All Measures Suggested Were Adopted by State and Federal Legislators

The motion picture industry has a staunch ally in its fight against the many freak legislative measures brought before congress and the state assemblies.

J. H. Tregoe, executive secretary of the National Association of Credit Men, has just issued a letter to the 33,000 members of the organization stating that it is time to “emphasize the need of economy in legislation.”

Declares U. S. Would Go Into Bankruptcy

Secretary Tregoe declares that if every bill suggested for passage by congress and state legislators became a law the country would go bankrupt in its efforts to enforce these measures.

In his letter he says:
“The country has grown ripe for legislation of the freak type. Without disparaging the entrance of woman into governmental affairs and endowing her with the right of suffrage, yet this experiment of extending woman’s suffrage to the nation may develop legislative ideas which will really submerge the true purposes of the government into mere seniment.

Variety of Bills Offered

“Wherever it is within the powers of man to accomplish something its accomplishment should be left to him and his effort not supplemented by legislation enactors. The laws should be used for the attainment of objects beyond the reasonable powers of man.

“We have had bills introduced for the covering of all kinds of ailments, for all manner of welfare projects and we should remember in this connection that whenever the enactment requires an expenditure, the cost of it must fall upon the tax-paying public and we are to undertake everything that is suggested by legislators, federal and state, the country would go bankrupt.”

Avoid Freak Measures

“Economy must be emphasized in legislation. Freak measures must be avoided. We must not depart from the traditions of government nor feel that an act may prove a cure for every evil ill.”

Here’s Law That Gits N. Y.
Motion Pictures on Sunday
(From Staff Correspondent)
NEW YORK, Jan. 25.—Following is a copy of the New York State Sunday motion picture option bill under which motion pictures are permitted on the Sabbath in this state. The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, of which Sydney S. Cohen is president, has circulated copies of the bill, legislators, exhibitors and civic bodies having requested it. It follows:

An act to amend the penal law, in relation to the exhibition of motion pictures on the first day of the week.

The people of the state of New York, represented in senate and assembly, do enact as follows:

Sec. 1. The penal law is hereby amended by adding at the end of article any city, town or village motion pictures are now exhibited on the first day or other legislative body of such city, town or village, the adoption, repeal or re-adoption of which is hereby authorized. If in any city, town or village, motion pictures are not now exhibited on the first day of the week, they shall not be so exhibited except during such time after 2 o’clock in the afternoon as shall be authorized by an ordinance hereafter adopted by the common council or other legislative body of such city, town or village, the adoption, repeal or re-adoption of which is hereby authorized.

Sec. 2. This act shall take effect immediately.
Cecil De Mille's Latest Opus Imposing

"Forbidden Fruit," a Worthy Successor to "Why Change Your Wife"? Strikingly Beautiful Sets, Gorgeous Costumes and Brilliant Acting Put Picture Over. Colored Initialed Sub-titles Another Beautiful Innovation.

Cast "Forbidden Fruit"
Mary Maddock—Agnes Ayres.
Steve Maddock—Clarence Burton.
Mrs. Mallory—Kathlyn Williams.
Nelson Rogers—Forrest Stanley.
Pietro Giuseppi — Theodore Kosloff.
Madia Craig—Shannon Day.
John Craig—Bertram Johns.
Maid—Julia Faye.

FORBIDDEN FRUIT," Cecil B. DeMille's production from a script by Jeanie Macpherson, satisfies anticipation. It is precisely the picture expected of the man who made "Don't Change Your Husband" and "Why Change Your Wife?" As before, the camera lens is employed as a microscope to analyze matrimony—a subject of enduring interest.

To the production tactics characteristic of the Paramount director-general have been added notable innovations.

The main title and more important subtitles are in many colors, richly designed, possessing the sharply brilliant pigmentation of the peacock.

Amplification of incidents in the modern narrative is frequently effected by resort to the fade-in giving a magnificent visualization of the original "Cinderella" story. It is in this phase of the production that the mirror set of the ballroom in the fairy tale is disclosed, a set of dazzling splendor.

The scenes depicting the modern story, which is not a modernization of the fairy tale, are produced with characteristic DeMille richness. The settings are obviously the best obtainable, the photography does them full justice, and efficiently executed continuity insures registry of their complete forcefulness.

Costuming, an element with box-office influence in the case of the DeMille picture, surpasses in excellence even that of "Why Change Your Wife?" The players seen against this superb background are capable in every instance and admirably assigned as regards contributory effect.

Agnes Ayres satisfies thoroughly in the role corresponding to that portrayed by Gloria Swanson in "Why Change Your Wife?" She is strikingly like that actress in person and manner, and wears the costumes of the part with as pleasing effect, contributing the while, acting of excellent quality.

Forrest Stanley and Clarence Burton are cast as her admirer and husband respectively. The former has little difficult work to do but does it well. The latter, as a weakling, led to crime through sloth, scores heavily in what must have been a distasteful role.

Theodore Kosloff, allotted little actual footage, creates in the role of a crooked butler a lasting impression. Theodore Roberts and Kathlyn Williams in convincing characterizations contribute realism to an atmosphere that is not easily maintained.

In entertainment quality the picture is on a par with its predecessors. The first five reels pass through the projector without stirring interest save for the beauty of the screen images and the quality of technical detail.

The remainder of the picture, which is in eight reels, imparts the dramatic force of the whole. Action, thus far of even tenor, is given impetus and shorter scenes contribute to the building up of a melodramatic climax which surpasses any yet created by the director.

Some of the best melodrama of all time is revealed in this portion of the picture. In contrast with earlier events the narrative here unfolded impresses indelibly.

In this phase of the picture the weakening husband who, at the butler’s instigation, has attempted to blackmail the millionaire who has learned to love his wife, believing her single, is informed by her that if he accepts the ten thousand dollars her admirer has given him she will go away with his rival. Given half an hour in which to make his decision, he attempts to leave the house, but is confronted by the butcher, who demands half of the money. The latter proposes that they throw dice to determine which shall take the whole amount and while they are thus engaged the wife extracts the money from the wallet and leaves the room. The husband loses the gamble, but attempts to flee with the wallet. The butcher shoots him and recovers the purse to discover that the money is gone.

With the death of the husband and the capture of the butcher the way is opened for the happy ending.

The last three reels contain the plot of the picture. The first five contain its beauty. Together they constitute a whole which should meet with greater success than any former DeMille production.

Exploitation material is plentiful in the general magnificence of the whole, reference to past productions by the director, and the theme of the story.

The latter is, in essence, the familiar divorce question, but it has been given extraordinary treatment and the trite is avoided throughout. The subtitles provide excellent catchlines, and the general facts of the production constituting ground for genuine news publicity.

The picture should be exploited upon the most extensive scale possible, and an effort should be made to so arrange the program schedule that all will view the picture from the beginning.

Lubitsch Will Direct American Film Stars
Pola Negri Will Arrive in U. S. This Summer or Early Next Fall
(From Staff Correspondent)
NEW YORK, Jan. 22.—Ben Blumenthal, who has signed Pola Negri, the Polish actress, also that he and his associate, Samuel Rachman, have signed Ernest Lubitsch, who directed "Passion."

Arrive This Summer
Pola Negri will arrive in this country this summer or early in the fall to appear in American-made pictures. Lubitsch will not direct the stars under an American director. On the other hand, an American star will be under the direction of Lubitsch.

Before coming here the two will make two or three productions in Germany. No production plans have been made by Blumenthal.

Import Two Pictures
Blumenthal and Rachman brought back to this country two productions. One is a story of the late Eighteenth century entitled "Anne Boleyn." The other is a serial entitled "Mistress of the World." "Anne Boleyn" was directed by Lubitsch and "Mistress of the World" by DeRemer.

The serial consists of six episodes, each one of five or six reels in length. Joe May directed one and Mie May has the leading feminine role.

Anita Stewart Buys Residence on Coast
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)
LOS ANGELES, Jan. 22.—The home-blighting habit appears to be becoming chronic with the Angeleno film stars. Anita Stewart has just taken over a mansion in Sunset boulevard where she will spend the coming year while completing her contract with Louis B. Mayer. Mildred Harris also has purchased a home in Hollywood.

Show Lack of Knowledge
With the native disregard characteristic of prejudiced minds the self-appointed censors failed to take into consideration the fact that the picture coming under their condemnation was a serial, and that the "punishment" they demanded for the criminal was necessarily delayed.

Although the report in detail submitted by Mr. Manget at the meeting of the committee on Thursday, January 20, indicated that the majority of Atlanta motion picture houses were recommended for the selection of their pictures, the fact that the one case singled out and the criticism thereon indicates a lack of understanding on the part of the committee serves to add conviction to the stand taken by the exhibitors—that no group of people may safely constitute themselves a censorship body; that the public is its own best judge.

Seek Order to Stop Saxe From Converting Gargoyle Into Milwaukee Playhouse

Woman Owning Part of Block Declares Remodeling Is Not Authorized and Will Damage the Property

MILWAUKEE, WIS., Jan. 25.—Mrs. Emma Rohner has filed a plea in circuit court for an injunction to stop further alterations in the Gargoyle building, 304-306 Grand avenue, and to compel its restoration to its former condition. Saxe Amusement Enterprise, John E. and Thomas Saxe, Martin Tullgren & Sons, Pabst Brewing Company and Theodore Levy are named as defendants.

Leased for 25 Years

Mrs. Rohner alleges that the property was leased to the Pabst Company on August 1, 1903, for twenty-five years, and that between that time and 1916 she acquired a three-fourths interest in the property, the other one-fourth being retained by Mr. Levy, one of the defendants.

She alleges that the alterations being made in the building to convert it into a motion picture theatre are not authorized under the lease, that they materially change the character of the building and damage the property.

Alterations Not Stopped

The alterations, however, have not been stopped and men are still working on the building.

The theatre will be known as Saxe's Third and Grand theatre. An admission of 25 cents will be charged. The seating capacity of the house is limited.

Industry Facing Greatest Fight To Halt Detrimental Legislation

Reformers and other interests seeking laws which would be oppressive to the industry as well as burdensome are unusually active at the sessions this year of the various state legislatures. The industry is called upon to fight five times as many such measures as ever before. Approximately thirty state legislatures will consider censorship bills, whereas blue law legislation pertaining to the exhibition field are proposed in at least twelve states.

States facing censorship legislation are Wyoming, Massachusetts, Colorado, Missouri, North Carolina, California and Washington. States in which both censorship and blue law measures will be introduced in the legislatures are Nebraska, Minnesota, Michigan, Oklahoma, Montana, Indiana and Texas. In addition to the agitation for state censorship many cities and towns are facing such oppressive measures.
Bert Adler Issues Figures To Silence Talk of Depression
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, Jan. 25.—The New York offices of the Allan Dwan Productions say that there is nothing whatever to the pleasant rumor that Mr. Dwan would direct Douglas Fairbanks in "The Three Musketeers," for the simple reason that he is busy completing his second Associated Producers' release, "A Perfect Crime." Bert Adler, representing Mr. Dwan, states that this producer's "Soldiers of Fortune" has grossed $397,562 in the United States and Canada up to last Saturday, as Reelart's books show, and that "The Forbidden Thing," published in November, had grossed $174,510 at Associated Producers to January 1. It is not often that actual figures, as per distributors' books, are given not by a producer and these figures should serve to dispel idle stories of depression in this industry. The picture published last winter had in two months achieved almost half the business, according to these figures, of the picture that has been showing since October, 1919, the so-called "prosperity winter."

EX-SERVICE MEN BECOME CAMERAMEN

SERVICE!

The motion picture industry has aided the government's Americanization campaign. It has come to the front with wholehearted cooperation in other federal and civic enterprises. Now it is rendering further patriotic service to which little publicity has been given.

The industry is doing its bit in training men incapacitated during the war for work which is within their ability to perform. In this work the industry is cooperating with the Federal Board of Vocational Education.

At the Lasky studios in Hollywood, Calif., five world war veterans are learning the mechanics and art of motion picture photography under the supervision of Alvin Wyckoff, director of photography and cameraman for Cecil B. DeMille productions. They are Arthur Grant, Ned Connor, Harry Merland, Larry Burford and Happy de Roselli.

"Nothing is too good for those men who sacrificed everything to go over there and fight for their country and a great human cause," says Wyckoff. "I am proud of the opportunity that was conferred upon the camera department of the Lasky studio to do its part in this great government work. Every one of the men, without exception, has shown marked ability and has proven conscientious and reliable in every respect."

Arthur Grant was not incapacitated overseas. He was assigned, after service on the Mexican border, to the work of breaking wild range horses for use as cavalry mounts. One day he was thrown, sustaining a fractured thigh, three broken ribs and an injury to his spine. He is now an assistant cameraman with the Cecil B. DeMille company.

Larry Burford, now assistant cameraman for Karl Brown, went over as a sergeant and served six months in France. He was gassed in the Argonne, was sent home and later to West Point as a cadet. While studying there his health broke down and he was obliged to leave.

HAPPY DE ROSELLI ARRIVED IN FRANCE TWENTY-SEVEN DAYS AFTER HIS ENLISTMENT IN THE MEUSE-ARGONNE OFFENSIVE. HE WAS CITED FOR THE FRENCH CROIX DE GUERRE, THE DISTINGUISHED SERVICE CROSS AND THE CONGRESSIONAL MEDAL OF HONOR. HE NOW HAS ONLY ONE GOOD LUNG BUT IS IN FAIRLY GOOD HEALTH. HE SOON WILL BE SHOOTING.

Harry Merland was overcome by gas on the Albert front on the Somme and was blind for eight weeks. He was frightfully burned all over his body and spent twenty-one months in hospitals in France, London, Columbus, O., Chicago, Denver, and Palo Alto, Calif. He is assistant to C. Edgar Schoenbaum, one of the veteran cameramen at the studio. Ned Connor, a veteran of the Rainbow Division, wears a silver plate in the side of his head, the result of an operation to patch up a wound sustained in an engagement just three days before the signing of the armistice. He is working as assistant cameraman under James C. Van Trees, who photographs the William D. Taylor productions.

all of the distribution systems in the country are mere adjuncts of the producer. The producer then controls this channel of distribution. The producer is very desirous of controlling it because he is then sure that his product will be sold.

Without questioning the motive of producer in control of distribution channels today, I say that it is impossible for anybody to manufacture enough pictures in this present market to completely support a distribution system provided we are going to accept those pictures that have sufficient quality to satisfy the public to which you gentlemen are catering.

Exchange Men Present

"I have said for some years past and repeat to you today that producer control of the avenues of distribution is fatal to the progress and advancement of the business."

Among the exchange men who attended the convention were: St. Louis—William A. ST. LOUIS MAYOR TO AID IN FIGHT ON CENSORSHIP

Harris P. Wolfberg Joins Big Coal Firm Leaves Paramount to Accept Vice-Presidency of Lake and Export Concern

One of the biggest honors that has come to a man in the motion picture industry is seen in the announcement that Harris P. Wolfberg has resigned as district manager of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to accept the vice-presidency and general sales management of the Lake and Export Coal Company, one of the largest coal mining and exporting companies in the world.

It is an interesting commentary on the growth of the film world, when the so-called "legitimate business" comes to this industry for its leaders.

Advancement is Rapid

Wolfberg's place in the film world is unique. Still a young man, he was quickly advanced by Famous Players-Lasky to a place of utmost importance. His resignation comes as a surprise, but the most important thing it was freely reported that he was to have been appointed general sales manager of Paramount to succeed S. R. Kent, recently made general manager.

Wolfberg's leaving the film industry is another surprise as he has devoted a large part of his life to the business. He was one of the best known men of his age in the industry.

His exhibitor friends—and they are legion—will be interested to know that one of Wolfberg's plans with the coal concern is to institute a special department to help motion picture theatres solve their heating fuel problems. Announcement of this phase of his work will be made shortly.

Has Theatre Proposition

The Lake and Export Coal Company has offices in all the leading cities of the country and in England, France, Germany, Sweden and South American countries. Wolfberg will divide his time between the Chicago and New York offices and at Huntington, W. Va., the home office. Wolfberg, it is understood, also enters the company as an important stockholder.

Wolfberg was proprietor of several film exchanges before the war. After leaving the cavalry service he became a Famous Players salesman. He quickly rose to the management of the Cincinnati exchange. In a short time he attracted the attention of the New York officials by his success and was made special representative for the districts of Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Detroit and Indianapolis. Then his offices flourished so well that he was again promoted to the district management of the Chicago-Minneapolis-Indianapolis territory—the most important in the Paramount organization.

Home office officials express regrets at his departure from the Paramount fold and from the film field in general.

Buy Indiana Rights To "The County Fair"

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, Jan. 25.—H. A. Wagner of Indianapolis and N. C. Yutz of Lebanon, Ind., have purchased the exhibition rights to "The County Fair" for Indiana, and will distribute it through a new exchange they will open in Indianapolis under the name of Strand Film Attractions.

Four Reform Measures Are Before Nebraska Assembly

Passage of One Bill Would Make It Practically an Impossibility for Exhibitors of State to Continue to Operate

LINCOLN, NEB., Jan. 25.—Four rigid measures, any one of which would be a burden to the industry, have been introduced in the Nebraska legislature. One of the measures would make it almost impossible for the theatremen to continue operation of their houses.

Two measures, similar in many respects, would create censorship. They provide for a board of three members, each to receive a salary of $3,000 a year. This board would have the power to appoint whatever help it deemed necessary to function. Under the law a fee of $2 would be charged for each reel censored. Duplicate reels would have to be examined with the same fee being charged.

Ask Federal Jurisdiction of Censorship

Provision is made that the board may order re-examination at any time. Special permits would be granted gratis for educational, charitable and religious films. All advertising matter including newspaper displays would have to be passed by the board.

Another measure is in the form of a memorial to Congress and requests federal jurisdiction in the matter of censorship. It amounts to a joint resolution of both houses.

Is Harmful to Industry

The bill which likely would be most harmful to the industry should the reformers succeed in passing it would make it unlawful to manufacture or display any film "which depicts or portrays the commission of, or attempt or preparation to commit, any of the following crimes against the laws of said state to-wit: Murder in any degree, rape of any kind, shooting and stabbing with intent to kill or to do bodily injury, assault with intent to do great bodily injury, robbery of any kind, blackmail, arson, larceny of any kind, burglary, indecent exposure of the person, living in a state of fornication, sexual intercourse of any kind, gambling and procuring illicit intercourse?"

Violation of the law would be a misdemeanor with a penalty of from $50 to $200 or thirty days imprisonment in the county jail.

Every one of the 440 theatres Nebraska is having petitions signed by patrons. The Motion Picture Theatres Owners of the state expect to present these petitions to the legislature with 500,000 signatures.

The welfare board of Omaha is aiding the theatre owners in their fight against the measures.

Comedian Is to Finish Contract With First National and Then He Will Become Active With the “Big Four” (Special to Exhibitors Herald) LOS ANGELES, Jan. 25.—Quietly and business-like, Charlie Chaplin has resumed his place in the production field by taking exclusive control of his studios at DeLongpre and LaBrea avenues, Hollywood. A full working organization, including many of the persons who have been identified for several years with the great comedian, are active preparing for the immediate resumption of production. All but a few of the executive positions in the Chaplin organization have been filled and the players who will support the star in his screen efforts during the coming year are being assembled. Chaplin expects to be active before the camera within a week. He has prepared his story, which is an original one of his own conception. The title will not be made public until the production is well under way. The picture will be of the light comedy sort and of the two-reel length for distribution by Associated First National. Within the next five months Chaplin will aim to produce the remaining two-reel subjects required under his contract with Associated First National. He has previously turned over the plays, “A Dog’s Life,” “Shoulder Arms,” “Sunnyside” and “A Day’s Pleasure” and the five-reel special, “The Kid.” After completion of his First National contract, Chaplin will become an active member of the “Big Four”—Mary Pickford, D. W. Griffith, Charlie Chaplin and Douglas Fairbanks—comprising the United Artists corporation, of which Hiram Abrams is president.

When he takes up his work with the United Artists organization, Chaplin will devote his efforts to feature productions of the five-reel length, in keeping with the standard he has established in “The Kid.” Edna Purviance, long identified with Chaplin, will continue as head of the star’s supporting company. The business end of the Chaplin organization will continue under the supervision of Alf Purviance, who has served as studio manager for more than two years. Carlyle R. Robinson returns to the company as director of publicity, and Charks Levin and Joseph VanMeter will be in the laboratory and purchasing departments, respectively. Although the studio had been leased to the Carter DeHaven Company, an agreement has been reached whereby Chaplin is given exclusive use of the plant, due to the completion by DeHaven of his five-reel production, “The Girl in the Taxi,” and his requirements for merely cutting and assembling. In the meantime it is understood DeHaven will build his own studio.

Three to Produce Carlyle R. Robinson, director of publicity for Charles Chaplin, issues the following statement concerning the comedian’s contract with First National: “Mr. Chaplin has but three more productions to deliver to Associated First National to terminate his contract with that organization. To date he has delivered ‘A Dog’s Life,’ ‘Shoulder Arms,’ ‘Sunnyside,’ ‘A Day’s Pleasure’ and ‘The Kid.’ While the latter is listed as a special and measures more than five reels in footage, it is, however, the fifth production of the stipulated eight for which Associated First National contracted with Mr. Chaplin. The balance of Mr. Chaplin’s contract now calls for three two-reel subjects. Upon the delivery of these three productions by Mr. Chaplin to Associated First National the contract between the two will have been fulfilled.”

S. R. Kent Announces Shifts in Distribution Department of Famous S. R. Kent, general manager, department of distribution, has announced the following appointments in the Famous Players-Lasky sales organization: J. P. Corbett, formerly Dallas branch manager, now district manager in charge of the Dallas and Oklahoma City exchanges of Southern Enterprises, Inc. Leslie Wilkes, formerly branch manager at Oklahoma City, succeeds Corbett at Dallas. Thomas H. Bailey is appointed branch manager at Arkansas. C. S. Swift, who has been active in branch management in the West, is appointed branch manager at Phoenix.

Christie and Hammons Confer on Production Charles Christie, general manager of Christie Film Company, has been in New York in conference with President E. W. Hammons of Educational Film Exchange, Inc., concerning details of the one and two-reel comedies the latter is issuing. Since making the present distribution arrangements the two organizations have worked in close harmony with a result that has proven pleasing to both sides. En route east Mr. Christie stopped in Dallas, New Orleans and Atlanta and expressed himself delighted with the way his product is being booked through the Educational exchanges in those cities.

‘Man, Woman, Marriage’ Plays to Capacity House (Special to Exhibitors Herald) PATERNSON, N. J., Jan. 24.—In the face of no unusual exploitation and zero weather, Allen Holubar’s “Man, Woman, Marriage” in which Doug Fairbanks is starred, drew capacity crowds at its opening at the Regent theatre yesterday. This is the first public showing of the Famous Players-Lasky production. Many notable announcements, including Holubar and Miss Phillips, were present.

Swaim Buys Theatre At Bluffton, Indiana (Special to Exhibitors Herald) BLUFFTON, IND., Jan. 25.—John E. Swaim of North Manchester has purchased the Mystic theatre in South Main street. The equipment will be moved to North Manchester, where Swaim operates two theatres. The Mystic was the oldest of Bluffton’s picture houses.

Buys the Riviera, Peru PERU, ILL.—The Riviera theatre building has been purchased by Sam Schloesser, proprietor of the Royal, from Mr. and Mrs. Forest Fletcher and Mrs. Henry Werner.

Covel Retakes Management EAST MOLINE, ILL.—George Covel again has assumed management of the Majestic theatre, succeeding Harold Ryan, resigned.
Reform Lobby Drives for Blue Laws in N. Y. State

Leaders in Legislature Opposed to Measures to Clamp Lid Tightly on Sunday Pleasures—Ferguson Leading Campaign

(From Staff Correspondent)

ALBANY, N. Y., Jan. 25.—A blue law lobby, headed by the Rev. John Ferguson, secretary of the Lord’s Day Alliance, has made its appearance at Albany, and is starting a campaign for a limited number of blue laws.

It is understood that the Alliance’s program looks to curtail the number of Sunday toilers by closing up grocery stores, soda fountains and other businesses, and the prohibition of professional baseball and motion picture exhibitions on Sunday.

Reformers Will Meet Opposition in Legislature

It is believed that the reformers will make little progress in the legislature. Leaders in the assembly have been open in their expressions of opposition to such legislation. Measures of this nature would have to go to the codes committee for consideration. It is pointed out that the majority of members are opposed to such legislation.

Leaders in both houses look upon blue law measures as ridiculous. Charles D. Donahue, minority leader in the assembly, declares that his followers will vote against any measure to prohibit Sunday amusements.

No Measures Introduced

Other leaders including Senator Clayton R. Lusk, majority leader and president pro temp in the senate; Simon L. Adler, majority leader in the assembly, and H. Edmund Machol, speaker in the house, declare that they have heard of no bills for strict Sunday observance.

Sydney Cohen Makes No Comment on Situation

Theatrical Romance

The motion picture theatre is unique among business institutions in that romance figures prominently in its successful operation and exerts visibly beneficial influence upon gross receipts and net profits. The cold statement lacks conviction, but a definite understanding of the existing condition is commercially valuable to the exhibitor.

Theatre romance is composed of stern stuff than that encountered in the closing sequences of the majority of photoplays. The thrill that follows exhibition of a thoroughly satisfying production, the sensation experienced as outgoing patrons express pleasure and gratitude, constitutes the chief element of theatre romance.

The exhibitor who does not respond to that thrill is seldom mentioned as a "leading theatre man," or otherwise. Appreciation of the romantic phase of the theatre business is in great measure responsible for the genuine innovations achieved in exploitation.

Dwight Baker, manager of the Circle theatre, Ottumwa, la., demonstrated a proper response to the appeal of the theatre when he wrote in regard to "The Soul of Youth" in the "What the Picture Did For Me" department of this publication, "Won't make you a lot of money, but run it. It will do you good." The comment undoubtedly was inspired by the remarks of patrons who had seen the picture at the Circle and liked it.

H. W. Jeffries, manager of the Majestic theatre, Huntington, Ark., in reporting upon a Katherine MacDonald production, indicated similar understanding. "Had them all say, 'Gee, boy, give us some more Katherine.' Book them and watch them all smile," is a portion of Mr. Jeffries' report. It is obvious that his patrons' smiles were not without direct effect upon his valuation of the pictures as Majestic theatre attractions.

The course which Mr. Baker and Mr. Jeffries will follow in advertising future attractions of the classes found well liked by their patrons will be one of extensive advertising and extra exploitation. The praise recorded for the productions played will result in exertion of every possible effort to bring back to the theatre all of those who expressed satisfaction and as many more as can be influenced. The result recorded at the box office will be that which always follows intelligently directed advertising.

Consider for exposition purposes an exhibitor who has operated a theatre for only a brief period. He has advertised normally and without preference the various attractions shown, unaware of the special tastes of his patrons. Upon an otherwise ordinary occasion an attraction is played which results in a number of voluntary expressions of enthusiasm by patrons who seek him out to tell him their opinions. He cannot fail to experience a certain thrill when he receives the praise offered.

His first step is to make certain that he will in future exhibit more pictures of the desired type. Necessary arrangements for such engagements completed, he directs his attention to the business of determining further the requirements of his clientele.

The showing date of the first such attraction approaches. He advertises it as he has advertised no other attraction. He finds such advertising pays, both in box office returns and patron satisfaction.

At that moment he becomes an exploitation exhibitor. His success dates from that engagement.

The experience of that hypothetical showman is duplicated daily in theatres throughout the United States. Exhibitors who listen to the expressed wishes of their patrons constantly develop their knowledge of the latter's requirements and construct upon this foundation exploitation campaigns that result in constantly increasing volume of business.

The whole process is simply the result of observation, but it is important to note that such observation is not the detached, mechanical observation common to other lines of business and carried on chiefly under green shaded lights and over ledger pages. Informative as may be the columns of well kept accounts, intimate personal contact with buyers is obviously preferable. It is in maintaining that personal contact that the theatreman encounters the romantic phase of his business, a phase of utmost importance.
Showmanship Suggestions in the Stills

A STILL from "Black Beauty," the Vitagraph production, that is easily mistaken at first glance for a photograph showing the presentation given the picture by an enterprising exhibitor. The costuming involved in such a prologue works no hardship upon the man who sees fit to produce it. A minuet is the obvious suggestion, and professionals or amateurs may be employed in its rendition with every promise of success. Comparatively few properties are required, and these are obtainable at any furniture store. The stock parlor or colonial mansion interior set may be used.

A BIT of humor from "Number Please," Harold Lloyd's current Pathé comedy, which is easily adaptable for street exploitation. Lloyd is readily imitated, and any pretty girl can pose as his companion. The goat and cart can be borrowed from a youngster with the double effect of satisfying the immediate purpose and circulating valuable comment throughout the younger generation. A newspaper advertisement for this equipment is obviously worth more than the space charges. With such an equipment upon the street much good will be accomplished.

THE KID," Charles Chaplin's feature length production published by First National as one of the "Big Five" series, has broken the box office record of the Randolph theatre, Chicago, on its world premiere. The news that Chaplin is again to be seen upon the screen is worth front page position in any newspaper in the country. But no picture was ever so strong in drawing power that it could not be made stronger by exploitation. The above still from "The Kid," a characteristic scene, gives a direct cue for the exhibitor who is so situated that street exploitation serves the proper purpose for his box office.

"THE Marriage of William Ashe," a forthcoming Metro publication, contains the above scene. In it may be seen an opportunity to utilize the girl character in both exploitation and presentation, an arrangement exceptionally desirable but not always practical. Either amateur or professional talent may be employed for the work. The vaudeville booking agencies are generally in a position to supply talent of this nature on very short notice, acts of the type being in slight demand at this time.
EVERY seat in the Astor theatre, New York, was sold before the opening of the special Sunday engagement of "Outside the Law" on January 16. Another photograph reproduced upon this page shows the appearance of the front at an early hour in the morning, an appearance doubtless in some degree responsible for the crowd photographed, above, somewhat later.

THE Longacre theatre, New York, as decorated by Universal for the four-theatre special engagement of "Outside the Law," an event of great interest to exhibitors who will play the picture.

"Outside the Law" Reaches Broadway

An innovational premiere was given Universal's "Outside the Law" on Sunday, Jan. 16, when four legitimate New York theatres gave special matinee and evening performances, projectors, screens and fronts being installed the previous night after the close of the stage plays in engagement, which are not presented on Sunday.

The prison wall lobby effect will doubtless be utilized throughout the country in behalf of the attraction. Frequent applause and capacity attendance are reported as characterizing the Sunday showings and subsequent screenings at the Broadway theatre, where a week's engagement followed.

EARLY morning view of the Astor theatre showing graphically the effect obtained by use of prison wall masking, a type of lobby decoration which will doubtless be used nationally in behalf of the picture.

Oil paintings of exceptional pictorial interest add to the strength of the prison wall effect, as illustrated in the display made up for the George M. Cohan theatre.

"Outside the Law" advertising matter was superimposed upon that bearing upon the legitimate attraction in engagement at the Lyric theatre.
Sedan Chair Procession Is Adaptable “Passion” Stunt

Street exploitation in which novelty and essential simplicity combined to produce beneficial effect upon box office figures was employed by the Academy of Music, New York, in behalf of "Passion," the First National attraction, during a recent engagement. Accompanying photographs visualize the enterprise exceptionally well.

A sedan chair of the type in use at the period in French history during which the action of the play transpires was carried about the streets by young men in modern attire. Within the vehicle a woman dressed to represent "Mme. DuBarry" sat with properly regal poise. A banner upon the side of the chair imparted to observers the necessary information regarding the engagement.

If there is a weak point in the reported event it lies in the failure to costume the carriers in keeping with the period, but the remainder of the equipage is sufficiently novel to overcome this fault. Upon any street in any city the procession undoubtedly would attract wide attention.

Exhibitors everywhere who can procure the single difficult item in the equipment, the sedan chair, may profit by use of the stunt. And there should be no difficulty attendant upon the procuring of the carriage where ingenuity and enthusiasm prevails.

A carpenter and a scenic artist can produce a satisfactory substitute for the genuine with the accompanying illustrations as guidance.

The costume of the lady in the carriage can be obtained at any costumers, or successfully approximated by a resourceful seamstress.

“Talking Sign” Is Syracuse Method of Stressing Premiere

A "talking sign," so designated because mechanically constructed in such manner that the wording could be changed at intervals to deliver connected sentences, was rented at considerable expense by the Strand theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., for the purpose of advertising "Kismet," the Robertson-Cole production, by reference to the New York premiere of the picture, an engagement which established a record at the Strand theatre of that city, controlled by the organization that owns the Syracuse Strand.

A photograph reproduced herewith shows the sign employed for the purpose, but of necessity does not show the full effect of its mechanical operation.

The wording used in the successive flashes stressed the fact that the picture had been used by the New York playhouse with great success. The New York Strand is regarded by citizens of Syracuse as a model playhouse, and corresponding importance attached to the announcement for that reason.

The renting of the sign indicates a proper spirit of enterprise on the part of the theatre management. It is the sort of spirit that will doubtless result in time, in the equipping of this and other theatres with signs of the type indicated.

The increased liberty given the advertising man by use of such a sign is worth considerably more than the original cost of the equipment and its upkeep.
Setting and Ballet Seen in "The Devil"
Featured in Strand Theatre Presentation

One of the most thoroughly convincing prologues ever produced was conceived and executed by Joseph Plunkett, managing director of the Strand theatre, New York, for the presentation of "The Devil," the Associated Exhibitors production starring George Arliss, a complete set from the studio and the ballet seen in the film production being brought to the theatre for the occasion.

Mr. Plunkett's statement to the effect that "Mr. Arliss has broken all records for the Strand theatre on an opening day" is ample proof of the box office merit of the enterprise.

THOUGH not every exhibitor can enjoy the benefit of the actual appearance of the original ballet and use of the actual set used in the picture, all may benefit by a description of the prologue as presented.

The opening revealed a baritone soloist, attired similarly to Mr. Arliss as seen in the picture, standing at the top of the marble staircase. As he sang an appropriate selection red lighting effect was introduced, deepening until, at the conclusion of his number, the ballet emerged from a trap door and danced up the stairs to his feet. To the accompaniment of dramatically effective music they danced there until he was seen to mockingly reject their appeal, whereupon they retreated in seeming despair and flames broke out all about them as they struggled, apparently in mid air, to escape torment.

From this dramatic climax lights were employed, red and blue, to produce the transition from prologue to screening, and the picture followed.

In adapting the Strand prologue throughout the country exhibitors operating properly equipped theatres will find approximation of the original effective. Opera offers many musical selections that will serve. A soloist should not be difficult to find, and in nearly every city there are classic dancing classes, if not professional dancers, to which recourse may be had.

The Strand exploitation, aside from the prologue, was confined to 154 advertisements in New York papers during the week preceding the engagement and the engagement proper, to increase the effect of which electric signs in six colors were placed at vantage points about the city.

The obvious additional possibilities of the picture should not be neglected solely because they were not capitalized in the premiere engagement.
Title Proves Effective in Advertising “Blind Wives”

“Blind Wives,” the Fox production, is reported as having established a new box-office record at the Crotona theatre, New York. The intelligent capitalization of the title and the facts of the production brought about that result.

The illustration presented herewith shows the lobby of the Crotona photographed during the engagement, the young women and male attendants in the costumes they wore for the occasion being posed for the photograph.

Illustrations cannot reveal, however, the exploitation carried on for the attraction. This included exceptionally effective use of billboards and a teaser campaign which can be utilized by exhibitors everywhere. The title of the picture was made the basis of this campaign.

“Blind Wives Will Open the Eyes of the World.”

“Blind Wives Is a Warning to Women and a Salvation to Men.”

These lines and many variants were employed in billboard work.

A distinct innovation in exploitation, one which every exploitation man in the country will do well to utilize, was accomplished by H. Dohnsky, manager of Loew’s Avenue B theatre, New York, and William E. Slutsky, employed by the United Artists Corp., in behalf of “The Mark of Zorro” Douglas Fairbanks’ United Artists production. As a result of the stunt employed the picture was held over for seven days, the house policy being three and four day runs.

A stage was erected over the gate to the stage entrance of the theatre. Footlights and borders were installed and a sign gave out the warning, “Watch for ‘Zorro.’ Here every night!”

People did watch. And Mr. Slutsky, doubling for Fairbanks, appeared as announced, performed a stunt or two, then suddenly appeared unexpectedly at other points about the theatre.

For ten days the appearances were continued. The report that Douglas Fairbanks was appearing in person spread through the neighborhood (the theatre is located in the East Side and patronized by poor people) and policemen had to be stationed there to maintain traffic order and manage the crowds.

In recent weeks this department has carried photographs and stories relative to lobby stages employed by exhibitors in various parts of the country. In each instance it was suggested that if the lobby stage was good for cutout use it was better for use with human players.

The Avenue B stunt improves upon the suggestion.
Exploitation Devils
Tempt Theatregoers

"THE Devil's Garden" was spectacularly exploited during its showing at the Audubon theatre, New York, by means of an automobile unit pictorially described in detail herewith.

Novelty and simplicity are the strong points of the stunt, points which characterize the genuinely brilliant accomplishments of showmen in every instance. The attraction power of the sensational appearance of the car is obviously great.

Exhibitors throughout the country exhibiting the First National attraction will profit by the Audubon example. Those adapting the original should note especially the teaser tactics employed in imparting the information set forth in banner form. The front banner suggests forcefully. The side banner heightens curiosity. The back banner delivers the details at the psychological moment.
A dramatic prologue, the most difficult type, was effectively staged at the Lincoln theatre, Union Hill, N. J., for "The Face at Your Window," in advance of the opening.

Advance Prologue Replaces Film Trailer for Fox Film

Exhibitors who have experienced unsatisfactory results with the film trailer or announcement for coming attractions will profit greatly by the following account by Louis Blumenthal, director of exploitation for the Haring and Blumenthal Enterprises, controlling the Lincoln theatre, Union Hill, N. J., of the manner in which he used a stage feature, in reality an advance prologue, to advertise the coming engagement of "The Face at Your Window," the Fox production. Mr. Blumenthal's accomplishment constitutes an original and valuable contribution to the archives of showmanship. It follows:

"My job is putting over pictures at the houses that Haring and Blumenthal operate, and after I saw projected Fox's 'Face at Your Window,' what I really wanted was a good strong trailer; but those available did not suit me, so I decided to make one. And it was then that I got the happy inspiration that worked out so splendidly to our advantage. That idea was what I would term an advance prologue—that is, a melodramatic pantomime working up to a rapid climax.

"This is what the audience saw: Stage cards announced 'Extra,' which might lead them to believe that they were to see a try-out of a new act not on the program. The curtain rises to softly-played music, disclosing a living room. On the stage is a woman in evening clothes, which fixes the time as evening. The woman is reading to a little boy, consulting her watch nervously from time to time and stopping to walk to the window in the rear center as though looking for some one who was overdue.

"A bell rings off stage, and a maid ushers in what can be presumed to be neighbors, as they are hatless. Then follows a few seconds of pantomimic conversation, with much agitation and an effort on the part of the woman to keep what is being said out of the hearing of the little boy.

"Again the woman goes to the window. More excited talk by those on the stage. The boy returns to his picture book. Then enters the man they have been awaiting. He removes his hat and overcoat hastily, kisses the woman and the little boy—whom he holds tightly to him—and then, in an attempt at sociability, motions the woman to the piano. Song 'Sweet Love,' played by woman and sung by two of the visitors.

"At the finish of the song a green spotlight is focused on the window and very slowly there appears a hand, followed by the body of a man with a menacing look on his face. The woman scream. The man of the house rushes to the drawer of the table and gets his revolver, but before he can use it, three shots are heard off stage and the lights go out.

"The stage is now in complete darkness. A sign is lowered electrically lighted transparency which lights up gradually, announcing 'The Face at Your Window' all next week.'"
Diffused lighting applied to lobby advertising at the Empress theatre, Toronto, Canada.

Lobby boards are practically spotlighted at the National theatre, another Toronto house.

Overhead lighting is thrown directly upon the bunched display of the Toronto Photodrome.

His Majesty's theatre, Toronto, brilliantly lights specially prepared spreads.

Lights in The Night

Man's inherited fear of darkness is responsible for a deeply implanted love of light constituting the basis of the incontestable logic which dictates a well illuminated theatre lobby.

Toronto, Canada, theatre-men, notably the managers of the Photodrome, National, Empress and His Majesty's theatres, display in accompanying illustrations proper appreciation of light's attracting qualities.

Many American theatre-men may profit by the examples presented. The Universal productions in engagement when the photographs were made doubtless benefited by the excellent lighting accorded their advertising.
Ascher Theatres
Obtain Publicity
By News Tie-up

Insight and enterprise of a type which should be the possessions of every exhibitor were displayed by the publicity department of the Ascher Brothers theatra organization, Chicago, in obtaining considerable free publicity in Chicago newspapers by use of the photograph reproduced above. The underlying theory of the stunt is one which showmen everywhere should thoroughly understand.

General vaccination was suggested recently in the press, certain public officials giving their opinion of the question and considerable space being devoted to the topic chiefly for that reason. The Ascher management, acting while interest in the matter was at its highest point, sent out the photograph, showing an employee being vaccinated, accompanied by a story to the effect that employees of Ascher theatres would be properly protected against disease, the intimate contact with these is more numbers of people which their occupation necessitates dictating such a course.

Newspapers "played" the story and the photograph. It is possible that the photograph was more responsible for the space allotted than was the story, but that is unimportant.

The insight which prompted the taking of the photograph and the sending out of the story is the thing that exhibitors everywhere are interested in. The opportunity presented in this case is not often presented, but scores of opportunities equally promising are encountered weekly by every showman.

In Lobby Broadside
At Laredo Strand

Admirable use of stock billboard material in producing a convincing broadside lobby effect is illustrated herewith, William Epstein, manager of the Strand theatre, Laredo, Texas, having experienced good results with the simple materials employed. "Yes or No," Norma Talmadge's First National attraction was the picture thus treated with flash advertising tactics. The huge banner across the theatre front is such a flash as is seldom achieved by use of specially prepared matter.

The theory of the stunt, the accomplishing of a big aim by use of materials at hand, is interesting for several reasons, its obvious economy being the chief of these. It should not be forgotten that the end rather than the means is important. Mr. Epstein has demonstrated his understanding of this fact.

Faulty Photograph
Flawless Testimony
Of Stunt's Merit

December 20, 1920, the Monday before Christmas, was not expected to be a business night in any theatre. It is not probable that any photographer in America was previously engaged to photograph the crowds standing in front of any theatre.

In Decatur, Ill., at least, such provision had not been made and a camera man was summoned to A. Siegfried's Bijou theatre for just that purpose after a frenzied call located him at his home.

The reason for this call, and for publication herewith of a reproduction which is but slight improvement upon an admittedly faulty photograph, was the presence of Lila Lee, Paramount star, who broke into her vacation to be present at the showing of "Behold My Wife," the suggestion being made by Oscar A. Doob, exploitation representative at the Paramount Chicago exchange.

The weather was bad, as the difficulty of obtaining a photograph is ample proof.

The date was bad, as every exhibitor knows.

But the star's presence drew a "stand out" crowd.

The stunt must have been good.

“The Last of the Mohicans” Demonstrated Showman’s Picture in Recent Exploitation

Not all pictures that possess the qualities necessary to satisfactory entertainment of audiences are readily advertised in such manner as to bring deserved patronage.

Not all pictures that possess exploitation possibilities in unusual degree are thoroughly satisfying as regards entertainment.

Some pictures possess both desirable qualities. They are genuine “showman’s pictures.” “The Last of the Mohicans,” Maurice Tourneur’s Associated Producers production, falls into the latter classification by reason of reports indicating possession of both entertainment and exploitation qualities of high order.

EXHIBITORIAL report to the “What the Picture Did For Me” department of this publication indicates beyond question the entertainment qualities of the production.

Photographs presented here with complete the testimony.

The lobby display of the Allen theatre, London, Ont., shows intelligent showmanship properly employed in behalf of the picture. A still from the production, of such merit that it was widely reproduced before the publication of the picture, served as model for the construction of the Allen display.

The picture that possesses even in the advance stills such practical exploitation material is rare indeed.

The exterior view of the Shubert-Garrick theatre, Washington, D. C., with children waiting in lines for admission, illustrates another type of exploitation which has been used in many cities with complete success. An arrangement was effected with the Washington public schools whereby the children would be permitted and advised to attend special performances to which they would be admitted at a specially fixed price.

The latter arrangement is familiar to all exhibitors and its good points are well appreciated.

With only these two possibilities, and there are many more present in this case, any picture that possesses the required entertainment merit is eminently qualified as a box office attraction. That Mr. Tourneur’s picturization of James Fenimore Cooper’s famous story is such has been demonstrated to the satisfaction of all.

There should be more such productions. There will be more when directors, authors and producers attain a degree of familiarity with theatre requirements which will make production of other types of photoplays obviously inadvisable.

The January issue of “The Silver Sheet,” the booklet published by the Thomas H. Ince Studios in Los Angeles, contains twenty-six pages of text and illustration giving detailed information regarding “Lying Lips,” soon to be published through Associated Producers, Inc., and providing exhibitors with practical exploitation material of every description, including a complete script for prologue use. Six characters are required for this, and complete stage directions are given.

The eight-page campaign book published by S. & E. Enterprises with “It Might Happen to You,” their comedy feature, is made up in keeping with the nature of the production. Snappy photographs with bathing girls prominently featured are attractively distributed among publicity stories brief and composed of pointed paragraphs.
BUSINESS BUILDERS

With the development and generalization of exploitation has come about a standardization of methods indicative of the practical worth of the more sensational type of advertising and the growth of exhibitor confidence in the new showmanship. Though not every campaign can embrace a distinct innovation, every item of exhibitor exploitation news is of vital interest to the industry.

STAGE setting of typical artistic richness was provided by Sid Grauman, proprietor of Grauman's Million Dollar theatre, Los Angeles, for the appearance as a program elaboration of Hans Hanke, concert pianist, a characteristic Grauman interpolation.

STREET view of Henderson’s Coney Island theatre, Coney Island, New York, showing the lobby frames and electric lights which constitute the regular advertising mediums of the house carrying copy for the showing of “Once To Every Woman,” the Universal-Jewel special.

COL. FRED M. TAYLOR, owner (left) and W. J. Jackson, manager, of the Academy of Music, Newburgh, N. Y., showmen who make the most of opportunities at hand, as indicated in the space given Norma Talmadge’s First National attraction.

ULYSSES S. HILL, manager of Proctor’s Bleecker Hall theatre, Albany, N. Y., advertised “Peaceful Valley,” Charles Ray’s First National production, by sending a wagon about the streets distributing apples represented as coming from “Peaceful Valley.”
STREET view of the Colonial theatre, Commerce, Ga., as decorated for the engagement of "Go And Get It," Marshall Neilan's First National production.

SHIPWRECKED Among Cannibals," the Universal publication, was advertised by standard methods during its run at the Is's theatre, Indianapolis, Ind.

CHILDHOOD Days at Home with Granddaddy" was the title of the unrelated presentation given Paramount's "Silk Hosiery" at Grauman's Million Dollar theatre.

SHOWMAN SUCCESSES

Success in showmanship is dependent upon a thorough understanding of a number of business principles, and the consistent application of these to theatre operation. Greatest of these is the principle of good advertising, the agency directly responsible for the bringing of patrons to the box office. To keep abreast of exploitation advance, and to apply new and successful methods vigorously, is the exhibitor's most important work.
"County Fair" Featured in First Report Of Keith Managers’ Exploitation Contest

Exploitation exhibitors read with considerable interest the recent announcement of the exploitation contest to be conducted by the managers of B. F. Keith houses in the East. It was logical to believe that unusual stunts would be utilized during the contest.

The first report of work done in this connection proves such logic well founded. Accompanying photographs show in considerable detail the exploitation used by Manager McDonald of the Broadway theatre, New York, for Guy Croswell Smith’s Maurice Tourneur production, “The County Fair,” a campaign with many adaptable features.

The outstanding feature of Mr. McDonald’s campaign, perhaps, is the “cart before the horse” stunt shown in an accompanying illustration. The novelty of the idea is obviously sufficient to attract wide attention upon any street, whether it be in metropolis or village.

The theatre front was also given attention, as shown in another photograph, and the crowds drawn to the showing are seen in the third. The three constitute a graphic pictorial description of a campaign which can be used by any exhibitor in the country.

The net result was the breaking of the box office record at the theatre concerned. By just what margin that record was broken is not disclosed in the report, but when it is considered that the exploitation used represented an expenditure of $326 it is apparent that patronage in unprecedented volume was experienced.

Thus is the Keith managers’ contest started. The next report will doubtless be as remarkable as the present one, the manager staging it having the advantage of a precedent to work upon. As time passes and subsequent attempts are made by other Keith managers it is highly probable that exploitation of a type infrequently encountered in the theatre news of the day will be instituted.

The direct benefit of the contest is apparent. Exhibitors everywhere will benefit by reason of the new ideas brought forth. And the Keith managers will benefit individually and collectively as all who put forth unusual effort must inevitably benefit.

The contest is the result of excellent showmanship management. It should be duplicated by chain theatre managements everywhere.

When the Academy of Music, Newburgh, N. Y., utilized the First National attraction, “A Daughter of Two Worlds,” to fill an open vaudeville date characteristic exploitation methods were used by the management. A clown was sent into the streets leading a gayly bedecked horse, on the blanket of which banners gave the details of the engagement. Book marks were also distributed and the theatre reported highly satisfactory results.
STUNTS

The Randolph street lobby of the Randolph theatre, Chicago, approximately 40 feet square and of proportionate height, has been entirely lined with especially painted drops representing a typical scene in the slums of a big city. Charles Chaplin's First National attraction, "The Kid," now in its second week, is the reason for the unusual display, and both lobbies of the theatre have been blocked with waiting patrons day and night since the opening.

A condition similar to that existing at the Randolph obtained at the Ziegfeld theatre, the only motion picture house on Michigan avenue, on Saturday, January 22, when "Kismet," the Robertson-Cole production, was given its Chicago premiere. Newspaper announcement to the effect that the special presentation would be given at 2:45 and 8:45 p. m. resulted in a line extending from the deeply inset box office to the street and for considerable distance out upon the sidewalk for the initial screening.

Three columns on the front page of an Omaha, Neb., newspaper were obtained by H. B. Watts, manager of the Strand theatre, in co-operation with C. L. Peavey, manager of the Educational exchange, when a special performance was arranged for Margaret D. Cox, an invalid, who had never seen a motion picture. Her comments upon the Educational specials, "The Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes" and "Modern Cretans," and upon "The Charm School," Wallace Reid's Paramount production, were given the prominent position.

Cash prizes have been offered by Fred S. Meyer, managing director of the Palace theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, for the best contributions from patrons giving reasons for preference given merchant advertisements used in the house organ, the dual merit of the enterprise being at once apparent to any exhibitor who has sold program space to merchants.

S. Ronheimer, manager of the Normandy, Ronly and Globe theatres, Brooklyn, N. Y., replies to the telephonic interrogation from patrons, "What are you playing tonight?" with another question, "Didn't you receive our program this week?" The address is then obtained and newcomers to the neighborhood are thus duly recorded on the mailing list.

Revolving Globe Effective "Earthbound" Exploitation

A SEVEN-FOOT globe constructed of metal, revolved by a motor, and with the oceans and continents painted on it, was placed on top of the glass marquise of Loew's Columbia theatre, Washington, D. C., to exploit the showing of Goldwyn's production of Basil King's "Earthbound." Electric lights played upon the revolving globe.

The stunt was originated by Goldwyn's traveling exploitation man from headquarters, W. R. Ferguson. Various milling companies in Washington to whom he went to have the globe constructed told him it could not be done, so he had recourse to a German metal worker named Gischer, who runs a school for skilled mechanics. He pays an instructor $25 a night to run the classes but does not charge a penny from the pupils.

He at last was persuaded to build a revolving globe. The first attempt was not successful and only the persuasive powers of Mr. Ferguson kept him at the task until it was complete. The day after the globe was placed above the marquise Ferguson was summoned before the building inspectors and asked how he dared put up a sign in that exclusive section. He told the inspectors that it was just a reproduction of the globe without a bit of advertising on it and that therefore it was no sign.

The inspectors retired to consider that phase and told him they would inform him of their decision in the matter, but no decision was forthcoming and the huge revolving lighted globe continued to tell the public that "Earthbound" was playing at Loew's Columbia. The business was so big on the week that the engagement was extended for a second week.
Atlanta Mayor Is Advocate Of Sunday Motion Pictures

Key Scores Preachers for Attitude Taken Toward Proposal—Says Entertainment on Sabbath Is Badly Needed in City

(From Staff Correspondent)

ATLANTA, Ga., Jan. 25.—Sunday motion pictures have an advocate in Mayor Key.

Denouncing ministers who “cannot find anything bigger to jump on than the little Sunday afternoon entertainments at the Auditorium,” the mayor declared that the Sabbath afternoon is the most dangerous time for the young people of the city.

Urges Adoption of Sunday Motion Pictures

Mayor Key made these statements in addressing representatives of the Evangelical Ministers Association, the committee on church cooperation and the Christian council. He was urging the adoption of motion pictures at the Sunday entertainment at the Auditorium. His proposition will be taken under consideration by the clergy.

The mayor’s stand is significant in view of the refusal recently to permit a Sunday charity program at the Howard Theatre. Referring to this, the mayor declared that the attempt to open the theatre was for a proper and legitimate purpose. Opposition, he said, was based on a city ordinance which was adopted several years ago to suppress commercialization of Sunday shows.

Scores the Ministers

He stated that the preachers had acted hastily when they recently announced opposition to the Auditorium proposition. He said they were unfair in their attitude. “I am sure,” said the mayor, “that no minister familiar with conditions in Atlanta Sunday afternoons, when there are no places of legitimate amusement open to the youth of the city, would vote against Sunday movies.

Must Overcome Prejudice

“There is a great deal of prejudice to be overcome in advocating this matter. This prejudice is largely due to a lack of understanding of the social and human injustice perpetrated in Atlanta under present conditions.”

The exhibitors are sponsoring the movement.

“Denver Post” in Tie-Up

With “Go and Get It”

The Denver Post tied up with the Rivoli theatre of that city on the recent showing of Marshall Neilan’s newspaper production, “Go and Get It,” with a stunt that gave the film a big send-off in that territory.

Before the picture opened at the Rivoli, special shows free to readers of the Denver Post were held at the theatre during which over 2,000 fans viewed part of the Neilan photoplay. Just enough of the picture was projected to give the fans all the “dope” on the three murderers that form the basis of the plot.

The patrons were given a day in which to write and send in to the newspaper their conclusions of the story and five prizes totaling $125 were awarded by the Post to those who came nearest the real solution of the plot. Of course, everyone who had seen part of it came back and paid to see how near they were right and each of them became a human advertisement for the picture.

New York Notes About Film Folk
By J. B.

New York City, Jan. 25, 1921

EDMUND GRANGER returned from Los Angeles Jan. 29, via Boston all bathed in smiles and with a rotundity of figure which bespeaks good eats and perhaps a few trips to Tia Juana where a big scoop of soda can be had, boasted you have the "mazooma." * * *

MARIE LIVINGSTON, the premiere publicity agent for Chet Withey, has also taken the responsibility of acting as personal representative for Courtney Foote.

JOSEPH BREASTS, who represents the Clayton Picture Company of South Africa, is in New York. Mr. Breasts left for Los Angeles on Monday for a five weeks' visit.

SINDEY J. GARRETT returned from an European jaunt last week. Sid looks a bit thinner than when he left, but when you consider that his ship was ten days out of sight and that she ran into six hurricanes within six days, you can understand why the stewards couldn't coax Sid to stuff himself with sea biscuits and other fattening tid-bits.

It is reported that HAZEL HOME has signed up with a new producing company which is leaving for Canada for the purpose of taking the exterior scenes of a big outdoor picture against the title of which will be announced soon.

The Bronx Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association's ninth annual ball held at Hunts Point Palace on January 24 was one of the best entertainments of its kind ever held. The Bronx boys are to be congratulated on their ability to "carry on" and on the manner in which they put things over. See next issue for full report.

JOE SAMETTI has another state rights picture and from what I have seen of it she's a "beaut." Joe is some picker and a great hustler.

D. W. GRIFFITH has much to thank the Mamaroneck Fire Department for—First for their contribution to "Way Down East" and lately for saving the studio from being destroyed by fire.

E. R. CUSTER, general manager of the recently formed Southern Film Exchange, Charleston, W. Va., is among the out-towners visiting here. He is on a still hunt for state rights features and comedies.

The Salient Films, Inc., is all ready to go to the mat in the Victor Studio and J. CHARLES DAVIS, 2nd, says when the shooting begins the feathers will fly. Muriel Ostrich is to play the lead, so I suppose she will be winged first. Work will start this week.

CARL EDWARDS, leader of the Strand orchestra said of "The Kid" that it was a symphony of artistry. That's a sharp remark, Carl, and won't be flat when the First National boys read it.

A new Bert Lytell-Maxwell Karger Production is now under way. The picture was adapted from a Saturday Evening Post story entitled "The Man Who," and is being made at the Metro New York studio.

VINCENT COLEMAN, he of the melodious voice, the handsome face and the nimble feet, has been engaged to play opposite Constance Binney in her new production, which will be made in the East.

LUcretia Belle, who is at present "ward- robes" for her next production, was one of the first of the screen actresses to volunteer to help the good cause along for Hoover Day on January 26. Miss Belle portrays characters along the type of Zsa Zsa Pitts and her work has brought forth much favorable comment.

GEORGE WALSH, who had his own baseball team last season, the All-Nationals, has been approached this year to head a well known football team. He will decide in a few days. When it comes to athletics, George is certainly all there.

R. H. COCHRANE leaves on Jan. 27 for an extended visit to the Coast, where he will meet Carl Laemmle, who is now visiting in Havana. On his trip Mr. Cochrane will be accompanied by his family.

The Photo Repro Company, formerly located at Broadway and 21st street, moved this week to its new quarters in the Queens Subway Building, Long Island City. According to Alvin Mayer, general manager, Photo Repro will from now on make lantern slides and all kinds of lobby displays.

Heretofore the company specialized in newspaper stills and gelatines.

HAROLD MACGRATH, well known author, has been a visitor in New York for the past ten days.

The announcement by Metro of its forthcoming feature, "The Silver Lining," and by Fox of its distribution of "The Plunger" (starring George Walsh), means that the screen will show in close conjunction two interesting characterizations by Virginia Valli. In "The Silver Lining" Miss Valli was one of the featured players who supported Jewel Carmen, and in "The Plunger" she played opposite Walsh in a less melodramatic but equally convincing role.

ROY NEILL, the eminent director, after completing "Dangerous Business," starring Constance Talmadge and "Something New" with Constance Binney, which met with such success at the Rialto Theatre last week has just completed "The Teaser" with Dorothy Dalton for Famous Players. This is a gripping Alaskan drama, and directed by Mr. Neill.

SOUTH BEND, IND., Jan. 25—Geo. A. Robertson, owner of the Auditorium theatre, recently damaged by fire, announces the playhouse will be opened again March 1. The building includes remodeling, which will result in elimination of the boxes and widening of the main exits and the balcony aisles.

Plan Opening in March

MANTITOWOC, WIS.—Work on the new Capitol theatre is advancing and it is expected that the house will be opened in March.

Goodwin Elevated to Stardom
By William Fox

Up FROM the ranks, where he has won his spurs through sheer hard work and a dominant will to succeed, now comes Harold Goodwin to become a motion picture star at 18. William Fox announces that he has elevated young Goodwin to stellar honors and that he will be seen during the present year in star pictures under Fox direction.

Young Goodwin has attained success after going through the hard school of experience, despite his youth. While he has supported several of the more prominent stars in leading roles, he started, like most others who have climbed to prominence in the picture world, by playing small parts when he was 10 years old.

Directors soon saw the boy had talent, and from his first role at the age of 10 up until the present time he has played with Shirley Mason, Mary Pickford, Mary Miles Minter, Lila Lee, Bebe Daniels, Dorothy Gish, Mary Allen, Vivian Martin and Bessie Love.

He also played rough parts with Tom Mix, Harry Carey and William Hart, as well as roles with Jack Conway, Wallace Reid in early Griffith productions, and several pictures with Thomas Ince. In fact, Goodwin has run the gamut of motion picture roles.

Goodwin was born at Porcio, Ill. He is six feet one inch in height and weighs 140 pounds. It is the intention of Mr. Fox to show him as the sort of a boy mothers like to see. He is a wholesome chap, and his pictures will carry a lesson and do good work, while losing none of the typical Fox entertainment.

In the matter of personality, Harold Goodwin strikes one as a typical American boy—straightforward, absolutely without affectation, modest, and even a bit shy at times. For his first work as an extra, when he was 10 years old, he tells with delight that he received 50 cents.
